LETTERS FROM OVERSEAS

FROM PTE. F. EVANS

France, Feb. 6th, 1917.

Dear Mrs. Wiggins:—

I received the pair of socks containing your note last night. I greatly appreciate your kindness as they are one of the great things we need for we sure have to take great care of our feet. Trench life is bad enough at the best of times. We have had pretty weather for fully a month so you can imagine the cold. It is terrible war, but we boys take it with a good heart.

I hope this note reaches you safely. Thanking you again for the good work you are doing.

PTE. F. EVANS,

A Kiss In a Coach

In the Days Before There Were Railways

By F. A. MITCHEL

I have always had a fancy for looking back into the past for items concerning those from whom I have descended. The doings of these persons who lived and moved and worked and loved and quarreled, just as others of my family are doing today, have always been of interest to me. I have before me a portrait of one of my grandfathers painted when he was the age that I am now, and one would suppose that he and I were twin brothers instead of being two generations apart. He was young in the last century, when the railroad was coming into vogue as a mode of travel and shortly before the use of electricity in telegraphing. Among family documents, of which I have collected a great number, there is one written by this gentleman which I prize more than any of the others. I give it just as he wrote it except for a little editing where he referred to himself, for an autobiographer is always at a disadvantage in this respect. I need to say that the writer at the time of the happenings narrated was twenty-three years old and considered handsome. His narrative reads:

I started to cross the Allegheny mountains on a business trip to Cincinnati, then the principal city in the west, and expected to be gone several weeks, having planned to spend a week in Cincinnati and a week returning. We left at 6 o'clock in the morning from the Antlers' tavern, there being eight insides and four outsides on the coach.

There was some shifting of passengers during the day, and at evening the positions of those inside was as follows—I give them minutely, for they are pertinent to an understanding of my narrative: I sat on the front seat, riding backward. There was one other person on the seat with me, a middle aged lady. She sat on my left. On the middle seat, facing me, but on the other side of the coach, was an elderly gentleman, eminently respectable looking. The other two places on the middle seat were occupied by a young woman, very precise looking, whom he called Amelia, and his daughter, a girl of about eighteen. On the back seat were a man and two women. I do not describe them, for they have no part in what I am going to record.

The first night in a coach is very uncomfortable; it is only when one gets somewhat accustomed to the jolting and has met with sufficient loss of sleep to render him hungry for slumber that he can lose himself sitting straight up and continually bumped. But I on this first night ascending the mountains, having been up late several evenings preceding my departure, slept fairly well. The horses were obliged to proceed at a walk.

In the middle of the night I was awakened by a pair of arms thrown around me and a pair of lips pressed against mine. My faculties not taking in the situation at once, it did not immediately occur to me to detain whoever kissed me, and by the time I proceeded to do so it was too late. The arms about me were unlocked and the lips removed from mine.

Not only was there no light in the coach, but the night was very dark. I could not see my hand before my eyes. All I knew of the episode was by the sense of touch. There was no doubt in my mind that I had been kissed by a woman, but the principal evidence of this was that the lips that were pressed upon mine were soft and there was no beard. Had the matter occurred when my faculties were normally alive doubtless I should have lain awake the rest of the night deliberating as to who had favored me. As it was, my deliberations, assisted by the monotonous breathing, not to mention snoring, of the passengers put me to sleep.

In the morning we stopped at a tavern, and after cold water thrown over my face and a good breakfast of fried chicken, various kinds of game and buckwheat cakes, for which I expended a Spanish silver half dollar, on returning to the coach my adventure of the night came back to me, exciting not only curiosity, but other emotions. I had scarcely seated myself when I made a careful survey of those persons some one of whom might have given me the kiss.

There were three women sitting sufficiently near me to have committed the act. There was the middle aged lady beside me, whose name I do not know; there were Amelia and the young girl, her niece, whom they called Agnes. I did not doubt that one of the three was the perpetrator. I scrutinized the face of each, but could see no trace of guilt. The lady beside me and Amelia met my gaze without a quiver, but Agnes, who sat opposite me, lowered her eyes.

I made up my mind that Agnes was the culprit, partly from this bit of evidence and partly because I preferred to believe that it was her red lips that had been pressed upon mine. We had all become well acquainted, and the woman beside me was very cordial in her manner toward me, while Amelia was rather reserved. As to Agnes, she acted as any young girl would have acted toward a young man under similar circumstances. She certainly appeared to be the personification of innocence. But still waters run deep, and I am free to admit that I was influenced by this adage.

The journey was especially interesting to me, because I had a problem to solve. I reckoned that the guilty one would betray herself before we arrived at the Queen City of the West. But the only one of the three who could have kissed me who showed a special predisposition for me was Agnes, and she gave no sign of guilt. At all events, it seemed to me that I had made a very favorable impression upon her.

On arrival at Pittsburgh those of us who were going further west took a steamboat to descend the Ohio river. Among those who were aboard were the elderly gentleman, whose name by this time I had learned to be Shotwell; his sister and his daughter. In the coach, crowded together as we were, there was no opportunity for a tete-a-tete between me and Agnes, but on the steamboat was plenty. We sat together on the guards outside the ladies' cabin, and at times on deck. The Ohio was called by the early French settlers La Belle Riviere, and justly so. At the time of this journey, the autumn, her waters were clear, and the foliage on the multitude of hills on her banks was of many colors. No affair of the heart could have taken place under more propitious circumstances.

One evening, when the air was out of the south, Agnes and I went on to the hurricane deck, which is the highest deck of all. No one was there but ourselves. We stood looking out on a moonlit scene. The sounds were the throbbing of the engine below and the striking of the paddle wheels at the sides of the boat upon the water.

Now, I had not thus far regarded my affair with Agnes Shotwell as any more serious than those I had had with other girls. I had by this time made up my mind that she had given me a kiss in the dark and that her innocence was assumed. Acting upon this theory, I suddenly clasped her in my arms and rained kisses upon her cheeks and lips.

A man may sometimes kiss a girl without having declared himself and not appear disrespectful. I, having assumed that Agnes had overstepped the boundary of feminine modesty, gave her too many kisses.

As soon as she could release herself she turned from me without a word, went to the steps leading below and disappeared. There was that in her manner to tell me it would be useless to follow her; that she was incensed beyond measure and if I obtained forgiveness I must wait and strive for it. Had I known her better I would not have feared that she would make it unpleasant for me with the others of her party, but my limited knowledge of her made me fear that she would.

I confess I was very much disgruntled. To have made such a mistake troubled me very much, for I was at an age when a man is especially sensitive to the good opinion or condemnation of women. I brooded over the matter during the day and lay awake thinking of it at night.

I did not see her again till the afternoon of the next day, when I approached her while she was with her father and aunt. She received me neither kindly nor unkindly, there being nothing in her manner to indicate to the others that she was offended with me. But when I again met her alone she passed me without recognition.

I was now badly cut up. I knew from her manner that she was not acting a part, and it was plain to me that the kiss given me in the coach had not been imparted by her. I was in a dilemma. I must either acknowledge myself a culprit or excuse myself by telling her of the kiss in the coach, a story so improbable that it was not likely to be believed.

Very soon after my offense we arrived at the landing at Cincinnati. That Mr. Shotwell did not know of anything amiss between his daughter and me was made plain by his giving me an invitation to call at his house. I looked at Agnes to note if she acquiesced, but saw no sign that I would or would not be welcome. We parted on leaving the boat, the Shotwell party driving to their home in the city, I to my hotel.

After much brooding over the matter I concluded to make the call. I had in me the consciousness of not being quite so bad as I appeared and I must bide my time for an opportunity to explain. Upon entering the Shotwell residence I received the surprise of my life. Agnes came into the drawing room alone and with a very different look on her face from any I had seen there since my transgression. It was very cordial.

I was of course relieved, but puzzled. I did not believe for a moment that Agnes had pretended to be offended with me, and yet as a sensitive girl how could she suddenly return to her former treatment of me without even an apology? I started to make one, but she checked me and went on talking about something else.

By this time I was madly in love, and love overcame curiosity. Be she good, bad or indifferent, Agnes possessed me. Instead of staying a week in Cincinnati, I remained there a month. When I left I was engaged to Agnes. After our engagement I asked her why she had forgiven me without my having asked to be forgiven. She only said, "Let that pass." But a moment later she added, "Forgive me for my part in that matter, will you?"

I forgave her and felt very complacent at my magnanimity. I left her to be gone till the following spring, then returned for our wedding.

Nov. 15, 1835.—My wife's Aunt Amelia died a week ago. This morning Agnes came to me and told me that the change toward me without explanation or apology for my transgression was due to her aunt's having confessed to her that she had kissed me in the coach.

Possibly not, but it helps Germany not to subjugate the world, and makes American Potsdamers sore. That is worth while.

The trouble with the man you have to know to like is that he steadfastly freezes any of your attempts to get acquainted.

GRANDMOTHER'S SHAWL.

How Paisleys Once More Flourish In Today's Fashion.

Once more the little hamlet of Paisley, in Renfrew, Scotland, is on the map, and again the name of Paisley is on the tip of the tongue, as it has not been for some fifty odd years—not since the days when every fashionable woman possessed a Paisley shawl or two in lieu of other cloak or wrap.

All over the land women are getting out old shawls from old dust covered trunks and finding in them a veritable treasure for this winter's wardrobe. There is really a big demand for old Paisleys in the fashionable dressmaker's and milliner's shop, and some women have sold their old shawls instead of having them used for their own costumes. In the meantime strips of Paisley are the most fashionable of the season's trimming, and perhaps because Paisley shawls are not any too plentiful and because imitations are not very satisfactory the vogue will remain good for months to come.

Cashmere trimming is also fashionable, though one would really hesitate at cutting up a genuine antique cashmere even to be in the current of fashion. Always valuable, cashmere shawls are now veritable treasures. One woman owns one for which her grandfather paid $1,000 when he bought it sixty years ago for her grandmother. And another woman possesses a little shoulder shawl, just a scarf a couple of feet wide and four or five long, with ends of the wonderful cashmere work, and the rest of plain black, which cost $100 half a century ago.

These lovely old shawls are really too valuable to cut up for finery that will serve for only a year or two. But they can be very effectively used if they are in good condition for covering a divan or low couch.

HER NEW BLOUSE.

A Model as Charming as It Is Simply Cut.

Georgette crape in straw color, cut surplice fashion and simply trimmed with a sailor color of navy satin and squares of navy embroidery gives this blouse designed to go with a suit of navy serge. Two toned blouses occupy much space in smart shops.

Wine sauce poured over slices of fruit cake makes an excellent dessert. The following recipe is quite easy to follow: Two cupfuls of powdered sugar, one-half cupful of wine and one cupful of butter. Cream the butter. Gradually add the sugar and when very light add the wine, which has been made hot, a little at a time. Place the dish in a pan of hot water and stir for two minutes. The sauce should be smooth and foamy and may be served hot or cold.

Patience is too valuable an asset to waste any of it on a man with a swelled head.

CITY WILL INVEST $25,000 IN WAR LOAN

That Amount Was Named by the Executive Committee—Many Important Matters Discussed at Civic Committee Meeting

A number of matters appertaining to the city's welfare were last evening brought up and considered at a regular meeting of the Civic Committee. A lengthy report was presented from Mr. H. S. Lee, hydraulic engineer, in reference to contemplated improvements in the pumping plant at the city pump house. A new pumping plant will be installed this year. The city will invest $25,000 in the Government war loan. Mayor Ketcheson and all the Aldermen were in attendance.

BILLPOSTING AND ADVERTISING ...

Ald. Marshall, chairman, stated that Mr. Johns, who has had the charge of Victoria Park the past few years asked to be appointed this year.

The chairman was authorized to advertise for applicants for the position.

PUBLIC WORKS.

Ald. Whalen, chairman, presided.

Mr. Loftman addressed the Council in reference to the deal for a certain portion of land belonging to him and which the city desired for the opening up of Burnham street. He stated that it was at first thought that only 9 feet was required to put the street in a proper line but at least 2 feet more at one end is to be added. He did not expect to have more than 9 feet taken off his property. This was the number feet Mr. Henderson, the city's foreman, said would be required. There is a frontage of 60 feet on his property. He did not want a curve on the property.

Ald. Whalen—There was no advantage to curve the street on any person's property. Mr. Henderson measured it today.

Mayor Ketcheson—I understood from Mr. Henderson that 9 feet was required at one end and 11 feet at the other end.

Mr. Loftman—I am willing to allow the city 10 feet at each end. This also to include Mrs. Taylor's property.

A resolution passed that the purchase be made from Mr. Loftman and Mrs. Taylor for $300.

The following accounts were passed:

Pay Sheet....	$160 57
Intelligencer Printing Co....	6 50

Ald. Parks moved that an account of $15 presented by Mr. Walter Patterson for work performed by him by order of Mr. Evans, be sent to Mr. Evans for payment.

Ald. Woodley—The work was done, while Mr. Evans was in Ottawa, at legod to be on city business.

Ex-Mayor Panter, who was present, stated that Mayor Hall and Mr. Evans and he (the speaker) were in Ottawa about that; the time mentioned.

The matter was referred to the chairman of investigate.

Referred to City Assessor and City Clerk to investigate same and report.

A letter was read from Mr. W. H. Biggar, K. C., the G.T.R. solicitor, re the contemplated building of a new bridge over the G. T. R. tracks, North Front street.—Filed.

Ald. Robinson stated he had a letter handed him in reference to a sidewalk being constructed on south Church St.

SOLICITING ADVERTISING

A young man representing the Heaton Advertising Agency, addressed the members soliciting advertising in booklets which were to be issued in large numbers and would be properly distributed. The Provincial and Dominion Government were represented in the scheme. Each Province would secure a large number of the booklets. Some 40,000 would be issued. The price per page advertisement would be $30.

Ald. Robinson moved that no action be taken in the matter. We reaped no benefit from such sources. If you want to throw any money away, I must help it.

Ald. St. Charles—It is not throwing money away.

Mayor Ketcheson—You cannot tell what good will be accomplished by advertising the city.

The motion of Ald. Robinson prevailed.

STREET REPAIRING

Ex-Mayor Panter addressed the Council. He stated that 1911 and 1912 the G. T. R. Round House and Shops Bridges had to be built. He had built bonus in Bingham Agent, and that street was in a terrible condition. He asked the Council to do something in the street.

Ald. Whalen—We have that matter under consideration. We will try and grade up the street and extend the street down to Queen street.

Ex-Mayor Panter—If I build a house on Bixley street would the city build a sidewalk and grade the street in front. There are other houses on the street further north.

Ald. Woodley—Ex-Mayor Panter is entitled to the walk.

Ald. Whalen—Labor may handicap the city, but we intended to build walks this year. Put in a petition and we will attend to the matter.

Ald. Marshall—Cannot the city get the contract for coal that was assigned to the city and conducted by the railways. Other concerns have been able to get the same price from the railways as at present it costs to buy coal.

Ald. Whalen—I do not think that the railways will pay the price that coal is today.

NEW PUMPS

Ald. Deacon read a lengthy report from Mr. H. S. Lee, Hydraulic Engineer of Montreal, who came to the city and looked over the plant. The noted engineer practically coincided with the Ontario Electric Commission Engineer's report in reference to contemplated changes and installing of new pumps. Under present conditions, the city is pumping only one-half more water than is required for a population of the city. It would take 5 months to install the new plant.

In reference to an enquiry from Ald Robinson, Ald. Deacon said the Water Works Department would take care of the telephone necessary to be issued for the expense incurred.

The Hydro Electric Commission Engineer does his work for the city free of any charge to the city.

Ald. Parks—The only objection I have is that certain manufacturers of pumps seem to have a preference of the Hydro Electric Commission.

Ald. Deacon—The Council decides on the kind of pumps we are to install. Different tenders will, no doubt, come in. We have to endorse everything, following recommendation was unanimously adopted.

That the Hydro Electric Hydro Power Commission of Ontario be authorized to draw plans and specifications for new pumps for the Water Works Department as per their report, dated February 10th, 1917.

After some futher discussion the actions have had the approval of this Council that we authorize the Hydro Commission to call for tenders for same. That they be authorized to open, said tenders, tabulate them and advise us regarding what tenders th accept.

FIRE ALARM.

Ald. Parks stated that whilst in Toronto last year he obtained some information in reference to the placing the members of the fire alarm system in this city. He would give this information when the matter is discussed.

Ald. St. Charles.—All the fire brigade could be placed in No. 2 Fire Hall. Something will have to be done about the stairs at No. 2 Hall. There was an offer today for No. 2 Fire Station. The flooring at No. 1 Hall will have to be reflored in the rear future. It was decided to have a special meeting of the Fire Committee to consider the matter of procuring a motor truck, etc.

EXECUTIVE

Ald. Woodley, chairman, presided. Fencing & Sheep $5.30

The Hydro Electric Railway Association notified the Council that the dues as a membership of the Association was due.

A motion prevailed that the city continue to be a member of the Association.

From Mr. E. G. Porter, K.C., re his appearance before the Dominion Railway Board on behalf of the city in the matter of the Bay bridge over Railway crossing, and that the Board had authorized the placing of gates, and that the costs of maintaining same is to be borne jointly by the C.P.R. and CN.R.

WAR LOAN

Mayor Ketcheson—The question is should the city invest some of its sinking fund in the Government war loan. We could subscribe $25,000 and the interest would be 5 and 2-5 per cent.

Ald. Platt—Go to it.

Ald. Marshall asked if there were more than one commission to be paid.

A motion was made that the Mayor and City Treasurer be authorized to subscribe $25,000 to the fund through the Bank of Montreal.

Mayor Ketcheson—We will make about 6 per cent. on the first year, and 5 and 2-3 the following year./

The motion prevailed.

SAILORS' FUND.

The British Sailors' Relief Fund Association wrote asking for a grant to the fund.

Mayor Ketcheson—I would favor the giving of $500. In some places a canvass has been held for this fund. To the British sailors we owe much.

Ald. Robinson moved that $300 be granted.—Carried.

Mayor Ketcheson moved in amendment that a grant of $500 be made.

Ald. Deacon—Last year we were appealed to for this fund, but we did not give anything. We should go into the giving to all patriotic purposes systematically.

It was decided to leave the matter, over until the Council meeting on Monday evening.

MASONIC GRAND LODGE

Mayor Ketcheson—The Grand Lodge of Masons will be held in Belleville in July and the Masonic San asked the city to have an advertisement inserted in that journal for 4 months.

Ald. Robinson—What is the circulation of the magazine.

Mayor Ketcheson—It is many thousands.

Ald. Deacon moved that we take a full page of advertising in the Masonic Sun for four months, for $50. The motion prevailed.

OVERHEAD BRIDGE

The following communication in reference to the proposed new Overhead Railway Bridge on North Front St., to be erected over the G. T. R. tracks was read:

Mr. W. H. Biggar, K.C., the G. T. R. solicitor, wrote as follows:

In reply to your answer filed on behalf of the city of Belleville to the above application, the Railway Company is of opinion that the plan proposed, filed on the application, adequately provides for the traffic at that point. As the existing bridge has an approach from the intersection of Ridley street, of the same grade as the one proposed in the reconstruction plan, there is no occasion to change it. To do so would be necessary to raise the level of Ridley street, at the intersection and form a very objection-

NATIONALISTS HEDGING WAR

Bonar Law Said in Commons At-titude Might Force Government to Appeal to the Country

Special To The Intelligencer.

LONDON, March 15—In discussing the Irish question in the Commons today, Bonar Law declared the attitude of the Nationalists might compel an appeal to the Country on the grounds that the Nationalists were unwilling to permit the Government to get on with the war.

Tributes To Late Duchess

Her Popularity in Canada Was Won by Her Sincere and Unaffected Mannerisms

LONDON, March 15—Flags are flying at half-mast for the Duchess of Connaught on all Government buildings. Discussing the Royal Highness' death, the Telegraph refers to misgivings voiced by some Canadian politicians, including Sir Wilfrid Laurier, as to the wisdom of transporting from the old world Monarchy's system in which the Duke and Duchess would act as polar stars, disorganising as it was the constitutional machinery and especially upsetting social life in a new and democratic country.

"The presence of those members of the royal family," continues the Telegraph, "drew Canada appreciably nearer the mother country. Their sincere homeliness, unaffected sweetness of manner, untiring work and transparent concern for Canadian interests won all hearts, when at length, toward the close of last year, they came back to England. It was apparent that in its wider and more public aspect the life work of the Duchess was closed, but the conception which the nation had formed of this good woman, who as princess, wife and mother, ever performed her exacting duties with lofty devotion, will survive for long years."

KILLED HIS WIFE

Aged Man Thought to Have Been Insane at Time

OTTAWA, Ont., March 15—The village of St. Andrew, about eight miles from Vankleek Hill, has been deeply shocked by a tragedy which occurred there Thursday afternoon, when Joseph Ubal, an aged and well-to-do farmer, thought to have been temporarily insane, attacked his wife with a spade, inflicting such serious injuries that she died yesterday.

Ubal is under arrest at Vankleek Hill.

DISABLED VETERAN'S DEATH

No One Would Drive Him Home—He Walked and Took Pneumonia

KINGSTON, March 15—The Veterans' Association is making a protest and asking for an official investigation of a report published in the Dancroft Times of the death of Pte. G. St. Rise. The report states that Rise went overseas with the 67th Battalion, and suffered shrapnel wounds that disfigured his face and head. He was sent to a convalescent home here. The day after his arrival he was given leave to visit his home, seven miles from Harrington. He asked several people to drive him to his home, but could not get anyone to do so. He walked the seven miles, contracted pneumonia, and died.

FOOD OF MORE IMPORTANCE THAN MEN FOR THE WAR

Special To The Intelligencer.

LONDON, March 16—The British Government regards the production of food of greater importance at the present time than sending additional men to the army. Bonar Law said today in response to questions in the Commons that the Cabinet had interviewed the War Office and Board of Agriculture that this was its view.

CZAR NICHOLAS LEAVES THE RUSSIAN THRONE

People of Great Empire Take Bit in Teeth—Duma and Army in Control—Three Days Fighting in Petrograd—Leaders of Army Pledge Loyalty—Grand Duke Michael Appointed Regent

LONDON, March 16—Special—Official Petrograd despatches announce that the Emperor of Russia has abdicated, and his younger brother, Grand Duke Michael Alexandrovitch, has been named as Regent. The Russian Ministry, charged with corruption and incompetency, has been swept from office. One Minister, Alexander Protopoff, head of the Interior Department, and the former Ministers, as well as the former Premier, Stuermer, are reported to have been killed, and the other Ministers, as well as the President of the Imperial Council, are under arrest.

Another report says that Stuermer and Protopoff have not been injured.

A new National Cabinet is announced, with Prince Lvoff as President of the Council of Ministers, and the other offices held by men who are close to the Russian people.

It is not clear whether the Regency is of the Czarevitch or of the people, but it seems that the people may stand by the Tsesarz.

The Empress of Russia has been placed under guard.

Andrew Bonar Law, Chancellor of the Exchequer, announced in the House of Commons last night that Emperor Nicholas had abdicated, and that Grand Duke Michael Alexandrovitch had been appointed Regent. The soldiers sided with the Duma, but there was no serious loss of life.

A telegram received by the Naval Attache of the Russian Embassy in Paris reported that the railways and public services in Petrograd had resumed, said Mr. Law.

"There is some comfort for us in the conservative tranquility with which this change was conducted. There is also real comfort that all the Government's information shows that the movement was not in any sense directed toward an effort to secure peace by Russia.

"On the contrary, the discontent was not against the Government for carrying up the war, but for not carrying it on with that efficiency and energy which the people had expected."

A Petrograd despatch to The Morning Post says:

"Provided the Emperor consents to the proposals which are to be laid before his Majesty by the Duma, Russia will shortly be in possession of a large measure of political freedom, under a constitutional monarchy. The assent of all the members of the Romanoff family is, strictly speaking, necessary before his Majesty can consent, for not the least of the difficulties of the position of the Russian Emperor lies in the fact that he holds the Throne as trustee of the Romanoff family. Should the happy solution of the situation prove unattainable, it is impossible to say what turn events may take. Owing to a variety of reasons most of the Grand Dukes are absent from Petrograd, many on war service, while others were exiled to their country estates by imperial order early in the year.

GERMAN RETREAT HAS EXTENDED TOWARD SOUTH

Enemy Trenches Occupied on Two and Half Mile Front, From South of St. Pierre-Vaast Wood to North of Saillisel

LONDON, March 16—Special—Another important gain has been made by the British troops between Pe-ronne and Bapaume, according to the official statement issued last night. Trenches on a front of two and a half miles, running from the south of the St. Pierre Vaast wood to the north of the village of Saillisel, have been occupied.

Southeast of Arras the Germans entered the British trenches. The communication says:

"The area of the enemy's withdrawal has extended toward the south

We have occupied his trenches on a front of two and a half miles, from south of St. Pierre Vaast wood to the north of the village of Saillisel.

"Early this morning a strong enemy counter-attack east of Achiet-le-Petit was successfully beaten off by our troops. We have improved our positions in this neighborhood.

"This morning, after a heavy bombardment, the enemy succeeded in entering our trenches southeast of Arras. A few of our men are missing. Another enemy raiding party was repulsed during the night northeast of Neuville-St. Vaast."

BORDEN AND PARTY VISIT SHORNCLIFFE

See Canadian Forces Training There and the Canadian Hospitals

LONDON, March 15—Premier Borden and his colleagues visited the Canadian forces training at Shornecliffe and the Canadian hospitals in that district and expressed with an excellent impression of the work carried on. Tittir first visit was to the special hospital at Westcliffe, where diseases of the eye, ear and throat are treated by specialists. This institution is especially valuable in affording treatment which cannot be obtained at regular hospitals. Sir Robert Borden also visited Moore Barracks Hospital where the patients were thoroughly satisfied that all three are excellently organized and doing effective work. In the course of the tour the Ministers visited various arms of the service, and were made acquainted with the character of the training, which has a direct relation to conditions which the units will encounter when they proceed to the front. A successful day was spent in the force. Both officers and men are eager for all opportunity to take their place in the battle line. Major-General Steele, in command of the military district in which Shorncliffe is situated, accompanied the Ministers.

There are so many different ways of pronouncing the name of that place Shorncliffe that we might as well say it as well as pronounce on Jackrabbit.

Kaiser Takes A New Stand

LONDON, March 15—The German Emperor has ordered compulsory deportations from Belgium discontinued for the present, according to a Berlin despatch to Reuter's by way of Amsterdam. In addition the Emperor has directed the Governor-General of Belgium, as the result of a thorough investigation, to repatriate immediately certain Belgians who were sent to Germany as unemployed. This action was taken following a petition received by the Emperor from a number of prominent Belgians representing all parties.

OAK HILLS

The W. M. S. held their meeting at the home of Mrs. Frank Barles, with a very good attendance. At the close of this meeting Mrs. Barles served a very dainty lunch. The next meeting will be held in the church, visitors are all welcome.

Mr. Ernest Chambers, Corbyville, visited his cousin, Raymond Chambers recently.

Mr. Bert Andrews of Peterboro, spent a few days with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. V. Andrews.

Mr. Nathan Eggleton and Mr. Fred Elliott attended the Oriental hold in Madoc on Friday night.

Mrs. W. Simmons, Carmel, spent a few days with friends here.

The many friends were shocked to hear of the sudden death of the late Mr. Henry McCutcheon. We extend sympathy to the bereaved.

Mr. Harry Stapley's children are on the sick list.

Mrs. Ernest Wilson, Holloway, attended the W. M. S. meeting at Mrs. Sarles.

COCOANUT OIL MAKES A SPLENDID SHAMPOO

If you want to keep your hair in good condition, be careful what you wash it with.

Don't use prepared shampoos or anything else, that contains too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and is very harmful. Just plain mulsified cocoanut oil (which is pure and entirely greaseless), is much better than anything else you can use for shampooing, as this can't possibly injure the hair.

Simply moisten the scalp with water and rub it in. One or two teaspoonfuls will make an abundance of rich, creamy lather, and cleanses the hair and scalp thoroughly. The latter rinses out easily, and removes every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves it fine and silky, bright, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get mulsified cocoanut oil at most any drug store. It is very cheap, and a few ounces is enough to last everyone in the family for months.

Final Games of Curling Bowspiel

Mr. R. A. Backus Winner of The Hyman Cup—Some Expert Plays During the Contest

Many spectators were present last evening at the Curling Club Rink, to witness the final game of the bonspiel for the Hyman Cup between the rinks skipped by Messrs R. A. Backus and G. H. McArthur. The trophy was won by the former, who held a lead of three shots over his opponent at the fourteenth end. The game was an exciting one all the way through, the fortunate victory until the last stone was played. Both teams are to be commended for their good playing. At one stage of the game Mr. McArthur was ahead of his opponent, but by some good shots, Mr. Backus, took the lead, which he managed to hold during the rest of the game. The rinks were as follows:

L. P. Hughes	G. M. Frith
W. Bryant	O. H. Scott
Dr. Kinnear	J. A. Thrasher
R. A. Backus	G. H. McArthur
Skip 13	Skip 16

After the game the players and spectators gathered in the Club's dining room, where a most excellent supper was served, at which victors and vanquished put aside grievances like good sportsmen and united in making the event a memorable one for all. After full justice had been done to the viands, Mr. T. E. Ketcheson, the worthy president of the Curling Club, called the members to order for the purpose of presenting the Club Trophy, to the victors of the club games, and the presentation of the Hyman Cup to the winners of that bonspiel. This season, Mr. Ketcheson stated, was a successful one for the Curling Club. The Club games were all played with harmony among the players during the whole season, which was very gratifying. The Club Trophy presented by the curlers, had this year been won by Dr. M. A. Day, who was without doubt entitled to the cup. Mr. R. A. Backus, was the winner of the Hyman Cup, by defeating during the evening, Mr. Arthur's rink. Mr. Ketcheson here handed the trophies to the champions.

Proceeding in his address, Mr. Ketcheson wished to thank the members of the club, who with their hearty co-operation made such a successful season. He also extended thanks to the Secretary, Mr. H. B. Stock, and the various committees for their generous support.

Dr. Day in a brief address stated it was a great honor for him to receive the Club cup, although, he stated, a skip has not much to do with the winning of the games. It is the players with him. Dr. Day agreed with the president that this had been one of the best seasons known to the Curling Club, which was in no small way due to the efforts of the president. Three cheers were here called for Mr. Ketcheson, the president, and were given lustily.

Mr. R. A. Backus, leader of the winning rink of the Hyman Cup, stated it gave him great pleasure to receive the trophy. The Curlers' was not all due to him, however, the speaker stated, but Dr. Day was also to be congratulated. The Curling Club owed a great deal, concluded Mr. Backus, to the president and officers for such a successful season this year.

Addresses of a brief character congratulating the victors of the trophies and the president and officers of the association for their excellent services were given by Mr. H. B. Stock, Secretary of the Curling Club, Mr. Ray, of Toronto; Mr. G. H. McArthur, runner-up for the Hyman Cup, Col. A. P. Ellis, K. C., of the 254th Battalion, Mr. C. Dolan, J. M. Farley and Mr. Mitchell.

Judge Wills, in making a brief speech complimented the president, Mr. T. E. Ketcheson, on his efforts to make the club a success. The enthusiastic spirit of the president was put into his efforts as that which Mr. Ketcheson so successfully carried on his work in behalf of the Red Cross Campaign in his district. The club this year had also been fine, stated the Judge, neither has there been

SUGGESTION TO WOMEN

Who Are "Just Ready To Drop."

When you are "just ready to drop," when you feel so weak that you can hardly drag yourself around—and because you have not slept well, you get up as tired out next morning as when you went to bed, you need help. You need it just as Mrs. T. S. unt, of North Lethbridge, Alta., did. She says:—

"I had a house full of my family of five and became completely run-down. I had such weak spells I could hardly stand up. I had no appetite, had short breath, was languid and suffer from headaches. I tried different medicines but nothing helped me. One day I read about Vinol and tried it. Before the second bottle was taken I noticed a great improvement. I continued to use it and now feel much stronger, and find my household duties a pleasure." Mrs. T. S. Hunt, North Lethbridge, Alta.

There is no secret about Vinol. It owes its success to beef and cod liver peptones, iron and manganese peptonates and glycerophosphates, the oldest and most famous body building and strength-creating tonics.

So many letters like the above are continually coming to our attention that we gladly offer to return the money paid for Vinol in every case where is fails to give satisfaction. J. S. McKeown, druggist, Belleville, also all the best druggist in all Ontario towns.

able junction. If, however, the city insists changing the grade on the south side, they should pay for the additional grading, and assume any abutal damage that may result therefrom.

The existing bridge and approaches have a sidewalk on one side only, and there appears to the Railway Company no reason for a sidewalk on both sides. The city admits that a sidewalk is not necessary at the present time, but may be so, in a few years. When the city desires to have a sidewalk constructed for which there is no demand, they should not only pay the additional cost, but maintain the sidewalk until it is required.

It is the intention of the Railway Company to replace the roadway approaches in as good condition as they are at present.

We would suggest that the Chief Engineer of the Board be requested to inspect the site and report to the Board as to the necessity for improving the grading on the south side.

MAYOR'S REPLY.

Mayor Ketcheson sent the following reply to Mr. E. A. Primeau, Assistant Secretary of the Board of Railway Commissioners:

In reply to the answer filed on behalf of the G. T. R. to the answer of the city of Belleville to the application re highway bridge over the Company's track on North Front St., the city of Belleville, I would say the proposed change is not in any way for the benefit of the city, but wholly for the advantage and benefit of the Railway Company, and that the Railway Company should pay all expenses and damages occasioned by the reconstruction of the bridge and alteration of the grade.

The city agrees with the suggestion of the Railway Company that the Chief Engineer of the Board be requested to look into the site and report as to the necessity of improving the grading on the south side.

POLICE MATTERS

Ald. Robinson read an extract from a newspaper in reference to a delegation of municipal councils waiting upon Premier Hearst relative to having the control of the Police Department, moved into their new home here, taken out of the hands of the Police Commissioners and relegated to the City Council. In his (the speaker's) opinion this should be done.

Mayor Ketcheson—There has been no communication as far as I know sent to this city in regard to the matter.

Committees adjourned.

FREQUENT HEADACHES MUCH PAIN THROUGH BACK

Kidneys Were Deranged—Digestion Was Poor—Had Weak Spells—Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills Made Cure Complete

Brockville, Ont., March 16—Persistent headaches and pains through the small of the back are well-known symptoms of kidney disease. The skin gets dry and hard, you lose flesh and weight, and digestion is usually deranged.

Any derangements of the kidneys are sufficient cause for alarm, for the usual result of neglect is the development of Bright's disease, hardening of the arteries and dropsical swelling.

Mrs. Frank Noyes, 9 Stuart street, Brockville, Ont., writes:

"For years I was afflicted with kidney complaint. I became very nervous, was easily worried, and had frequent headaches and neuralgia pains, especially through the back. I had indigestion, poor circulation of the blood, and usten was bothered with weak spells. I commenced using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and had only taken two boxes when I felt greatly relieved. I continued the treatment, however, until I was completely cured. In all I took about ten boxes, and have not been troubled in this way since. I cheerfully recommend Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and I think also that the Plasters and Ointment can't be equalled."

Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are considered a household necessity wherever their value is proven, as a means of regulating the liver, kidneys and bowels, and thereby preventing serious disease. One pill a dose, 25 a box, 5 for $1, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

GAIN NEW IDEAS THROUGH GARDENS

Hon. M. Burrell Tells Citizens What They Miss—Return to Land Bright Spot in War

"Divorced entirely from the soil, men are only half men," declared the Hon. Martin Burrell, Minister of Agriculture, to the agricultural enthusiasts of the Women's Canadian Club at the Chateau Laurier, Ottawa, this week.

"The fellow who starts in truck gardening on a vacant lot has all the worries of a regular farmer if he's going to make a success of even a fifty-foot lot," he assured them, "but the benefit to be derived from this new association with nature will pay for it all.

"The return to an interest in the land is one of the bright spots in the great war. The farmer is the basis of the economic world, and in this newly-awakened interest I am sure that the heretofore contemptuous city man will see of what primal importance he is to the scheme of things, and of what inestimable value to Canada's future."

"Too Easy to Leave"

In spite of the widespread cry at least widely expressed opinion that the farmer is getting rich these days, the Minister of Agriculture, for 25 years himself was a farmer, declared that the return which the farmer realized was not commensurate with his labor, generally speaking.

The rapid flow of men from the country to the city was deplorable, he said, and he blamed the rapid transit facilities which gave the farmer easy access to the bright lights of the city and spread discontent among his kind in their enforced isolation.

This flow was particularly lamentable in Canada, he believed, and while it was generally known that the cities of the eastern provinces had grown at the expense of the surrounding country districts, it was not known that the population in the cities of the west, where the big stretches of wonderful farm lands lay, was increasing much faster than the rural population because of the immigration from Europe had gone into the cities instead of to the land, as had been the original intention.

Hunger Our Ally

"City health," he declared, "is impossible without health in the rural districts. Pitiful as it is we cannot be sorry that due to the British navy, starvation stalks in the big centres of the enemy's country, and hunger is becoming our ally."

He likened the women of the Dominion who had turned with determination to increase the country's production, to the heroic English women, numbering 20,000, who had enlisted to go to France to do any necessary labor, and were to be found as near as twenty miles from the front, carrying on the agricultural work so well that the crops would in all probability be almost as large as the crops in normal times.

"Great multitudes of the younger and middle aged people will find a new universe in this return of nature," he said, "They will come to know the marvelous way in which bird, animal and vegetable life react on one another, as they never suspected, and gain unqualified profit and delight."

Plant Best Seed

In giving advice to the would-be farmers, Mr. Burrell warned them to buy the best seed.

"The cheapest is the dearest in the end, and you can't cheat nor defraud nature," he said. "What you give she will give back abundantly, but you must give, and cheap seed is only a waste of labor, for it takes as much work to grow a poor crop as a good one, and the crops, if the 40,000,000 bushels planted annually in Canada were all the seed would be estimated at a value far above $1,000,000,000 at which the Dominion's agricultural produce is rated now."

In speaking of the rotation of the crops, and the necessary properties of land for certain crops, he touched on cultivation, a much misunderstood term.

Cultivation according to the popular conception, he said, meant keeping the weeds out, but in reality it was the process by which the moisture was held in the land, and not allowed to evaporate in the wind and sun.

Careful raking with the cultivator, which overturns and pulverizes the soil, or the hand rake on small plots, did away with the possibility of weeds to be hoed at a latter stage, by keeping them up-rooted at the start, and the necessary moisture is retained.

The importance of cultivating the land could not be over-estimated, he declared.

Those Friendly Bugs

Weeds, he knew, were the lazy man's blessing, for did they not spring up he would never cultivate.

Bugs, for the most part, were friendly to the farmer, he said, and took occasion to say a good word for the "potato bug," who, in 122 species, could only be counted as undesirable in three cases, and for the most part was a life saver, destroying injurious plant life.

DOLLARS AND THE WOMAN WITH ETHEL CLAYTON AT GRIFFIN'S TONIGHT

The popular photoplay stars, Ethel Clayton and Tom Moore appear at Griffin's tonight, and Saturday matinee and night in a gripping photo-drama entitled "Dollars and the Woman" adapted from the famous novel by Albert Payson Terhune, author of the "Who Pays?" series and "The Crimson Stain Mystery. On the same programme with the above five part offering the eighth chapter of "The Shielding Shadow" series will be presented the title of this chapter being "The Haunted Hand.". A new and amusing Ham and Bud comedy will also be exhibited.

SHARK ATTACKS PURSUING SOLDIER

Tragedy Narrowly Averted During Filming of Scene

The first episode of Vitagraph's romantic serial, "The Secret Kingdom," entitled "The Land of Intrigue," which will be shown at Griffin's Opera House next Wednesday and Thursday night contains many thrills as the story's runs its course.

A captain of the court escapes with the little Crown Prince and as they reach the hut of a fisherman upon the shore, they see the old fellow who owns the hut lying on the floor, standing beside a large shark which he has just caught in his fishing nets.

This shark was actually caught by Vitagraph's staff during the filming of the scene and it was only through the quickest thought and action that secured the fisherman was rescued. It was the time of the year when sharks were plentiful in the Northern waters, much to the regret of all concerned, and no little interest was shown when this motion picture company caught exactly what the story called for off Block Island.

Another scene shows a man being attacked by a shark in the water and the audience is sure to feel the desired thrills as the fellow struggles calmly with the large animal of the sea.

Only the future can tell whether a man's best judgment is good or bad.

Des Moines, Iowa.—"My husband and I would have been in my grave today if it had not been for Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I suffered from a serious female trouble and the doctors said I could not live a year without an operation. They all advised me to have it done, and I was to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I soon commenced to get better and am now well and able to do my own housework. I can recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to any woman as a wonderful health restorer."—Mrs. BLANCHE JEFFERSON, 703 Lyon St., Des Moines.

This famous remedy, the medicinal ingredients of which are derived from highly prized roots and herbs, has for forty years proved its value in such cases. Women everywhere bear willing testimony to the wonderful virtues of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

DRAMATIC RECITALS

Humorous, Pathetic, and Tragic Phases of Life.

The "Special Night" of Mr. Tennyson Smith's campaign will be on Tuesday next, the 20th, when he will give his Dramatic Recitals illustrative of the "Humorous, Pathetic and Tragic Phases of Life." This is always looked forward to as the principal event of his series, and brings the campaign to a close. It is not a lecture, but an entertainment, consisting of a number of miscellaneous poems, sketches, etc., of a most vivid character including a fire in London, a railway collision, life in the slums of London, etc. This performance given by Mr. Tennyson Smith far more scope than his lectures do for his versatility in portraying character and for his gift of mimicry, humor, and dramatic power as an elocutionist. It has been said by the press that young people might learn more about elocution by listening to Mr. Tennyson Smith on this one evening than by a long course of study, for as a contemporary says he is "recognized as head and shoulders above any elocutionist now before the public." Recitals will be interspersed with vocal and instrumental music by Mrs. Tennyson Smith.

The admission on this evening will be 35 cents.

DEATH OF MR. CARSCALLEN, M. P. FOR SIMCOE.

Mr. Thomas G. Carscallen, M. P. P. for Lennox, died at his residence in Napanee at 7 o'clock on the morning of the 15th inst., after a few days' illness. Flags were flying at half-mast over the Parliament Buildings in Toronto, in honor of one of its veteran members, the late Mr. Carscallen, who was in his 74th year. He was in Toronto attending to his parliamentary duties on Friday the 9th inst., returned home that night with a severe cold, which rapidly developed into pneumonia, from which he never rallied.

The deceased was born at North Fredericksburgh, County of Lennox and Addington, Ontario, being of Irish descent, and of United Empire Loyalist stock. He was married in 1873 to Malinda Mair. He was Councillor for five years, Reeve and Warden of Lennox and Addington counties for eight years, and Mayor of Napanee for four years.

Mr. Carscallen was elected to the Legislature in 1902, and re-elected in 1905, 1908 and 1911. In politics he was a staunch Conservative, and in religion a Methodist. He leaves no family.

He was universally respected by all who knew him. It is a shock to me to learn of his death," remarked the Hon. R. A. Pyne, Minister of Education, when informed of the death of Mr. Carscallen. "He was one of the most estimable men and one of the kindliest. His death is a loss to his years. His death is a loss to his county and a loss to the Province."

BAGDAD AND BERLIN.

The loss of Bagdad destroys the Hohenzollern dream of a German-ized Empire stretching from the North Sea and the Baltic Ocean across Europe and Asia Minor to the Persian Gulf. When the Prussian militarists launched their assault upon civilization the Kaiser had his railway well on the road to completion from Constantinople to Bagdad, and his idea was to extend it down the Tigris to Basra, on the Persian Gulf. If he could win the war German passenger trains which now run between Berlin and Constantinople would proceed to Bagdad and Basra. The railway was to be the backbone of a gigantic Prussian Empire, embodying all of Central Europe, Asia Minor and a great part of Western Asia, with the absorption of British India as the ultimate objective. The scheme was a dazzling one, and the man who dreamed it came near to realizing it. Austro-Hungary and Turkey are mere vassals of Germany. From the Baltic to Bagdad the Kaiser's word has run supreme. General Maude's splendid march up the Tigris and the fall of Bagdad pull down one end of an Imperial structure which in conception outdid the legends and romances in which the land of Haroun-al-Raschid and Sinbad the Sailor abound. Another British force, coming southward from Egypt, through Palestine, has reached Jerusalem, while the Russians are closing in on Armenia and the Caucasus. It is pointed out that when these forces join hands, as they shortly will, they will form a line stretching across Asia Minor from the Mediterranean to the Black Sea and so take up the task of driving the Turks towards Constantinople. The ripe will be reinforcible by water at either end and so be readily maintained. The defection of the Arabs from the Turko-German to the British side shows how the wind is blowing. Turkey is collapsing. Germany's dream of an Eastern Empire is over.—News.

CHINESE LABOR.

Fearing a scarcity of labor during the coming season the people of British Columbia and the Nor West are busily seeking to undo what they succeeded in accomplishing some years ago, that is the prevention of the emigration of Chinese into the Dominion unless a capitation tax of $500 per head was paid.

Telegrams from Regina inform us that

"A resolution was submitted to a meeting of a Labor Association by the Employers of British Columbia asking for the endorsation of the Council in their appeal to the Dominion Government that the head tax on Chinese labor be removed. The proposal is in effect that Chinese labor be allowed to come into this country for a certain number of years free from all taxes with the understanding that at the end of this time the Chinese should be compelled to return to their own home. This action is desired to cope with the labor situation in the fruit orchards in British Columbia. The Council, after considering the resolution, decided to refer it to a special committee to bring in a report."

This is what might have been expected.

The demand for the exclusion of the Chinese from the country, was on the ground that they interfered with white labor by cutting down wages. To a great extent, this was an error. These orientals are in no way behind their European brethren in demanding the highest possible remuneration for their services, whether it be as household servants or laborers in the field.

This war will compel a relaxation in the revision of the labor laws, it but harvesting is to be successfully accomplished.

The country is realizing this fact, and the sooner action is taken by our legislators, the sooner will be the embargo upon what has been in the past considered foreign competition in labor, be removed.

Labor must be had, no matter from what source it comes, unless the country is to be reduced to actual want in the necessaries of life.

AN EXPLODED BOGEY.

Since war began, Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the Opposition press have seen fit to make many attacks upon the alleged development of a British "militarism" threatening the democratic liberties of the people. The patient and devoted efforts of those who have spent their time in trying to raise a bulwark of military strength against the German menace have been exploited by thus invoking the prejudice of the Canadian people against anything in the nature of the Prussian military system, in the hope that some political capital could be made.

There are a thousand reasons why Canada or Great Britain herself will never suffer from the intolerable visitation of "militarism." Enough of them may be found in the casual comparison of our political constitution, which gives supreme power to the people, and the German constitution, which gives supreme power to the Kaiser. The very fact that both Great Britain and Canada, since war began, have made provision for recording the votes of the soldiers on duty at the front and that it has always been the law in Germany that no soldier or sailor on duty has the right to vote, shows that we are fighting German militarism with an aroused democracy determined to remain as such.

The democratic character of the British efforts has attracted much attention in neutral countries. Writing in the New York Times of March 11, Dr. C. A. Elliott, former President of Harvard University, and a scholar and thinker of international fame, says:

The war has demonstrated two reassuring facts: first that no taint of militarism in the popular mind need result from the creation of a citizen's army large in proportion to the population, if it be a democratic army like that of Switzerland or France, or like the present British army popularly known as Kitchener's army and bearing little resemblance to the former regular army of Great Britain, and, secondly, that a democratic army can be surpassed, in actual marching, digging, and fighting on land and in air, if it be properly supported by adequate national industries and a resolute national spirit.

The one political element which hampered Canada's effort to assist in preparing against German militarism is now busily at work hampering the nation's effort to help in meeting the menace, which no longer can be denied before the public. Without large sums, the Germans cannot be defeated, and it is an outrage, that on such flimsy and unjustifiable grounds, the effort of devoted patriots to raise armies big enough to defend the country, sufficiently difficult as it is, should be handicapped by the spreading of false rumors and suspicions amongst the people.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Its War Time Aspect.

London, Eng.—The women of Britain are taking care of the soldiers' families, are in munitions work, are in the land service, are doing all the things that the men used to do. They are waiting and working for the day of the final victory. The men have given us little trouble to the government of them in Parliament since the "suffragette" days. Let the suffragettes be said the Sydney men of England, and everything will come right" and "Votes for all" is the cry.

Murdered Wife With Flatiron

DOUVERNEUR, March 15—Newton, J. Conklin, of Maple Ridge a former inmate of the St. Lawrence State Hospital, murdered his wife last night with a flatiron on his head while she was sitting in the woodshed and Conklin upstairs resting.

The two children who were in the house unharmed. Assistant District Attorney Lenahan, of Ogdensburg, left for the scene of the tragedy this afternoon. Mrs. Conklin was formerly Miss Lula Hartshorn, of Oswegatchie. She was 30 years old. Conklin slashed his throat also and is being brought to the hospital.

Conklin has been acting queerly for several years and on visits to Gouverneur spoke of the fact that he had at times a pain on his head that made him feel like doing murderous deeds.

WHAT DYSPEPTICS SHOULD EAT

FOR SCHOOLGIRLS.

A PHYSICIAN'S ADVICE

"Indigestion and pain practically all forms of stomach trouble are, nine times out of ten, due to acidity; therefore stomach sufferers should, whenever possible avoid eating food that is acid in its nature, or which by chemical action in the stomach develops acidity. Unfortunately, acids, or acid producing food which are pleasant to the taste as well as those which are rich in blood, flesh and nerve building properties. This is the reason why dyspeptics and stomach sufferers are usually thin, emaciated and lacking in that vital energy which can only come from a well fed body. For the benefit of those sufferers who have been obliged to exclude from their diet all starch, sweet or fatty food, and the trying to keep up a miserable existence on gluten products, I would suggest that you should try a meal of any food or foods which you may like, in moderate amount, and immediately afterwards a teaspoonful of bisurated magnesia in a little hot or cold water. Bisurated magnesia is an acid which may be present or which may be formed, and instead of the usual feeling of uneasiness and fullness you will find that your food agrees with you perfectly. Bisurated magnesia is doubtless the best food corrective and antacid known. It has no direct action on the stomach; but by neutralizing the acidity of the food contents, and thus removing the source of the acid irritation which inflames the delicate stomach lining. It does more than could possibly be done by any drug or or medicine. As a physician, I believe in the use of medicine whenever necessary, but I must admit that I cannot conceive the idea of dosing an inflamed and irritated stomach with drugs instead of getting rid of the acid—the cause of the trouble. Get a little bisurated magnesia from your druggist, eat what you want at your next meal, take some of the bisurated magnesia as directed above, and see if I'm not right."

ABOUT EMBROIDERIES.

A History of What We Now Crave For Adornment.

Embroidery is one of the oldest of arts. The most primitive people have made use of the needle, for it is used to do today. Among the relics of the Swiss lake dwellers have been found the crudest of needles, proving the antiquity of this form of handiwork. In the museums of Cairo, Egypt, there are several fragments of linen woven in blues, greens, reds and black and ornamented with needlework. The tombs fower designs of Egypt are charming, and one piece bears the name of the owner, of the fifteenth century B. C. In the British museum and the London and the Louvre in Paris are to be found interesting pieces of old Assyrian and Persian embroideries dating back to 455 B. C.

Spanish embroideries reflect the influence of the Arabs' oriental patterns, and many of the old German embroideries follow the Byzantine traditions.

Indian, Chinese, Turkish and Persian embroideries date back to early times. Many of these are beautiful in texture and design. Some Indian and Turkish embroideries are enriched with pieces of glass, tinsel and beetle wings. Chinese and Japanese embroideries are usually done in silk, on a background of silk. Japanese designs are more pictorial in character, while the Chinese include birds, birds and flowers. The surface effect of some of the Chinese embroideries is often wonderfully smooth and regular. In the Persian embroideries of carpets, rugs and hangings a preference is shown for floral designs. In the Victoria and Albert museum is a beautiful linen prayer rug, quilted and embroidered in chain stitch of silks in yellow, green, white and red. The design is a floral one.

With the complexity of modern civilization, interest in the beautiful embroideries of Oriental and America has somewhat subsided. The royal school of needlework in England is now reviving the interest, and there is much improvement over the seventeenth and eighteenth century examples. The influence of the art of William Morris and Burne-Jones was felt in the embroidery of the nineteenth century and helped to improve the designs.

New Arm Bags.

The new arm bags have quite superseded those of leather for every one but the most tailored of women. They are often entirely made of beads. These if imported are very expensive. The ones you really want are discouragingly expensive. Not there are other styles which may be made by the milliner or dressmaker or any woman who embroiders. These are made of velvet in square or pear shape and are drawn up at the top by a chain or by ribbon passed through little metal rings sewed to the bag tops.

COOKING VEGETABLES.

Be Sparing in the Use of Water and Adding Seasoning.

In the cooking of vegetables there are a few things to remember—first to retain all the mineral matter and nutriment possible, to soften the cellulose and, to develop the flavor, making them more palatable.

Splasch cooked properly should be well washed and cooked without the addition of water or very little. This vegetable, being rich in iron, which is soluble in water, by being cooked in a large amount of water may be rendered nearly valueless as a food. This is true of green peas and beans or, in fact, any of the delicately flavored vegetables. The seasoning is another important item. The flavoring never should be disguised by seasoning. Usually butter, pepper and salt, not too much, are best because the plainest.

To accomplish these results one may use several methods—cook the vegetable, when it is large pieces, cook with the skin on when possible, cook in as small an amount of water as possible without burning, serve the water in a sauce with the vegetable whenever possible, and season after the vegetable has started cooking, so that the salt does not draw out the flavor.

FOR BEGINNERS.

Hints to Help Mrs. Newlywed Over Hard Spots.

In making potatoes always put the meat in cold water. Corned beef and ham should be put in boiling water. A tablespoonful of vinegar put in the pot will make tough meat or chicken tender.

To roast beef allow twenty minutes to a pound.

All vegetables should be put in boiling water.

Cut hot brown bread by putting a string around the loaf the right thickness for a slice and draw quite tight.

In making tea allow one teaspoonful for each person and one for the pot. Allow one tablespoonful of coffee for each person and one for pot.

Always pare fruit with a silver knife.

Always scrape carrots the way the nap runs.

If new tinware is rubbed over with fresh lard and then thoroughly heated in the oven before it is used it will never rust afterward, no matter how much water is used in it.

WAR LOAN

DOMINION OF CANADA

Issue of $150,000,000 5% Bonds Maturing 1st March, 1937

Payable at par at Ottawa, Halifax, St John, Charlottetown, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Regina, Calgary, Victoria, and at the Agency of the Bank of Montreal, New York City.

INTEREST PAYABLE HALF-YEARLY, 1st MARCH, 1st SEPTEMBER.

PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST PAYABLE IN GOLD.

ISSUE PRICE 96.

A FULL HALF-YEAR'S INTEREST WILL BE PAID ON 1st SEPTEMBER, 1917.

THE PROCEEDS OF THE LOAN WILL BE USED FOR WAR PURPOSES ONLY.

10 per cent on application;
30 " 16th April, 1917;
30 " 15th May, 1917;
26 " 15th June, 1917.

The total allotment of bonds of this issue will be limited to one hundred and fifty million dollars, exclusive of the amount (if any) paid for by the surrender of bonds as the equivalent of cash under the terms of the War Loan prospectus of 22nd November, 1915.

The instalments may be paid in full on the 16th day of April, 1917, or on any instalment due date thereafter, under discount at the rate of four per cent per annum. All payments are to be made to a chartered bank for the credit of the Minister of Finance. Failure to pay any instalment when due will render previous payments liable to forfeiture and the allotment to cancellation.

Subscriptions, accompanied by a deposit of ten per cent of the amount subscribed, must be forwarded through the medium of a chartered bank. Any branch in Canada of any chartered bank will receive subscriptions and issue provisional receipts.

This loan is authorized under Act of the Parliament of Canada, and both principal and interest will be a charge upon the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Forms of application may be obtained from any branch in Canada of any chartered bank and at the office of any Assistant Receiver General in Canada.

Subscriptions must be for even hundreds of dollars.

In case of partial allotments the surplus deposit will be applied towards payment of the amount due on the April instalment.

Scrip certificates, non-negotiable or payable to bearer in accordance with the choice of the applicant for registered or bearer bonds, will be issued, after allotment, in exchange for the provisional receipts.

When the scrip certificates have been paid in full and payment endorsed thereon by the bank receiving the money, they may be exchanged for bonds, when prepared, with coupons attached, payable to bearer or registered as to principal, or for fully registered bonds, when prepared, without coupons, in accordance with the application.

Delivery of scrip certificates and of bonds will be made through the chartered banks.

The issue will be exempt from taxes—including any income tax—imposed in pursuance of legislation enacted by the Parliament of Canada.

The bonds with coupons will be issued in denominations of $100, $500, $1,000. Fully registered bonds without coupons will be issued in denominations of $1,000, $5,000 or any authorised multiple of $5,000.

The bonds will be paid at maturity at par at the office of the Minister of Finance and Receiver General at Ottawa, or at the office of the Assistant Receiver General at Halifax, St. John, Charlottetown, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Regina, Calgary or Victoria, or at the Agency of the Bank of Montreal, New York City.

The interest on the fully registered bonds will be paid by cheque, which will be remitted by post. Interest on bonds with coupons will be paid on surrender of coupons. Both cheques and coupons, at the option of the holder, will be payable free of exchange at any branch in Canada of any chartered bank, or at the Agency of the Bank of Montreal, New York City.

Subject to the payment of twenty-five cents for each new bond issued, holders of fully registered bonds without coupons will have the right to convert into bonds of the denomination of $1,000 with coupons attached, and holders of bonds with coupons will have the right to convert into fully registered bonds of authorized denominations without coupons at any time on application to the Minister of Finance.

The books of the loan will be kept at the Department of Finance, Ottawa.

Application will be made in due course for the listing of the issue on the Montreal and Toronto Stock Exchanges.

Recognized bond and stock brokers having offices and carrying on business in Canada will be allowed a commission of three-eighths of one per cent on allotments made in respect of applications bearing their stamp, provided, however, that no commission will be allowed in respect of the amount of any allotment paid for by the surrender of bonds issued under the War Loan prospectus of 22nd November, 1915, or in respect of the amount of any allotment paid for by surrender of five per cent debenture stock maturing 1st October, 1919. No commission will be allowed in respect of applications on forms which have not been printed by the King's Printer.

SUBSCRIPTION LISTS WILL CLOSE ON OR BEFORE THE 23rd OF MARCH, 1917.

Cherub Devine

By SEWELL FORD

Copyright, 1911, by Sewell Ford.

It remained for a train boy to disclose just how the public viewed the series of Mr. Dawlaw's affairs. Halfway to the city the boy came down with the early afternoon editions. From the headlines it was evident that the disturbance in Wall street had become a popular topic, the sensation of the hour.

One enterprising journal indulged in a pen and ink sketch, which was supposed to represent the situation. It was entitled "Dawlaw's Cherub." A scandalous caricature of Mr. Dawlaw it was, showing him most inadequately clothed, but possessed of a pair of wings from which a group of bad boys were gleefully pulling what few feathers remained, while the victim rubbed his fists into tear soaking eyes and made no attempt at defense.

"Oh, my, my!" said Mr. Devlin recked mirthfully over the cartoon.

"It would be funnier if it wasn't so d—d near the truth," growled Wallaway. "Of course I don't know just how deep you've plunged on this 1", 2, and 3, deal, but I gathered that you'd gone in rather steep."

"Yes," admitted the Cherub more soberly, "I have. In fact, it's the biggest thing I ever tackled."

Nick Wallaway gazed at him incredulously. "And right in the middle of it you take a day off to feed the swans in Flevington Lake—"

"I'd take a year off if it was necessary."

Young Mr. Wallaway paled a little. "Devine," he began hesitatingly, "it's—it's the consumes, isn't it?"

The pink in the Cherub's chubby cheeks flashed up behind his ears.

"The consumes!" he exclaimed. "Why, she's way out of my class, Nick! Oh, she's about a hundred percent too good for me—aristocratic, refined, old family and all that. Why, she wouldn't look at me, Nick! You know she wouldn't."

"I know that you've been looking at her and—and"— Something was interfering with the speech of young Mr. Wallaway. However, he mastered the difficulty. Suddenly reaching out, he grasped the Cherub's right hand and gave it a trembling grip. "I—I wish you luck, old man."

Perhaps Mr. Devine was a little surprised by this unexpected display of emotion from the usually reserved young man. If he was he brushed it aside.

"Look nothing, Nick! Much obliged for your good wishes, my boy, but I haven't the ghost of a show. Now, if I was a chap like you there'd be some hope for me. Say, Nick, I wonder you haven't got a—"

"Be garden, Devine, but let's stick to the point. I should not presume to intrude my advice on personal matters, but if I were you I would drop P., E. and N. until you can give your whole time and thought to the business. Why don't you pull out?"

The Cherub ceased to stare dreamily. "Nick," he said abruptly, "I'll tell you something. I've changed my plans. I'm going to do something besides speculate in that stock. I'm going to buy into it, and I've got to get control before next Friday noon."

"Cherub, you're crazy! It's impossible! Why, the Bates-Rimmer crowd scooped in two-fifths of the stock yesterday, so they say. You know what that means—they'll wreck it, wring it dry. The small outside holders have been handing over each other in unload. See here"—and he pointed to a newspaper on his knee—"fifty lots offered above the first half hour today, and the quotations dropping by quarter points. Why, you can't stop 'em, man. They've got you on the run."

"Yes, yes. It looks like it, I know. But wait until I've had a chance at them. Let me think this thing over."

Mr. Nicholas Wallaway withdrew into his corner of the smoking compartment to stare absentmindedly out of the window. The Cherub was soon apparently engaged in a profound contemplation of the end of his cigar. You would not have guessed, at first at him, that he was considering anything more serious than the flavor of the tobacco. Not until they were on the ferry did he break the silence. Then, briefly and crisply, he outlined his plan of action. Nick Wallaway heard him through with a glow of admiration in his eyes.

"If you can do that, Cherub, you'll win," he declared; "but if the scheme slips up"—

"Then I'm down and out. But it's got to go through," and Mr. Devine's mouth lost some of its cherubic curves. "You'll do your part, Nick. Oh, it will be easier than you think! They'll never suspect you're in it. And don't try to report until 11 tonight. Then you know where to come—private dining room, sixth floor. I'll have 'em all there at 11."

* * * * * * *

When Cherub Devine appeared on the floor a half hour before closing time the rumors of his defeat were passing from mouth to mouth. The Bates-Rimmer retainers were indulging in a wee dance of circles.

"Well, you can just cut me all about it, Devine," was the greeting.

"Tomorrow's Great Scott, man; you don't understand. They mean to finish the job today. Tomorrow might be all right, but today—why, there's merely a fighting chance left now, and I don't know that you can have that. Wall street is wild with it."

"I guess things are not quite as bad as all that, Nick. I've been down to begin early in the morning."

Mr. Wallaway put both hands on Mr. Devine's shoulders.

"Cherub," he said, speaking with an effort at calmness, "you're too good a man to be beaten by a gang like that. You'll come back. You have friends—lots of them. We'll get them together and go after that crowd. Buddie, it's the old Baines-Hinton crowd," urged Wallaway. "You know them. They're like a pack of savage wolves."

"And now they're at your throat, Cherub. Come, show your"—

For an instant the Cherub hesitated. Then he jumped to his feet. As he did so he met the earnest eyes of the Countess Vecchi. Until then he seemed to have forgotten her presence.

"There!" exclaimed the Cherub! "I had almost forgotten. I promised to drive you into the village this afternoon to buy more stuff for making cobwebs, didn't I, countess?"

Mr. Wallaway threw up his hands. "Devine," he said hoarsely, "I'll wait outside in my car for just three minutes and a half. If you are not there by the end of that time I'll have to go back without you."

"All right, Nick. Much obliged for coming."

"But you'll send some word, even if you don't go, won't you?"

"You might give my regards to old Rimmer."

Mr. Devine had followed his friend to the door. Now he returned, to find that the countess had been looking expectantly after him. The cobwebby affair had been dropped hastily to the floor and lay tangled at her feet.

"You say making this sacrifice to bow down from leaving the house that was once my home?" she said.

I must tell you that I shall not accept it. You must go at once!"

"Oh, those fellows are always ready for that sort of thing. I suppose they will do more or less damage, but I guess I can stand it."

"You must go back with Mr. Wallaway. Please, go!"

"No! I can't."

"Can't! Why can you not go?"

"Because—well, because I think more of seeing you than I do of being a gambler than I do for all the railroad stock in the country. That's why."

This was straight from the heart of Cherub Devine. And the countess could see and hear, by motherhood.

"Oh, oh!" There was surprise in the cry, perhaps joy. For an instant she hid her face in her hands. When she took them away the spots of color were gleaming keenly in her brown eyes. Shyly and very demurely she came to him with clasped hands and gazed up at him as if to search for the truth in his face.

"I believe you," she whispered. "Oh, I do believe in you! But I don't want you to go. Do this time, to please me."

"Honey!" Are you sure you want me to go?" He gripped his hands tightly at his side as he looked at her.

"Yes, yes! and—and I will tell them." The lighting spirit of all the old Continental Hertigtons outlined have blazed up and burned anew in her brown eyes. "Don't let them beat you. Smash them hard!" She made a gesture with her soft, white hands to illustrate what she wished him to do. The Cherub smiled.

"But, you will not run away while I am gone, will you?" he demanded.

"Perhaps not—if you smash them hard enough. Hurry! He is starting."

She whirled him about by the shoulders, pushed him toward the door.

"Hold on, Nick. I'm coming!" shouted the Cherub.

The countess ran down the steps and tossed a package to him.

"Don't forget that," she said breathlessly. "I wanted to ask you to sell them for me. They're some stocks or bonds or something. I don't know them sold. That's all."

The large works of the vehicle began to whir violently, the big car leaped forward, and a moment later the Countess Vecchi, clad see only a little cloud of dust that showed through the trees lining the road to the village.

Fokus—"The widow always gets her third, doesn't she? Pokus—"I believe she has to get her second first."

The Big Fire At Cordova Mines

(Marmora Herald)

Another chapter in the checkered history of Cordova Mines was brought to a close on Monday night when the big mills, No. 1 shaft house and the blacksmith shop were totally destroyed by fire. The origin of the fire appears to be a mystery, but it started in the shaft house. The buildings were all of wood and contained some immense timbers. They burned with surprising rapidity so that it was impossible to check the fire, once it got started, until it burned itself out.

During the past year the old compressed air system had been done away with and a modern electric power system installed. The mine had only been in operation a few weeks, and a number of men were at work below the ground when the fire started. All but three escaped through another shaft, but these were cut off. They were not rescued until noon on Tuesday, and before that time little hope was entertained that they would be taken out alive, as the burning timbers and red hot metal, which had fallen down the shaft had filled the mine with smoke and steam. However, the men succeeded in reaching the third level, where there was a store house for powder and other supplies, and by going in there and closing the door they escaped. When brought to the surface two were little the worse for their experience, but the third was somewhat upset by the shock and nervousness.

Cordova gold mine has been very unfortunate. Time after time, operations have been started, but either some accident or the cost of operations would cause it to close down. Thousands and thousands of dollars have been lost by investors in this mine, while comparatively few have ever realized very much by being connected with it.

At the same time there are some who have never lost faith that some time the mine would be able to pay handsome dividends.

The loss will be very heavy, but it is partly covered by insurance.

THE SEARCH-LIGHT FLASHED ON THE TRAFFIC

In the Salvation Army Citadel last night the Temperance Campaign was continued. The Salvation Army Band led the singing of several hymns. Adjutant Hitchin presided and expressed his gratification that they had the honour of a visit from so distinguished a speaker as Mr. Tennyson Smith, whom he had heard some years ago. Mrs. Tennyson Smith again sang with much acceptance Alexander's song "Every body Should Know". Mr. Thos. S. Morris, Grand Chancellor of the Royal Templars for the Province of Ontario, was introduced and gave some interesting particulars as to the objects and work of the order, pointing out the need at the present time for all temperance bending themselves together in the existing organizations for the purpose of continuing the work until Dominion Prohibition had been secured.

Mr. Tennyson Smith gave his address on "The Search-Light Flashed on the Liquor Traffic," illustrating his subject with tragic and humorous incidents graphically related. He also showed two banners with striking designs from which he drew forceful lessons. The lecture was somewhat different in character from most of those which have preceded it, as it did not lend itself quite so much to dramatization, but it was specially useful in the information which the speaker gave and opened the eyes of his hearers to the corrupting influences of the traffic. He produced a number of share-lists of liquor companies and gave some startling facts with regard to this phase of the traffic in Great Britain, and showed how almost every department of public life was demoralized by the financial interests represented by the shareholders. The police, the press, the medical profession, the municipality and the government all being implicated.

FOXBORO

March. 14—On Friday evening March, the children of Foxboro public school gathered at the home of Mr. M. A. Snider to spend a social evening with the children before they leaving for their new home in Saskatoon. After an hour had been spent in music and games the following address was read by Harold Longwell.

Dear Beatrice, Bessie, Phyllis, and Dialf:

We your school mates, have gathered here because we know you will soon be having our midst. During the months you have been with us, we have learned to appreciate your friendship. We have enjoyed our pleasant associations immensely and our school life better because you have been with us to share in our work and our games. We will miss you very much and will remember you odoo na 'dear ones near ones you will have much pleasure and success in your western home and school but hope you will not forget your loyal school mates of Foxboro Public School, the ice slide by the woodshed in winter, nor the basketball and baseball in the summer. We hope that you will all grow up to be noble women and men, and we pray to do the same so that we may meet again in heaven, for we may not meet again on earth.

We have brought these gifts to you and ask you to accept them as a slight token of our regard for you. When you use them, we hope you will have pleasant remembrances of us as we trust you stay among us.

Signed on behalf of your school companions:

JACK LAKE
HAROLD LONGWELL

The gifts were a "shower" of hairpillows, hankerchiefs and bon-bons presented by Vera Longwell and Jack Lake. Mr. Snider, also, Beatrice thanked the children for their gifts and for the Whitsee which they so shown them while their stay among them. Lunch was served by Mrs. Snider. The children left for their home shortly afterwards all seeming well pleased with their outing.

FOR YOUNG FOLKS

Sleepy Time Story About Two Very Hospitable People.

HOW LUCK CAME TO THEM.

An Interesting Account of a Happening That Has Been Handed Down Through Remote Antiquity—Kindly Act Richly Rewarded—Skating in Switzerland.

I think I will tell you a story of long ago, said Uncle Ben to Little Ned and Polly Ann. It is about.

NOBLE TRAVELERS.

In the old times it was thought right to treat strangers kindly. I think I may as well tell you a story about that. Once long ago, in a pleasant part of the country called Greece, there lived a respectable old couple named Baucis and Philemon. They were very poor, but Mistress Baucis kept her little one roomed house spotlessly clean.

One evening some one knocked at the door, and when Philemon opened it to open it he found two strangers standing outside.

"We are travelers who have lost our way and are looking for shelter for the night," said the older man. "Could we find a place by your fireside?"

"Certainly," replied Philemon kindly. "Walk right in, and welcome."

Baucis greeted them pleasantly, and when they were comfortable by the fire she bustled about to get supper.

When their guests were seated at the table the old couple found themselves at a loss for sparkling wine flow from the pitcher Philemon had filled with spring water.

Then the tall stranger said: "The little child which you spread on the table and stirred strangers shows that to this day there is at least one house where they are kindly met with joy."

Baucis and Philemon followed the strangers to the top of the hill, but they reached the top they looked back and saw where the village had stood a beautiful lake.

"So," said the tall stranger, "have I punished those who turned the stranger from their doors. Yonder is your home. Live there now in peace and comfort."

Where the little cottage of Baucis and Philemon had stood, now stood a did marble palace. Inside was wealth enough to last for many a year.

"I was the pitcher," said the tall stranger. "My companion is Mercury. Oak we grant you any wish before we go."

"If you please, we have lived so happily together in this world we would like when the time comes to leave it not to be parted," replied Baucis and Philemon.

The old couple lived happily for many years, but at last they grew very, very feeble. "It is time for us to go," one said to the other. Then each noticed that the other was turning into a tree. They grew side by side, the one an oak and the other a linden.

Commends "Dry" Canada.

Bishop Perrin, of Willesden, formerly Bishop of British Columbia, writing to The London Chronicle on prohibition, pronounced it as practical a political act as had been done in Canada. "Oh, yes, people say, but Canada is so different from England." My answer is always: "write the Bishop, 'have you been there?' and do not mean a trip for a week, but have you lived in Canada as I have for eighteen years?'

"Prohibition was no easier there than at home, yet from Halifax on the Atlantic to the Pacific it has been accepted in every Province with the exception of Quebec, which is nearly dry, because the people have seen that the law demanded it.

"Every argument used here was used there with the same strength interested interests, and all the rest of it. That, they said, could not be, but it has come to pass. When history comes to be written, it will be said that when Canada with its splendid response of 400,000 soldiers, all volunteers, gave on Prohibition and on the sale of drink, England with an equally splendid response of men and sacrifice of life and money, was still so fond of drink, so afraid of trade that all went on quite as usual and the country wasted its strength and spent its money?"

Chinese Chariots.

Chariots worked on the principle of the tantimeter are said to have been used in China in the fourth century.

BOARD OF EDUCATION IN REGULAR SESSION

Motions to Purchase Taylor Property and Interest School Children in Producing Gardens Adopted—High School Inspector's Report Gratifying—A Number of Other Matters Considered

At a regular monthly meeting of the Board of Education held last night a number of matters were brought to the attention of the members. It was decided to purchase the property of the late Mr. John Taylor, adjourning the High School, provided it can be secured at a price named by the Board. A very satisfactory report of the High School was furnished by Mr. J. H. Hoaston, High School Inspector. The Board will co-operate in endeavoring to assist school children this spring in securing vacant property for the purpose of making gardens of same, and will also offer prizes for the best kept garden and vegetables produced.

Members present were: Messrs. B. Mallory, chairman; H. W. Ackerman, F. M. Ketchabaw, A. E. Bailey, A. McGie, W. R. McCreary, S. S. Moore, E. C. Pascoe, Col. W. N. Ponton, C. M. Reid, H. Sneyd, Geo. Woodley and Elliott, P. J. Wims.

Minutes of the last meeting were read and confirmed.

REPORTS

Inspector Mr. H. J. Clarke of the Public School, reported that the registration of pupils for the month of February was 1490, and the daily average attendance was 1292, which was good, considering considerable inclement weather during the month. The Inspector recommended that the pupils of the schools be encouraged to plant gardens this spring. The members of the Horticultural Society would assist the pupils in the matter.

HIGH SCHOOL INSPECTION.

Mr. J. H. Hoaston, Inspector, who inspected the High School, presented his report. The report showed that more class room was required in order to provide wants of the commercial department.

There is a very good supply of equipment except for the work in physical culture, in which there is absolutely nothing, though it has been asked for in several reports.

The staff was up equally qualified, the discipline was good, and the attendance all regular. At the inspection there were enrolled 124 boys and 179 girls; total 303.

The lower grading in physical culture is the fault of the Board, not of the teachers.

The Principal and his staff are doing good faithful work, though in many ways, teachers and pupils are struggling against poor conditions. The Commercial department cannot be what it should be with the present arrangements, as there appears to be no room for expansion. This department should be one of the strong features of a school of this class, and should be attractive to many more pupils than are now taking advantage of it. I had the pleasure of discussing conditions with the Chairman and a deputation of the Board, and was pleased to find them quite alive to the pressing necessity for prompt action as soon as conditions would permit a move in the direction of new quarters for the school.

COMMUNICATIONS

From the Provincial Educational Association asking the Board to send at least one delegate to the Association's meeting to be held in Toronto on April 10th, 11th and 12th, 1917.

From Principal McLellin, re the report of High School Inspector in reference to English literature, which he (the Principal) considered was placed too low.

The ladies of West Belleville, through Mrs. Hearst, asked the privilege of having the assembly-room of Queen Mary School open one week from 2 to 4 o'clock, for the purpose of doing patriotic work.—Referred to committee.

On motion the Board went into committee of the whole on reports, etc Mr. Ackerman in the chair.

The report of the Finance Committee recommending the payment of a number of accounts, was concurred in.

The report of Mr. Houston, Inspector, who inspected the High School was read.

Mr. Mallory said the report was a satisfactory one, and some equipment asked for will be supplied.

Mr. Bailey was pleased with the report, which was most creditable to the school.

Col. Ponton—The vital spot is the English language. None can advance without a proper knowledge of English. The report was a frank one.

The report was adopted.

Mr. Clarke's report as Inspector of Public Schools, was considered, and Col. Ponton stated he had prepared a motion which would be explained at the proper time.

A portion of the report relative to certain books being required was referred to the Printing and Supplies Committee.

A request to allow Mrs. Graham to give a prize for general proficiency to be competed for by scholars of Queen Alexandria School, was granted.

Mr. McCullough's proposition to time the three pianos in the Public School and the High School twice a year for $16 was accepted.

The request made by Mrs. J. Hoarst on behalf of ladies in West Belleville, to use once a week from 2 to 4 p.m. the assembly-room of Queen Mary school, was granted.

TO ATTEND GATHERING.

A motion prevailed that Mr. Mallory and Mr. Deacon be delegates from the Board to the Educational Association annual meeting to be held in Toronto in April.

HIGH SCHOOL PROPERTY

The proposition to secure the property of the late Mr. John Taylor, adjoining the High School premises, was discussed.

Mr. Moore spoke in support of securing the property, which should be done right away.

Mr. Wims said the Board should secure the property immediately, as other parties were after it.

Mr. Bailey was in favor of securing the property, which now could be secured.

Mr. McGie.—If you can get the Board property located on the Taylor property could be secured.

Mr. Bailey—Here was a change to get the Taylor property, and we should acquire it, if it can be bought right. He desired to have the High School or Collegiate Institute there.

Mr. Elliott—The Board has property, but I also desire the Board to get an option upon the Bogart property.

Mr. C. M. Reid considered that the Taylor property was a dear property at the price suggested. The place for the High School was in West Belleville. The reason the Board bought the St. Thomas Church property was because the Board was compelled to do so by the Government. Do not buy the Taylor property at present.

Col. Ponton—Within two years he could conceive the commencement of the Collegiate Institute building in Belleville. The Taylor property was an excellent property, with a frontage of 145 feet on John street. You could not get an option for any money at present on the Bogart property.

Mr. C. M. Reid—If the Board buys the Taylor property, and it is not used for school purposes for some time, the city would be down on us.

A motion prevailed that the Board secure the property at a price considered to be a fair one.

The Committee rose and reported.

The report was received and adopted.

Col. Ponton's notice of motion re vacuum school premises being offered as a convalescent hospital for returned soldiers, was allowed to stand as a notice for the time being, also Mr. O'Flynn's notice of motion.

EXAMINER APPOINTED

Mr. Pascoe moved that Miss Fleming be engaged by the Board, as an examiner at the High School entrance. Mr. Woodley seconded the motion.

Mr. McCreary moved in amendment that Mr. A. E. Thrasher be appointed. Mr. Moore seconded the amendment.

Mr. Woodley spoke in support of Miss Fleming being passed around amongst the teachers.

Col. Ponton—We should get the best examiner we can get, a teacher of the best qualifications. This was a material matter. Miss Fleming is an active teacher.

Mr. Bailey said that he had been spoken to in reference to this appointment.

Upon a vote being taken, Mr. Thrasher was appointed.

MOTION

Moved by Col. Ponton, seconded by Mr. Sneyd, that this Board request the Principals of all the schools to take an inventory or census of their respective schools with a view of ascertaining the number of pupils who are able, competent, and willing to cultivate and care for vegetable gardens during the coming spring and summer, and to report to this Board at a special meeting to be held during the first week in April, with a view of concerted and organized action in co-operation with this Board, and that this Board do appropriate the sum of $25 for prizes to be apportioned by a Committee of the Board for the best work to be done by the pupils during the season in this connection.

Col. Ponton spoke in support of the motion, which he contended, would accomplish much good.

Mr. H. Sneyd spoke in favor of the Board, offering a prize for the best vegetables raised.

The motion was adopted after being amended so as to strike out having a special meeting of the Board, and instead, referring the matter to a special committee of the Board, consisting of Messrs. Mallory, McGie, Sneyd, Deacon and Ponton.

ENQUIRIES

Col. Ponton enquired if all the chattels in the High School were insured.

Mr. Diamond—Yes. All are insured.

Mr. Bailey asked who had the key of the old No. 2 School. The soldiers had left the building and boys were going in and out of it. It should be inspected to see how it was left.

Mr. Diamond, Secretary of the Board, said he had no key, and did not know where it was.

Board adjourned.

TAKES THRONE CONDITIONALLY

Grand Duke Michael Accepts The Throne Of Russia Only Upon Consent of People

Special to The Intelligencer.

LONDON, March 17.—The Grand Duke Michael has accepted the throne of Russia conditional upon the consent of the Russian people, according to a statement received here today from a semi-official Russian News Agency. The statement says that Grand Duke Michael Alexandrovitch, accepting the throne from his brother, declares that he does so only with the consent of the Russian people, who should by a plebiscite establish a new form of Government and new fundamental laws.

ZEPPELIN WAS SHOT DOWN

French Anti-Aircraft Guns Sent Enemy Machine Crashing to the Ground

Special to The Intelligencer.

PARIS, March 17.—A Zeppelin has been shot down in flames near Compiegne. The whole crew perished. The Zeppelin was sighted shortly before dawn and was reached by French anti-aircraft guns at a great height, probably three miles. The airship caught fire and the wreckage with the burned bodies fell outside Compiegne.

PERMISSION TO TRENTON

To Exempt a Company and Close Certain Streets

TORONTO, March 16.—The town of Trenton's application to grant aid to the British Chemical Company, Ltd., by granting exemption from all taxes, except school taxes, to pay $10,000 towards the purchase of the site for works of the company and to close certain streets laid out on the plant site was granted on condition that a clause should be inserted by which all property owners should be compensated who were holding land where the streets would be.

GENERAL PEACE MOVE

Washington Thinks War is Drawing to a Close

WASHINGTON, Mar. 16.—A general peace move will be launched within three or four months, according to views of diplomats and officials here. Many factors are working to bring the war to a close, in the opinion of close observers, including the acute food situation, unrest among the peoples, possibility of any one of the warring nations breaking suddenly under the military strain, and a belief in some quarters that neither side can achieve an overwhelming victory such as would force a strictly military peace.

WOMEN TO HAVE MUNICIPAL VOTE

TORONTO, March 16.—Women with the necessary proper qualifications were given the right to vote at municipal elections at the meeting of the Municipal Committee at the Parliament Buildings today. The bill of J. W. Johnson to that effect was reported to the House. Hitherto, widows and unmarried women only have had the franchise. The bill provides that the husband may be deputed by his wife to vote in her stead when her notice thereof is given to the assessor.

GERMANS IN CHINA HANDED PASSPORTS

Latter "for Protection While Leaving Chinese Territory"

PEKIN, March 17—The German Minister to China and his staff and also all the German Consuls in the country have been handed their passports.

A note accompanying the passports explained that the German reply to China's ultimatum severing relations was unsatisfactory. The passports, the note added, were "for protection while leaving Chinese territory."

CHURCH MYSTERIOUSLY DAMAGED BY FIRE

KINGSTON, March 17—The First Congregational Church suffered serious damage in a mysterious fire yesterday morning. The caretaker on his rounds found a fierce fire blazing in the cellar stairway. As there are no electric wires close at hand, and as there had been no fire in the furnace since Sunday, Fire Chief Armstrong is puzzled to know what caused the fire.

Unless Future Events Prevent Russia Has To-day Become a Republic

Special to The Intelligencer.

PETROGRAD, March 17—Unless improbable events occur Russia has today become a republic. The outcome depends on how the manifesto of the new Government is received by six millions of soldiers at the front. It was rumored here last night that the Grand Duke Alexis, the little son of the Emperor was dead.

NO LAND FOR ENEMY IN WESTERN CANADA

OTTAWA, March 17—Special—An Order-in-Council has been passed providing that no person of enemy nationality may acquire any lands, power rights, or other benefits from the Dominion lands in western Canada for the duration of the war and there after, until otherwise ordered. It is further provided that if any company now holding lands, leases, etc., in these areas becomes in any way subject to foreign control, or ceases to be a British company, without the formal consent of the Minister of the Interior, its rights, patents, etc., held under the Crown shall be cancelled.

GEN. MAUDE'S ARMY OCCUPIES BAKUBAH

Turkish Forces Are Continuing to Retreat Up the Tigris River

LONDON, March 17—Special—A despatch from Lieut-Gen Maude today says that the British forces have occupied the town of Bakubah, thirty miles north of Bagdad, and that the Turks continue to fall back.

TWO MEN CRUSHED TO DEATH IN GRAVEL PIT

ORILLIA, March 17—By the caving in yesterday afternoon of McCardell's gravel pit at Forgeval, Orillia township, two men lost their lives. Colin Lovering, aged thirty-five, resided at Lawson, in Matchedash township. Henry Durnford, aged seventeen, was a son of William Durnford, living near Fesserald. Both were killed instantly. Some other workmen were extricated without injury. Coroner Boyd of Coldwater, was notified, and viewed the scene of the accident, after which the bodies were taken home.

Casualties Among Canadian Troops

Killed—W. McKinstry, Peterboro, W. W. Hanson, Campbellford; Thos. Butler, Perth.

Died.—H. McAfee, Deseronto.

Wounded.—A. C. McDonald, Trenton; A. H. Pomeroy, Port Hope; F. Brooks, Milford; E. H. Hudson, Belleville; E. J. Bateson, Trenton.

BAPAUME TAKEN BY THE BRITISH

Special to The Intelligencer.

LONDON, March 17—Bapaume on the French-Belgian front has been captured by the British, Reuter's Agency announces.

ATTACKS ON ENGLISH COAST COUNTIES RESUMED BY ZEPS

LONDON, March 17—Special—An air raid on the south-eastern counties of England, took place last Friday night, and was still in progress early this morning, according to an official communication issued at 12.30 o'clock. The official statement says:

"Hostile airships attacked the south-eastern counties last night. Bombs have been dropped in the County of Kent. The raid is still in progress. A further communication will be issued as soon as anything occurs."

Earlier in the day a hostile aeroplane dropped bombs on Westgate, close to Margate. There were no casualties, and the material damage was small.

DEMAND FOR POPULAR GOVERNMENT FULLY MET

Chaos Transformed Into Order at Russian Capital—Appeal of New Government to People—Election is Stated At—A Mighty Overturning

PETROGRAD, March 17—Special—Emperor Nicholas abdicated at midnight Thursday night on behalf of himself and the heir-apparent, Grand Duke Alexis, and transferred the throne to his brother, Grand Duke Michael Alexandrovitch.

At 2.30 o'clock yesterday afternoon Grand Duke Michael himself abdicated, thus transferring the Romanoff dynasty to an end.

The Governments pending a meeting of the Constitutional Assembly, is vested in the Executive Committee of the Duma and the newly chosen Council of Ministers. A manifesto to this effect was issued by the Duma Committee yesterday, telegraphed to the General Army Headquarters last night.

BURNED TO DEATH IN PATHETIC ACCIDENT

Arnprior Woman Was Standing at Stove When Dress Caught Fire

ARNPRIOR, Mar. 16—On Tuesday Miss Annie Campbell, a most esteemed and well known resident of Pakenham, lost her life in a peculiar manner. While emptying the floor sweepings into the stove, the flame thus caused seemed to have suddenly caught up, igniting the unfortunate woman's clothing, which was soon a mass of flames. Becoming excited she rushed into the front part of the house, where her brother, John Campbell endeavored in vain to extinguish the flames with his hands. From the burning pieces of clothing the carpet also took fire, and it was with the greatest difficulty that the house was saved from destruction. So severely burned was the unfortunate woman that she died soon afterward. Miss Campbell was in her forty-eight year, and had resided with her brother on the 9th concession of Pakenham for some time.

CAPTAIN'S GREAT LUCK

LONDON, March 16—Thornton D. Hooper, of Arcadia, of Philadelphia, left that port for Europe seven months ago as captain of the sailing vessel Gold Crown, jointly owned by himself and his father.

The ship was in a collision with another vessel in British waters, and had great difficulty in making port. For five months Capt. Hooper waited to have his claims adjusted. In the meantime he received an offer of $220,000 for his damaged vessel. He closed, the bargain, which is said to represent three times more than he and his father paid for the vessel.

He also received what is said to be a very substantial sum for damages,

Tributes Paid In Legislature

To the Late Duchess of Connaught and Thomas C. Carscallen

TORONTO, March 16—Premier Hearst and N. W. Rowell, K.C., leader of the Opposition, paid graceful tributes in the Legislature Friday afternoon to the memory of the late Duchess of Connaught and Thomas C. Carscallen, M. P. for Lennox, whose death occurred yesterday morning.

The desk at which the late member for Lennox had occupied as late as Friday afternoon last was heavily draped. Before the orders of the day were called Premier Hearst arose to express the sympathy of those with the families bereaved. Mr. Carscallen, he said, was a man of well balanced mind and good judgment and devoted himself with conscientiousness to his duties.

The Legislature, the Premier said, had also learned with deep regret of the death of the Duchess of Connaught. The late Duchess had, during her stay in Canada, endeared herself to the people of the whole Dominion.

Mr. Rowell joined with the Premier in the expression of sympathy.

FURTHER RETIREMENT OF THE GERMANS

Special to The Intelligencer.

BERLIN, March 17.—Further retirement of the German forces on the western front between Sailly and St. Pierre Vaast wood, also between Beauvraignes and Langny was announced today by the War Office.

ABDICATION MANIFESTO HAS BEEN DELIVERED TO SUBJECTS OF RUSSIA

Special to The Intelligencer.

PETROGRAD, March 17.—The Emperor's abdication manifesto reads: "In the day of a great struggle against a foreign foe who has been striving for three years to enslave our country, God has wished to send to Russia a new and painful trial. Interior troubles threaten to have fatal repercussion on the final outcome of the war. The destinies of Russia and the honor of our dear fatherland require that the war be prosecuted at all costs to a victorious end. The cruel enemy is making his last effort, and the moment is near when our valiant army, in concert with those of our glorious Allies, will definitely chastise the foe. In these days decisive in the life of Russia we believe our people should have the closest union and organization of all their forces for the realization of a speedy victory.

For this reason, in accord with the Duma of the Empire we have considered it advisable to abdicate the throne of Russia and lay aside our supreme power. Not wishing to be separated from our loved son we leave our heritage to our brother, Michael, to invest to the throne of Russia. We hand over the Government to our brother in full union with the representatives of the nation who are seated in Legislative chambers taking this step with inviolable oath in the name of our well beloved country. We call on all faithful sons of the Fatherland to fulfil their sacred, patriotic duty in this painful moment of national trial, and to aid our brother and representatives of the nation in bringing Russia into a path of prosperity and glory. May God aid Russia!"

ASSAULT CASE SETTLED

Yasko Vennock, a foreigner of Point Ann, was this morning before Police Magistrate Masson, charged with assaulting Pete Pasmakos, a fellow-countryman. A settlement concurred in by both parties was effected and the two men left the court room as good friends. Mr. Carnew represented the complainant and Mr. Mikel, K. C., for defendant.

FRECKLES
March Brings Out Unsightly Spots. How to Remove Easily

The woman with tender skin dreads March because it is likely to cover her face with ugly freckles. No matter how thick her veil, the sun and winds have a strong tendency to make her freckle.

Fortunately for her peace of mind the prescription othine—double strength, makes it possible for even those most susceptible to freckles to keep their skin clear and white. No matter how stubborn a case of freckles you have, the double strength othine should remove them.

Get an ounce from your druggist and banish the freckles. Money back if it fails.

Birthday Party At Bridge Street

Large Company Sit Down at Tables Representing Ages—No One Supposed to be Over Twenty-five Years

The Ladies' Aid Society of Bridge Street presented last evening a unique and most delightful entertainment called a Birthday Party.

The room was appropriately decorated, f in a prominent position was placed a large cake, upon which twenty-five candles were placed, signifying the ages of the guests. No one was presumed to be older than twenty-five years. Twelve tables were arranged, upon each of which was placed decorations suitable for month the table represented. It would be impossible to describe the various decorations. January table, had a silver stork, and a tiny baby, representing the first month. The stork was from a Japanese temple. March, of course, had the beautiful Shamrock. July, Dominion Day; June garlands of roses; May, the May pole; September, a school house and children; November, beautiful maple leaves with their autumnal tints; December, Father Christmas, evergreens from which depended icicles; August, sheaves of golden grain; October, a shock of corn and various vegetables; February, Valentine Day; April, Easter lilies and little chicks.

The musical programme was of a very high character. Dr. Hunt presided at the organ with his usual grace. Mrs. Singer, Mrs. Duff, Mrs. Grant were in excellent voice, and charmed the audience. Mr. Clark and Mr. Lott sang two fine songs. Miss Young and Miss Stafford rendered recitations most successfully.

Constipated Children

Constipation is one of the most common ailments of childhood and the child suffering from it cannot thrive. To keep the little one well the bowels must be kept regular and the stomach sweet. To do this nothing can equal Baby's Own Tablets. Concerning them Mrs. Romain Poirier, Mizonette, N. B., says:—"My baby suffered from constipation but thanks to Baby's Own Tablets he is perfectly well again." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Canada's War Loans Compared With Australia's

Sister Dominion Subscribed Two Hundred and Eighty-five Millions in Year

If the Canadian people successfully absorb the third domestic war loan they will have subscribed to $350,000,000. This is a large sum of money, especially for a people to raise who have not learned in any great measure the advantages of and facilities for investing in home bonds. In order to assure success every one who possibly can will have to get behind the issue and to get behind means to subscribe. It would lia is placed alongside of that of Canada, it will be seen that the sister country has nothing of which to be ashamed. The amount subscribed to the first three internal war loans raised in Australia, within a period of thirteen months, aggregated $184,495,091, which was considered a creditable achievement for a population of less than five million people.

REQUESTED TO QUIT.

PETROGRAD, March 17—Special—The Czar, after being stopped at Bologoe, turned aside to Bukoff, where, according to last reports, he still remains with a small neutral guard. The alternative offered him was abdication or deposition. The Empress remains for the present in the Royal Palace. The Commandant of the Palace gave a Duma representative his word of honor that she would not attempt to escape.

West Hastings M. P. P. Praised By The Ladies

Mr. J. W. Johnson's Efforts to Secure Feminine Vote Receives Favorable Comment

From "hither and yon" in The Picton Times, we clip the following regarding the stand taken by our gallant member for West Hastings, in the Ontario Legislature, for extending the ballot to the women. Mr. Johnson's efforts are in every sense worthy the pulse of the writer, who, we are informed, is a talented Picton lady.

Many ladies which desirous to secure from those who were present in the Legislative Assembly, when Mr. J. W. Johnson's bill for womanhood suffrage was voted on, are most interested in. One writer closely in touch with the feeling of the "House" says "the unanimity on the subject prevailing everyone on both side of politics," adding—the scene in the House at that time was one of the most impressive in its history. The enthusiasm of the great crowd, dominated the atmosphere, their hearts were thrilled with emotion at the constitutional change in our country's laws which would particularly affect the women's interests in the future. Mr. Johnson's speech in introducing the bill was heard with great satisfaction and the women of Ontario are really indebted to this kindly clever gentleman for years of effort on their behalf. His championship of equal franchise privileges for all "persons" is appreciated sincerely, as is that of all the other members who also voted for the bill possible. Mr. Johnson is one of Belleville's representatives in Parliament, and father of Mrs. Keith Hepburn of this town.

Mr. E. Tennyson Smith Makes Address in Behalf of Temperance

The Tabernacle Methodist Church Schoolroom was crowded last night to hear Mr. E. Tennyson Smith's lecture on "The People versus the Liquor Traffic."

The Rev. Dr. Moore presided and expressed his great pleasure in welcoming so eminent a speaker to their church and said the size of the audience was a fine tribute to his powers.

Mr. T. S. Morris of Hamilton, said a few words in behalf of the Royal Ten-

Twenty-Five Cents a Day spent for the right kind of food will keep a man in good health, fit for any task. Two Shredded Wheat Biscuits, served with hot milk, make a complete, perfect meal at a cost of four or five cents—a meal that supplies in digestible form every element needed to build new tissue and furnish heat and energy for the human body. At twenty-five cents a day for three meals there is a margin of ten cents for fruit or green vegetables. Such a diet means a clean stomach, healthy liver, active bowels. COST OF LIVING,

If It Is "High," Is It the Fault of the Woman?

PLEA FOR BUSINESS SYSTEM.

Instead of Cheerfully Paying For Unwarranted Raises in Food Necessaries, Why Not Ask Your Dealer For the Reason?

Woman is blamed for everything sooner or later. Starting with that affair of the apple and through all the intermediate ages, the charge that "she did it" pops up every little while.

Among the many accusations brought against the twentieth century woman is her responsibility for the high cost of living. Tea, really!

No one has actually come out and accused her of boosting prices, but the way it wounds because of her lack of interest in the matter in a broad sense and her inertia about adopting preventive measures, they claim that just so long as woman shops in her present careless fashion, taking the dealer's word about the weight, quality and value of her purchase, so long will she be exploited by the unscrupulous.

For instance, if a woman would make it her business to know the legal weight of all dry measures, she would not stop at thinking that the last bunch of potatoes she bought looked light. She would know the exact weight, according to accurate scales, and would let the dealer know she knows. She would not be content with making the outrageous number of clinkers in her last ton of coal the subject of ten talk with her neighbor. She would have her coal dealer on the mat and remind him that she had paid him for coal to be burned, not for stones to clog her grates and choke her fires.

She would read the labels on all packaged goods, know exactly how many pounds or ounces each package contained and consider whether she would gain or lose, in quality and quantity by purchasing the same goods in bulk. In short, she would be on the job and would run her marketing on a business basis, and, once converted action would put a stop to the, in many cases, unwarranted increase in price of the necessaries of life.

There remains, however, just enough truth in the accusation to make her sit up and take notice and own to herself that a better knowledge of market quotations, a little more businesslike attention to the details of purchasing on her part might make things easier all around. The idea is worth considering, anyway.

CHARLES R. WEESE

Yesterday afternoon the remains of the late Mr. Charles R. Weese were place in the Belleville Cemetery vault, after services had been conducted at the family residence, North Front street. Rev. C. G. Smith, Pastor of the Baptist Church and Rev. A. L. Geen conducted the services. Upon the casket were placed a number of floral tributes. The bearers were Messrs John Thompson, W. J. Andrews, R. Tulte, Frank Rutherford, C. Moore and James Woodley.

W. Bryan is now advising every one to put a hen in the backyard.

Canada's Fighters Filmed.

Every man, woman and child through the length and breadth of Canada should make a point of seeing the latest war films from the Canadians from the battlefront than any preceding films of the kind. These wonderful scenes from the Canada's battlefront bring vividly home to the audience what is going on in the war. One scene shows German shells bursting in plain sight on our trenches while the gas and smoke generate gains inexorably on our Fritz's wanted to know what a real place clear at hand. Marvellously realistic, too, are the tanks, every portion of them in plain view, as with big guns manipulating they pursue their course over all obstacles.

Canada's movie pictures from the front have no superior. Canada's movie photographers have no rivals in daring. Some of the pictures were taken in the heat of battle. Where the air was literally full of flying death, and the operator in terrible danger every moment. Imagine standing on the No Man's Land in an action, "screening" the advancing soldiers, sniping Hun prisoners, the while shells burst in close proximity and bullets "whip-lash" rain in showers! Perched on the top of a parapet, sitting in a shell-hole, manipulating an instrument which the Huns is as likely as not to take for a machine gun and act accordingly, is the portion of these daring movie men. Pictures work at such times is really more dangerous than that of the soldiers themselves.

Rights to these films taken under the auspices of Sir Max Aitken's department, the Canadian War Records Office, were sold by Sir Max for $20,000 cash, which sum he turned over to the Canadian War Memorial Fund. This purchase sum it has been arranged that the company may recover from the profits, but after its reimbursement, the film company is required to give any profits over and above working expenses to the above named fund

One shows "gap" Other fits close

On the other hand, a W. G. & R. collar retains its close fit for the following reasons:—

1st—Because the inside buttonhole (see 1 in illustration) is a fraction of an inch higher than the outside buttonhole. This makes the collar button act as a lever and exert a steady upward pressure on the hook end (see 3) making a tight lock at the top of the collar.

2nd—Because it has our "Slip On" buttonhole (see 2) on the outside tab. Thus, when buttoning the outside tab, the collar slides easily into place, the post of the collar button coming to the top of the "Slip On" buttonhole, making it impossible for the collar to spread. It must stay close at the top.

These exclusive features of W. G. & R. collars are sure to be appreciated by your and other particular dressers.

THE NEW WAR LOAN.

And The High Cost of Living.

It is possible that there are few people in Canada who realize that the New War Loan has a far-reaching effect upon the question of the high cost of living. If, for example, it were possible for the war to be financed merely by our great financial institutions and financial magnates, in other words, by the very large subscriptions, the result would be disastrous. It would mean a mere enlargement of credit and a rise in the cost of living all round, while these causes would, in their turn, be aggravated by the fact that the individual, having contributed nothing in the way of subscriptions or economy, would be contributing by his or her expenditure to the further rise in these prices and to a yet greater expansion in credit.

If, on the other hand, when the subscription list to the present loan close some days hence, it is found that the great majority of Canadians have taken an active part in lending to the Government, not only shall we have raised a total, the moral effect of which will be great at this important crisis in our history, but we shall have achieved something else. In the first place we shall have taken a step in the direction of personal economy which will benefit both the country and the individual, while just as the common fellowship of self-sacrifice has knit together those who are actually fighting for the Empire on land or on sea, so those of us who are at home will also be drawn more closely together by the common bond of united effort and—to the extent that we really economize—by a mutual bond of self-sacrifice.

As to the merits of the loan itself as an investment, they are sufficient to speak for themselves. The people of Canada have long since come to the conclusion that the stupendous conflict in which we are engaged is of such a character that for us all there is now only one really profitable investment in the whole world, namely, the future welfare of the British Empire. And the welfare of the Empire depends first, upon the brave men who are fighting for it; and, in the second place, upon the men and women at home who are working for it, and who are now responding to the call of duty in lending to the nation what is required in the way of funds to secure a conclusive victory and a lasting peace.

The call now gone forth is one which no loyal Canadian and true British subject dare refuse to hear and answer.

BI-LINGUALISM IN SASKATCHEWAN UNDER LIBERAL RULE.

"The "Melville" Canadian," a journal published in Melville, Saskatchewan, of March 7th inst., gives the following account of bi-lingualism in that Province, from which it will be seen what strides foreign languages are being substituted for that of the English. Is it not about time for the English-speaking people of that Province to bestir themselves, and teach these German and Austrian settlers that they are living in British territory and enjoying the liberties of free institutions, and that such conduct as they are exhibiting will not be tolerated. The Canadian says:

"Never probably in the history of Canada, or the British Dominions, has anything so audacious been perpetrated as those things that were accomplished at the Provincial Convention of the School Trustees at Regina last week.

"A resolution was presented to the Convention in which the Government was requested to supply a uniform system of school readers in the English language in view of the French, German and bi-lingual readers at present authorized by the Department. However, P. M. Prisco, of Bush Lake, introduced an amendment to table the motion and the amendment was carried by a vote of 200 to 221, and this naturally shelved the language question for another year. Subsequently, the mover of the amendment became the hero of the gathering, and was elected as the President for the ensuing year, thus disclosing that the majority of the trustees had very little use for British institutions and ideals.

"Further, we desire to refer to the resolution which has been adopted by the Sons of England Benefit Society of Regina, and a copy of which has been sent to Premier Martin, in which it is stated 'that the use of the English language has been absolutely discontinued in twelve school districts in favor of the Austrian and German languages, and further, that in one school the day's work is commenced by the scholars singing the 'Austrian National Anthem.'

"The packing or the executive with men of alien nationality is a direct challenge to the English-speaking people of this Province, and if we have any regard for British traditions we will unhesitatingly organize for the overthrow of this pernicious custom, regardless of politics, which has been tolerated in our midst by men who ought to be ashamed of themselves. If we allow things of this nature to go unchecked we will have a greater menace proportionately by this Province of Saskatchewan than Germany has ever been to the European powers."

These foreigners enjoy the franchise in Saskatchewan and all vote Grit, hence no reform on the school question may be expected from the Liberal Government of that Province.

HANDS OFF IRELAND.

Friends in Canada, and their number is legion, will view with apprehension attempts that are being made in certain quarters to inter-ject the Home Rule controversy into Dominion politics. Resolutions calling upon Sir Robert Borden to champion the causes of a section of the Irish people can hardly have the effect of doing good. We can conceive, on the other hand, how they might be productive of great harm. First of all Canadians, whatever their views in respect to Home Rule, should remember that the question is one which, under the consitution of the Empire, can be finally dealt with exclusively by the British Parliament. Interference by Canadian statesmen would in itself be a denial of the primary principles of self-government with which the Irish controversy is concerned; it would be resented by a portion of Irish public opinion; it would set a precedent in Imperial relations which might not be a good thing; and, in the end, because of the very nature of the Home Rule problem could only result in harmful futility.

Then, there is the question of Sir Robert Borden's mandate to deal with such a subject at all. We do not know what is the personal opinion of the Prime Minister in respect to Home Rule. We do not even know that he has formed any pertinent opinion on the question at all. We do know that he has no mandate from the Canadian people to interfere in such a controversy, and, having none, should not reasonably be expected to interfere.

Nor can any sensible person doubt the unwisdom of introducing such an issue into our domestic politics already too heavily burdened with strife. In Canada today the men of Ulster and the men of Munster work side by side for the common good of the country. By showing that it is possible for the Irishman of the North and the Irishman of the South to live in concord and harmony they are helping to remove one of the greatest of all obstacles in the way of Ireland's unity. Surely he would be a false friend of Ireland who would take such a step as might endanger the continued existence of that example of Irish harmony so capable of working good.

Count Stephen Tisza Whose Political Motto Is "All For the State"

COUNT STEPHEN TISZA, Minister-President of Hungary, has been alternately the most hated and the most loved man in his nation. Out in the Balkans, they blame him for what the rest of the world brands the Kaiser. Stamped in Machiavellian lore, "all for the state," he has for years been one of the most fascinating and perhaps sinister Wills in European statecraft.

Eleven years ago, January 5, 1905, after a long political deadlock and an extremely reactionary extra-parliamentary regime of the Tisza Government in Hungary, all the opposition parties united, mobbed the parliament, passed the military guard, and demanded Tisza's resignation. His Ministers resigned hastily. None came to take their places, and until June 17, when King Franz Joseph privately dismissed him, he ruled Hungary iron-handed and alone. Letters by the thousand threatened him, revolution muttered in the streets of Budapest, assassination was several times attempted, he was spit on by the crowds that feared at him. And yet when he retired, even the Opposition granted he was the most courageous man in the country.

He came back on June 19, 1912, still distrusted and disliked by Liberal and by pro-Russian Magyars, and for the greater part of the time up until August, 1914, his life was not safe on the streets. In August, 1914, students and populace hailed him, bands played under his windows, adoring crowds followed him in the town, old Kossuth songs were revived in his honor. The steering-gear of Austro-Hungary was in his hand. Not since Count Andrassy's day, and not even then, had a Hungarian statesman been so dominant in the Dual Monarchy. It was known that his had been the hand to pen the dictatorial note to Serbia, and his popularity continued because, it is now known that his were not the changes, but Count Berchtold's and Count Forgach's, which made the note too severe for Serbia's stomach-ing. For Count Tisza is Diametrically enough to have cautiously counted the cost.

His father before him, Count Kalman Tisza, led Hungary for eighteen uninterrupted years, and trained his son consistently for statesmanship. Count Stephen Tisza arrived not by accident. He comes rather being the only statesman in the Dual Monarchy with courage, experience, resourcefulness, and indomitable health. Garbed always in gloomy black, courteous but abrupt, dry and brief, he is not a come-hither figure. He looks a bit like Martin Luther, and he has the most celebrated racing stables in Hungary. Tall, almost gaunt, his grey hair is cropped cruelly close. His eyes are pale grey and jade-seeing. His face arrests you, the stern bones of the forehead and cheek, the straight, thin lips. He militarry carriage of his neck. No one recalls having seen him smile for years. And yet he is witty, upon occasion.

A member of the consular corps at Budapest remembers discussing some little affair with him at a ball. Ago. Both gentlemen kept their tempers and both were very much irritated. When he got home from the interview, the consular officer found a huge basket of fruit there before him "to make it up." Another remembers a Tisza sally during the embarrassing salt scandal of 1912, when the then Minister-President Ladislaus de Lukacs, (gurchead for Tisza, was being fatally found out for his part in selling the salt monopoly. The Liberal papers called it spending booty when Mr. de Lukacs gave an official dinner to two hundred persons. The Balkan war was in progress, and the table at which Mr. de Lukacs and Count Tisza and the consular corps were seated gave it-self over to a neutral display of national foods. The French Consul suggested that Hungarian foods were excellent, but perhaps rather piquant. Count Tisza spoke for the first time, glancing at Mr. de Lukacs: "Monsieur finds them perhaps too salty." The hit reached himself, at last, for his own brilliant mind had suggested the Salt Panama largely to provide campaign funds for his party, the National Working party.

On Count Stephen Tisza depends any move that Austria may make for separate peace.

"The plow is our hope," declared Right Hon. David Lloyd George, the Prime Minister of Great Britain. The tremendous significance of these words in the face of a world shortage of food must be a matter of concern to all. It points out the path of duty to men and boys unable to enlist in the army but capable of helping to increase production.

Help the farmer increase production

At this supreme hour when ample food production is one of the indispensable means of victory, the country faces a serious shortage of men and boys on the farms. The Department of Agriculture emphasizes the urgency of every man and boy taking to heart this splendid opportunity for patriotic service.

Boys Decide now to help in the war. If you are between the ages of 14 and 18, still have good term record, you can secure promotion at school by enlisting for farm service any time between April 20th and May 20th.

Parents are urged to encourage their boys to enlist for farm service. The physical fitness and moral welfare of your boy will be advanced by a summer spent close to Nature; an interest will be awakened in agriculture, industry of the country that will be a help to him in his whole future.

Men The Department appeals to retired farmers, to men of independent means, to business men, that they can spare at least a portion of their time, to all men who can arrange their affairs so as to help some farmer. Every man is invited to enlist for farm service.

INTEREST PAYABLE HALF-YEARLY, 1st MARCH, 1st SEPTEMBER.

PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST PAYABLE IN GOLD.

ISSUE PRICE 96.

A FULL HALF-YEAR'S INTEREST WILL BE PAID ON 1st SEPTEMBER, 1917.

THE PROCEEDS OF THE LOAN WILL BE USED FOR WAR PURPOSES ONLY.

10 per cent on application;
30 " 16th April, 1917;
30 " 15th May, 1917;
26 " 15th June, 1917.

The total allotment of bonds of this issue will be limited to one hundred and fifty million dollars, exclusive of the amount (if any) paid for by the surrender of bonds as the equivalent of cash under the terms of the War Loan prospectus of 22nd November, 1915.

The instalments may be paid in full on the 16th day of April, 1917, or on any instalment due date thereafter, under discount at the rate of four per cent per annum. All payments are to be made to a chartered bank for the credit of the Minister of Finance. Failure to pay any instalment when due will render previous payments liable to forfeiture and the allotment to cancellation.

Subscriptions, accompanied by a deposit of ten per cent of the amount subscribed, must be forwarded through the medium of a chartered bank. Any branch in Canada of any chartered bank will receive subscriptions and issue provisional receipts.

This loan is authorized under Act of the Parliament of Canada, and both principal and interest will be a charge upon the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Forms of application may be obtained from any branch in Canada of any chartered bank and at the office of any Assistant Receiver General in Canada.

Subscriptions must be for even hundreds of dollars.

In case of partial allotments the surplus deposit will be applied towards payment of the amount due on the April instalment.

Scrip certificates, non-negotiable or payable to bearer in accordance with the choice of the applicant for registered or bearer bonds, will be issued, after allotment, in exchange for the provisional receipts.

When the scrip certificates have been paid in full and payment endorsed thereon by the bank receiving the money, they may be exchanged for bonds, when prepared, with coupons attached, payable to bearer or registered as to principal, or for fully registered bonds, when prepared, without coupons, in accordance with the application.

Delivery of scrip certificates and of bonds will be made through the chartered banks.

The issue will be exempt from taxes—including any income tax—imposed in pursuance of legislation enacted by the Parliament of Canada.

The bonds with coupons will be issued in denominations of $100, $500, $1,000. Fully registered bonds without coupons will be issued in denominations of $1,000, $5,000 or any authorized multiple of $5,000.

The bonds will be paid at maturity at par at the office of the Minister of Finance and Receiver General at Ottawa, or at the office of the Assistant Receiver General at Halifax, St. John, Charlottetown, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Regina, Calgary or Victoria, or at the Agency of the Bank of Montreal, New York City.

The interest on the fully registered bonds will be paid by cheque, which will be remitted by post. Interest on bonds with coupons will be paid on surrender of coupons. Both cheques and coupons, at the option of the holder, will be payable free of exchange at any branch in Canada of any chartered bank, or at the Agency of the Bank of Montreal, New York City.

Subject to the payment of twenty-five cents for each new bond issued, holders of fully registered bonds without coupons will have the right to convert into bonds of the denomination of $1,000 with coupons, and holders of bonds with coupons of the denomination of $1,000 have the right to convert into fully registered bonds of authorized denominations without coupons at any time on application to the Minister of Finance.

The books of the loan will be kept at the Department of Finance, Ottawa.

Application will be made in due course for the listing of the issue on the Montreal and Toronto Stock Exchanges.

Recognized bond and stock brokers having offices and carrying on business in Canada will be allowed a commission of three-eighths of one per cent on allotments made in respect of applications bearing their stamp, provided, however, that no commission will be allowed in respect of the amount of any allotment paid for by the surrender of bonds issued under the War Loan prospectus of 22nd November, 1915, or in respect of the amount of any allotment paid for by surrender of five per cent debenture stock maturing 1st October, 1919. No commission will be allowed in respect of applications on forms which have not been printed by the King's Printer.

SUBSCRIPTION LISTS WILL CLOSE ON OR BEFORE THE 23rd OF MARCH, 1917.

"Nature" chose Assam

Scientists tell us that Assam in northern India was the original home of the tea plant. Thousands of years ago "Nature" chose the climate and soil of this favored region as most suitable for growing tea.

It is, therefore, natural that the hillside gardens of Assam (see picture) grow the teas which to-day are famous for their flavor, fragrance and rich strength.

It is of these Assam teas, skilfully blended with choice Ceylons, that Red Rose Tea consists. It is this rich Assam strength that users of Red Rose Tea must thank for its splendid economy—for the greater number of cups it yields to the pound, fully one-third more than ordinary teas.

To make certain that these Assam qualities are fully preserved for you we put Red Rose Tea into dust, odor and air proof sealed packages. Red Rose Tea reaches you pure, fresh and full strength—we guarantee it.

AMENDMENTS TO WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT IN LEGISLATURE

To Be Paid Out of the Accident Fund—Several Other Changes in the Act Will Come Up For Discussion

CHIEF AMENDMENTS

Medical, surgical, hospital and nursing expenses of injured workmen are to be paid for 30 days.

Employers are prohibited from collecting contributions from employees towards the cost of "first aid."

Upon the death of the widow, orphaned children under 10 years of age are to receive $10 a month.

Payments to invalid children are to continue as long after they are 16 as the Board may decide.

Regulations regarding children in case of death are to apply in cases where workingmen stood in the place of parents.

On account of its "first aid" provisions, the Government will increase its annual administration expenditures from $25,000 to $125,000.

TORONTO, March 15—Employees entitled to compensation for injury under the Workmen's Compensation Act are to have their medical expenses paid for thirty days. Such was the announcement made by the Attorney-General in the Legislature this afternoon in submitting the Government amendments to the Act. Hon. I. B. Lucas explained that it had been felt from the start that the outstanding weakness of the Act was the failure to make provisions for "first aid." The Act had been framed on the theory that medical aid was a contribution by the workman, and that the scale of compensation and the fact that there was no waiting period justified the Commissioner in omitting from his recommendations provisions for such aid.

Furnished by Board

After hearing representations from all interested parties and giving the matter considerations for over a year, the Government had reached its conclusions to extend the operations of the Act. Employers had claimed that there should be contributions for first aid from the envelope of the workman. Employes had strenuously opposed this. The Government considered that the Province had established the principle of medical or arranged for by the Workmen's Compensation Board, and paid for by the Board out of the accident fund. It will have full authority to tax the scale of charges on which is based as would properly have been paid by workmen, and if personally responsible for his little contribution as to the charges will be final.

Where an employer has established in connection with his industry an insurance scheme, providing first aid which in the opinion of the Commission is at least as favorable to the workmen as the provisions under the new Act, the Board after investigation and consideration of the scheme, may exempt the employer and the employe may prove arrangement. It is distinctly provided that it is unlawful for employers, directly or indirectly, to collect or retain contributions from any workingman towards the expenses of medical aid.

"The Government," the Attorney-General continued, "has authority under the statute to make a contribution in addition to the salaries or Commissioners of $100,000. Up to date, the Government has been paying only the salaries of the Commissioners, furnishing accommodation for them and paying $125,000 a year towards Administration expenses.

Nothing From Labor

"The Government proposes in view of the additional charges on the accident fund to undertake to pay the full $200,000 towards Administration expenses in addition to the salaries of Commissioners.

"The Government has not asked labor to pay anything for first aid and has not asked, the employers by undertaking to pay the total for account of Administration expenses of $125,000 a year."

There are other important amendments to the Act. In the case of death, the monthly payment to the widow of a workman is $15 for each child under 16. It is now provided that upon the death of the widow this amount shall be increased to $10. The regulations relating to the children in the case of death are further extended to cover children to whom the workman stood "in loco parentis." It is also provided that in the case of invalid children payments shall continue beyond the age of 16 years for such time as in the opinion of the Board it might reasonably be expected that the workmen lived, he would have continue to contribute to the support of the child.

Lloyd George On The Newspapers

(By Henry Dalby).

Lloyd George says he does not know whether to treat newspapers as a luxury, a comfort, a stimulous, a necessity or a nuisance in life, but he admits that they have been an enormous help in the effective waging of the war. The majority of them partake in varying degree of all the first four qualities; even the poor fellow who cannot read, regards the newspaper as a luxury, as comfort, a stimulous and a necessity, and likes to have it read to him. To a man with even so little education, the paper is a prime necessity. Life for him would be unthinkable without it. About the worst kind of snobbery is that which affects contempt for the press. Like everything else, newspapers are fairly open to criticism and journalists being quasi public servants are perhaps more properly liable to criticism than most people.

The gentleman who pretends that he can get along without the news of the day—and a good deal of it—is insincere and silly. There is now a business or profession that can be successfully carried on without the aid of the papers. They are the life and soul of statesmanship—and politics. The clergyman gets his live subjects, most of his inspirations and nearly all of his awful examples from the press. The schoolmaster gets more of his geographical knowledge from the war news and the war maps than he does from the atlases and the geographies. All the astronomers but one learn of the arrival of a comet first from the newspaper. Most of them would never know it had called upon us if it had not been mentioned in the Astronomical personal column. Finance would be paralyzed if there were no papers. The cotton and corn exchanges thrive upon a diet of news—some of it false. No merchant or tradesman could carry on business without knowing the news. The geologist, the mineralogist, the chemist can only bring their knowledge up to date by reading the papers.

Of course the British Premier was not serious when he raised the question of the usefulness of the press—he is a fellow of infinite jest, and enjoys a joke even at his own expense. His acknowledgment of the help of the press in waging the war shows that he is not stupid enough to despise it, or even to pretend to despise it. The average newspaper man is like the on the same basis at Fort William.

CATARRH IS DANGEROUS

DON'T LET IT MAKE YOU A WORN-OUT, RUN-DOWN WRECK

To be safe it should be treated promptly, consistently, taste and effect. Every morning refreshed and strong with head and throat clear and free from phlegm; are conditions that make life worth while.

No victim of catarrh can enjoy life as they should. The effects of this ravaging, disgusting disease are too plainly felt and yet, few people realize what a serious disease catarrh is.

It is more than a trifling ailment, more than a passing discomfort, catarrh is a dangerous condition. It may lead to many distressing complications such as clogged nostrils, a constant disagreeable taste in the mouth, loss of hearing, dull headaches or perhaps consumption.

Left to itself, catarrh slowly and surely undermines the general health. Being a disease of the blood, it should be treated as such.

HIGH PRICE FOR WHEAT

Western Farmers Want Guarantee of From $1.50 to $1.90 per Bu.

OTTAWA, Ont., March 16—Western farmers are willing to sell their wheat to the British Government, but they demand high prices. The Canadian Council of Agriculture has been in session since Tuesday at Regina considering the proposal of the British authorities to take the whole crop. Word came to Ottawa today that they ask a minimum of $1.50 and a maximum of $1.90 for No. 1 Northern at Winnipeg, or, failing that a flat price of $1.70 per bushel quoted as immediate audience with the Emperor.

Premier in at least one respect, he does not think any the worse of a joke because he is the victim of it. Only very raw recruits in the journalistic profession are blushe-faced.

Quite apart from considerations of business or professional interests, what must be the life of a man who really is a many pursed, get about, find out the help of a newspaper. His life must be about as interesting and only a little less exciting than that of a clam.

Other grades down from No. 1 would be valued according to milling and baking tests.

In Australia farmers are content with less. The entire wheat crop has been purchased by the British Government at from $1.13 to $1.16 per bushel.

It is stated that many things have to be taken into consideration in deciding whether the farmer should conclude any hard and fast price agreement before he puts his seed in the ground. The contingencies in view are the effect of the stoppage of the war on prices of foodstuffs and Atlantic transportation.

BERNSTORFF CRITICISED

LONDON, March 16—The German press has greeted Count Von Bernstorff with conspicuous coolness, according to an Amsterdam despatch to the Exchange Telegraph. The papers point out that he granted interviews which he should not have done without consulting the German Government. Von Bernstorff spent yesterday in conference with the Foreign Office, and was also received by the Imperial Chancellor. He requested an immediate audience with the Emperor.

NOW IT'S BELLEVILLE!

"The Beautiful City of the Bay," which comes forward with its burden of testimony for Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. Astonishing cures of nervous prostration and exhaustion, of weak heart action, nervousness and sleeplessness are being reported. Nearly everybody who feels the need of restorative treatment is now trying out this great food cure. These letters give you some idea of the splendid results obtained.

Heart Trouble

Mr. James Richards, 73 Dundas St., Belleville, Ont., writes: "I was suffering from a weakness of the heart, shortness of breath and frequent dizzy spells that used to force me to go and lie down for a time. I secured a box of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and received such splendid results that I got another box, and have it nearly all taken. I am now feeling fine and not troubled with dizziness any more."

Sleeplessness

Mrs. Joseph Champaigne, 36 Cedar St., Belleville, Ont., writes: "I suffered for years from nervousness, sleeplessness and weak spells. I had pains through the back, indigestion, and sometimes a buzzing sensation in my ears. I blame hard work and worry for placing me in that condition. I commenced the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and at the end of two weeks I noticed a difference. I continued the treatment and found that they cured sleeplessness, soothed my nerves and ceased the neuralgic pains. I am going to keep on taking them, because they have been of such benefit to me."

Baby Took Convulsions

Mrs. Capt. Smith, 92 John St., South, Belleville, Ont., writes: "From the age of one month my little son used to take convulsions, and would sometimes have as many as three or four convulsions in one day. We consulted doctors, but they could give us no hope of the boy's complete recovery. I saw in the newspapers that Dr. Chase's Nerve Food had helped many growing children who were affected with nervousness, so I commenced using it with him. From the time I started giving him the Nerve Food, Croft has had only two convulsions, and it is now two years since he has had any trouble at all. He has been going to school for three years, and is growing quite strong. I would most highly recommend Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to all people having children affected as was my son."

Exhausted Nerves

Mrs. Geo. Williams, 8 Centre Street, Belleville, Ont., writes: "About ten years ago I was on the verge of nervous prostration and had not had a good night's rest for two years. From reading some of the advertising in your pamphlets I was induced to try Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. I was very much run down, but after taking several boxes I found I could sleep well, and had my nerves under control. Although I am now strong and healthy, I always keep a box of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food in the house, and take great pleasure in recommending it to all my friends."

Run-Down System

Mrs. J. Frawley ,100 Cedar St., Belleville, Ont., writes: "About five years ago, while living in Cheboygan, Michigan, I was just recovering from an attack of diphtheria, and found myself terribly run down and suffering from nervousness. After reading the advertisements and knowing that it was greatly used in Cheboygan, I decided to try Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. I took a treatment, and soon found myself stronger and sleeping better. I have not used any since, but can cheerfully recommend Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to all suffering from nervousness and run-down system."

Paralysis

Mrs. C. Sinfield, 236 Moira W., Belleville, Ont., writes: "About fifteen years ago I was suffering from paralysis, and through the advice of a friend I was induced to try Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. I took a treatment, and found my condition greatly improved. I found that they also benefited me greatly for sleeplessness and nervousness. Now any time I am run of not feeling 'up to the mark' I use some Nerve Food, and have recommended it to many of my friends. Many people, hearing of the benefit I have received from it, come to me to make inquiries, and I always cheerfully recommend Dr. Chase's Nerve Food."

Nervousness—Result of Accident

Mrs. Louisa Bell, South John St., Belleville, writes: "I had a compound fracture of the thigh, and spent over nine weeks in the hospital, so that when I came home I was in a very nervous state. 'Having read of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food in the newspapers, I secured a box and took it. It helped me greatly, so I got another, and have derived great benefit from the treatment—an now able to get around and do my work. I would recommend Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to all people suffering from nervousness."

Now Sleeps Well

Mrs. G. W. Bennett, 182½ Front St., Belleville, Ont., writes: "Six years ago I was suffering so badly from nervousness and general run-down system that I would have to get up at night and walk around the room. I was advised, and persuaded to use Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, so I decided to give them a trial. After taking four boxes of the tablets I found myself greatly improved and sleeping well at night. Since that time, whenever I do not feel just up to the mark, I use a few pills, giving me good results. I am pleased to recommend the treatment of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to all suffering from nervousness and run-down system."

Presentation And Address

Tuesday evening, March 13th, provided an especial event in the lives of Mr. and Mrs. George Smith of the Second Line Thurlow, when a company of friends, desirous of bidding them a cordial, yet regrettable farewell prior to their leaving for a new home in Picton, gathered at the home of the couple, where a social evening was passed, the programme including the following numbers:

To Mr. and Mrs. George Smith:

We, your many friends and neighbors, have gathered together on this occasion for the purpose of expressing our sincere regret on your removal from our midst. We have found you brother and sister of honor and high principle, who realize that every church and community sustain the lives of your fellowship, we also feel that the community in which you are leaving a void will be distinctly enriched by your presence. We, your boors and friends we desire to pay tribute to the sterling character of your friendship and service. We are losing true friends and noble fellow-workers in the Master's Vineyard. In the various departments of thee church, your faithfulness has been unsurpassed and your services appreciated. The Ladies' Aid Society of Spencer's Church will feel the loss of Mrs. Smith's fellowship in worship and service. Your long years of residence have witnessed many changes in our midst, but through all the changing experiences of life, you have always been ready and active in any work or service of labor of love. It is a matter of sincere gratification that we can express our appreciation of worth and also th wish you much joy and happiness in your new home. We hope your later years may be crowned with your blessings, and that to your new home and surroundings you may find the true fellowship which you are so capable of rendering. We wish you to accept this slight token of universal respect and esteem and may it reflect pleasantly on the happy associations of former years.

Signed on behalf of your friends and neighbors.

Nervous Children

The Trouble is Often Really St. Vitus Dance, but Not Neglect it.

Many a child has been called awkward, has been punished in school for not keeping still or for dropping things when the trouble was really St. Vitus Dance. This disease may appear at any age, but is most common between the ages of six and fourteen years. It is caused by thin blood which fails to carry sufficient nourishment to the nerves, and the child becomes restless and cross, one of them nucles and jerking of the limbs and body follow. In severe cases the child is unable to hold any thing or feed itself. St. Vitus Dance be cured by building up the blood. The most successful treatment is to remove the child from all mental excitement, stop school work and give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. These pills renew the blood supply, strengthen the nerves, and restore the child to perfect health. Here is a proof of their power to cure. Mrs. S. Sharpe, Oakville, Ont., says:—"When my daughter was nine years old she was sent to a sanitorium where she remained for nine weeks without any benefit. Indeed when we brought her home she was helpless as a baby. I got a supply of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and continued giving her half a pill after each meal for several months, when she had fully recovered and has never had a symptom of the trouble since."

You can get Dr. Williams' Pills through any dealer in medicine or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Actor, Favorite Silent Drama

Legitimate Star's Objection Overcome When he Enters Studio

When Charles Richman, the prominent Vitagraph star in "The Secret Kingdom, which commences at Griffin's next Wednesday and Thursday night, finished his work in this Louis Joseph Vance serial, he asked what he thought of motion pictures, he answered. "I like them so well that I don't care if I never appear on the speaking stage again," and this in face of the fact that he was one of the best known leading men and matinee idols on the legitimate stage. Although his father and mother are native of New York State, Mr. Richman claims Chicago, Ill., as his "home town" and received his education in the public schools there. He also studied in the Chicago College of Law, but gave up Blackstone to betome an actor.

Determined with a steadfastness of purpose that would brook no defeat, he was soon established as an actor of merit and won a degree of distinction that attracted much attention.

His first big parts came as leading man with A. M. Palmer's Stock Company where his versatility, together with his natural talents attracted the attention of Augustus Daly, who signed him for an engagement as leading man in his famous stock company to play opposite Ada Rehan.

KITTEN HAS A ROLE IN MOVING DOES

REAL COMEDY WORK

Discovers the Difference Between Whipped Cream and Soap Suds.

There is an actor or actress nobody seems to know which—with Ann Pennington, the Famous Players production of "The Rainbow Girl" to be presented at Griffin's on Monday night. The name does not appear in the list of players, but who nevertheless, acted well. It is a kitten. In this production one of the women characters, acting as a child, and the kitten has a role in the scene. The kitten tries to play with the hard working, grown-up actress, on a handful of soap suds, rubbing the kitten's nose. Instead of soap suds the whipped cream was used, as to cause the kitten to eat the 'soap' and thus produce a laugh. Little Mr. or Miss Kitten, as the case may be—as the whipped cream all right, but the effect was produced, but the kitten took the stuff in, crept up the tub, which really contained cake batter, and tried to eat the soap suds. The result was evidently was so surprised at the difference in taste that it fell head first into the tub and was dragged out by the washwoman.

THE GIRL WHO SMILES AT GRIFFIN'S NEXT FRIDAY

The interest in the coming to this city next Friday night at Griffin's of "The Girl Who Smiles" is unusually keen, which from all accounts, is a most unusual musical comedy with a plot. A genuine construction as well as treatment, and a rollicking run of entertainment of this very description.

Besides having the merit of more than ordinary musical novelty, "The Girl Who Smiles" may be reported in the line of a most unusual and novel musical comedy with a plot. A genuine delineation, with scenes of grippling interest and heartfelt, and cannot abide sounds of youthful mirth in his household, and his daughter Marie, who has never been known to smile until she meets Jack Hamilton, Anello, a poor artist of the happy-go-lucky Latin Quarter, who teaches her the meaning of smiles.

Forced by her father into an unhappy engagement, Marie runs away to Bachelder's Island, where she becomes rounded by composers, artists, musicians, and other care-free, happy Bohemians, she learns the genuine art of smiling, and after a year or so turns up with her artist husband to her home to find that her father, enraged over the unfortunate match, has made his good-for-nothing son Paul, and still unmarried daughter, his heirs, and has become more hardened than ever, but Marie brings with her an infant whose tears and eyes resemble his grandfather's. There is a long struggle of emotion before Paul Fabre finally yields to paternal affection and allows his daughter's baby to soften his heart. This scene with the baby is a most unusual departure in the way of comedy.

There are twenty musical numbers in the score, every one of which have become among the most popular songs this year.

New York Judge Frees His Mind

Tells What Would Happen If Certain Acts Committed in America Were Perpetrated in Other Countries

(New York Sun)

"If a group of eleven men and women in the kingdom of Germany or the Kingdom of England or the republic of France today did as these persons did in the free United States of America on the night of June 1, 1916, they would be instantaneously, stood up against the wall and shot for high treason.

These were the words used by Judge McIntyre in the Court of General Sessions today when he denied the motions made by Bouck White, pastor of the Church of the Social Revolution, representing himself, and Bernard Raymond, representing ten members of White's congregation, on trial for burning the American flag at a ceremonial of their church.

After a trial lasting ten days, White and his follower failed to convince Judge McIntyre that they had been wrongly indicted for burning an American flag and the case will now be presented to the jury for their determination of the defendant's guilt or innocence.

The defence ended this morning with the calling of several witnesses to the good character and high motive purpose of White. Then motions to dismiss the indictments were made.

Judge McIntyre listed to hold that the act as passed by the Legislature is constitutional. Judge McIntyre said. "It is well under the very lenient laws of this country that when persons would dare to defy and defame the great principles for which the flag that they burned stands. These people would never dare this thing in Europe. There the nations would never permit their people to do such a thing without the extreme penalty for high treason being the punishment. Every one of these persons in the two acts committed on our shores. They have fled to this country, some for protection under the laws of liberty and the military duty; others because the Government at home meant terror and oppression to them.

Here they have been granted liberty and the right to earn a livelihood unmolested by militarism and imperialism. I will direct the clerk to collect the jury determine the guilt or innocence of these defendants. I will inflict punishment if they are found guilty."

Doctors Stand Amazed at Power of Bon-Opto to Make Weak Eyes Strong---According to Dr. Lewis

Guaranteed to Strengthen Eyesight 50% In One Week's Time in Many Instances

A Free Prescription You Can Have Filled and Use at Home

Philadelphia, Pa. Victims of eye strain and other eye weaknesses, and those who wear glasses, will be glad to know that according to Dr. Lewis there is now a simple prescription that can be filled at any reliable drug store and used at home by most any one. Dissolve one Bon-Opto tablet in a fourth of a glass of water and allow to dissolve. Then use this solution for eyes two to four times daily. You should notice your eyes clear up perceptibly right from the start and inflammation and redness will quickly disappear. In many cases, the benefit you derive after using this prescription for 15 days everything seems to clear right up and you can read fine print at 20 feet. Another who used it says: "I was bothered with my eyes watering and smarting, and eye strain induced fierce headaches. I had worn glasses for several years but for distance alone and without them I could not read any fine print, not even a package of tea. After using one bottle of Bon-Opto my eyes have become clear as crystal, the inflammation and redness have disappeared and the distance glasses altogether. I can count the Buttercup leaves on the trees across the street now, which for several years have looked like a dim green blur to me. I cannot express my joy at what it has done for me."

It is believed that thousands who wear glasses can now discard them in a reasonable time and multitudes more will be able to strengthen their eyes so as to be spared the trouble and bother of ever getting glasses. Many troubles of people's descriptions may be entirely overcome by the use of Bon-Opto tablets. Bon-Opto is an active drug store and doctor's prescription. Bon-Opto tablets, Dose one Bon-Opto tablet in a fourth of a glass of water and allow to dissolve. Wash the eyes with the solution two to four times daily. You should notice your eyes clear up perceptibly right from the start and inflammation and redness will quickly disappear. In many cases, the benefit you derive after using this prescription for 15 days everything seems to clear right up and you can read fine print at 20 feet.

Note: Another prominent Physician in one of the three active ways submitted, said: "Bon-Opto is a remarkable remedy for eye troubles. It is a constituent known to many physicians for its beneficial effect in eye troubles. I have used it personally in my own practice on patients suffering from eye troubles of various kinds, and in every case it has given entire satisfaction. It is a powerful tonic, and when used as directed, will strengthen the eyes, and relieve pain. Many cases of blindness could be prevented if this remedy were used in time. It is a clinical preparation, the formula of which is printed on every package. Oculists everywhere prescribe it to strengthen eyesight. It is not a patent medicine, not a secret or nostrum, but is a well known remedy, and good results may be had in this way by any one."

Victory For Anti-Germans

Abdication of the Czar Dumbfounding to Washington Officials

WASHINGTON, Mar. 16—The overthrow of the Russian autocracy was accepted in all quarters here as a complete victory for the anti-German sentiment in the Empire, removing virtually all chance of Russia being drawn away from her Allies into a separate peace.

The sensation created by the news of the successful revolution, the turning out of the Ministry and the arrest of pro-Germans was followed by another more profound, when press despatches announced the abdication of Emperor Nicholas. The revolution was not wholly unexpected, but the abdication of the Emperor was dumbfounded to both official and diplomatic circles.

It has been assumed that in spite of the belief that the Emperor, influenced by his German wife, and pro-Teuton advisers, was lukewarm or worse in support of his allies, he would be permitted to continue nominally as the head of the new Government. Neither officials nor diplomats could understand what the revolutionary leaders expected to accomplish by shifting the crown.

The overthrow of the Government by the Duma is interpreted here as the culmination of efforts made throughout the war to rid the country of the German influence. From the earliest Russian military reverse the German press has been filled with rumors and predictions of a separate peace in Russia worked out by those in the autocracy who believed that Russia's destiny lay with Germany and not against her. When the now overthrown Ministry came into power, with such pro-German sympathizers as Sturmer and Protopopoff, the German press openly exulted with the prediction that at last an understanding was to be reached with Russia.

Czar Realized Peril

Relinquished His Crown to Avert a Civil War

LONDON, March 16.—The Times in an editorial on the Russian revolution says: "A great revolution has been accomplished in Russia. The Czar has abdicated in favor of his infant son. His brother, the Grand Duke Michael, is expected to act as regent. It has become clear for some time past that the strained relations between the Duma and the Court could not last. The great danger was that the Czar might fail to realize his position with sufficient promptitude and might either resist a revolution or defer his decision. He has had enough wisdom and unselfish patriotism not to take either of these courses. By laying down the supreme authority of his own free will he has saved his people from civil war and his capital from anarchy."

The revolution is commented upon editorially here by other newspapers with enthusiasm, mainly as a great triumph for the Entente and a great disaster for the Central Powers. The press describes it as the death of German hopes and a more crushing and more far-reaching blow than Germany has yet received. The Liberal papers also welcome it as a triumph of democracy, presaging great influence in the cause of liberty throughout the world.

Pity and sympathy are expressed for the Emperor, of whom the worst said is that he lacks intellectual and moral strength. Tributes are paid to his generous and lovable disposition, and his ardent desire to serve his people.

UrgedAdication of Russian Czar

LONDON, March 16—Deputy Kerensky, the new Russian Minister of Justice, has decided to frame a measure of general political amnesty according to a Petrograd despatch to Reuter's dated Thursday. The Grand Duke Nicholas, commander in the Caucasus, has telegraphed President Rodzianko of the Duma that, in accord with Gen. Alexiff, Chief of Staff, he had asked the Emperor in order to save Russia and bring the war to a successful end, to take the only step possible in the present fateful circumstances.

Calm has been quickly restored in Petrograd, although numerous partisans of the old regime have been firing from roofs and garrets upon the troops and inhabitants. By order of the executive committee soldiers have entered the houses where firing is taking place and removed suspected persons. The garrison of the palace at Tsarskoe Selo has declared itself on the side of the new Government and has welcomed the representatives with enthusiasm. Prince Shakovskoy, Minister of Commerce in the late administration, has been arrested by order of the executive committee.

Captured Sixteen Huns.

For taking prisoners fifteen German soldiers and one German officer, Lieut. Godfrey Alan Johnson, Sci. '12, former well-known McGill athlete and prominent student leader, has just been awarded the Military Cross, according to advices which reached McGill University.

Lieut. Johnson accomplished the capture of the Germans by making use of the same presence of mind which used to stand him in good stead when he captained the McGill football team on the gridiron back in 1911. It was in the course of the recent operations on the Somme front after the Canadians had captured a German trench. Lieut. Johnson was called up with his Field Company of Canadian Engineers to assist in consolidating the position, and in erecting the necessary defences, those erected by the Germans having been demolished by the Canadian artillery fire. While his men were engaged in this work, he, unarmed and totally unprepared for any hostile attack, proceeded to take a stroll through the former German works. Arrived in front of a former German dugout, he was surprised to see the head of a German officer appear at the door. Although he was without a weapon of any kind, Johnson readily took in the situation, and making a motion towards his hip pocket, caused the German officer to throw up his hands in true "Kamerad" fashion. With the officer there surrendered fifteen soldiers who had hidden in the dugout to escape the bombardment and had been overlooked by the British soldiers in their cleaning-up process.

Lieut. Johnson, besides playing football with the McGill team, was connected with various other undergraduate organizations, including the Students' Union, of which he was vice-president. He was president of the Football Club. Lieut. Johnson's home is in Ottawa, and he went overseas a year ago, and since going to France has been attached to the 11th Field Company, Canadian Engineers.

Vol. 58 BELLEVILLE, ONTARIO, SATURDAY, MARCH 17, 1917. No. 73

An Account of the Journey of the 155th Battalion From the Time of Leaving Barriefield Camp, Oct. 14th, 1916, Till They Arrive in England

Written by Pte. W. J. SAVAGE, Belleville, Canada.

It is 2 p.m., October 14th, 1916, at Barriefield Camp. Every one falls in to answer his name at the last muster parade in camp. Around the deserted tents stand the wives, mothers, brothers, sisters, or sweethearts of the boys of the 155th Battalion, eager to spend as many moments as possible of the few short hours with their loved ones before they leave this evening for overseas. The roll is called, the boys are dismissed with orders to fall in at 5.30. Again they join their friends and sit together in their tents, or walk through the lines that are just drying up from the heavy downpour of rain of the day before. Kit bags are filled to the full capacity, knapsacks lay already packed with two newly-issued blankets, overcoats are rolled and fastened at the lower end of the knapsack by two straps, while the mess tin rests on the top of the pack. Time passes quickly and only too soon the bugle sounds "Fall in." With a yell that would startle a man with the strongest nerves, the 155th rush to the parade ground to fall in for their last time at Barriefield Camp. Friends and relations move off to the waiting 'buses and cars that will convey them to Kingston, a distance of 2½ miles to where the boys will march to the armories to wait two or three hours for the train, and to say good bye to their loved ones. After a wait of about ten minutes, the band strikes up, and the boys, laden with their knapsack and haversack and kit bag in hand, march off along the rough, much travelled road to Kingston. A rousing cheer goes up from the 154th as they line the roadside to watch us go by and bid us good luck, and express the hope that they will meet us in a few days at Halifax. Soon we arrive at the top of the hill that looks down on the old city of Kingston, and gives us a view of the bridge that divides the city from Barriefield. Guards as usual, are watching the bridge, and wish us good luck as we pass. As the band turns the corner on the other sde of the bridge, it strikes up "Keep the Home Fire Burning," and the boys start to sing. Despite the heavy load and the the heavy beads of sweat that roll down their faces, all seem happy, though in the hearts of many there is a sad feeling. Around into Princess Street we turn, where on either side the street is lined with people anxious to see us pass. Arriving at the Armories, we file in past the throngs of relatives, laden with lunch boxes, and straining their eyes to catch a glimpse of the ones they love. At last we halt, kit bags are thrown down at our feet, belts are unbuckled to allow us to discard our heavy pack. Soon soldiers and civilians are mingled together in one big crowd: the building is packed, and one can only with the greatest difficulty get in and out. Many are wiping their eyes, while others shed not a tear, but one can see by the sad look on their faces that their hearts are full. An hour or so passes, and the "Fall in" sounds to receive a farewell address from General Hemming. At the conclusion three hearty cheers are given for the General. Orders are then given to get ready to march off to the train. Packs are again placed on our backs, and each man takes his kit bag as loved ones shed bitter tears, they know the time has come to part. Loving kisses are exchanged, while eyes brim over with tears. The bugle calls, each man takes his place, the order is given to march off, and we pass along the street where thousands watch us go by. Arriving at the train, we pass along in single file to the coach we are to board. Those who are fortunate enough to keep their friends by their side now give the last kiss, and shortly we are all aboard the train that will take us to Halifax. Heads are protruded from every window, anxious to see the last of their friends. At last it is all aboard, the train moves off into the darkness, and the 155th Battalion are on the first stage of the journey that will take them to the great war, where duty has called them to do their bit for the Empire. The train rumbles on in the darkness, the boys settle down in their places; a lunch wrapped in paper is handed around, donated, I am told by the ladies of Belleville. Some are too busily engaged playing mouth organs to eat, others sit and think of the last moments they spent with their loved ones. Gradually sleep overcomes us, and one by one we lay down to snatch a few hours of sleep. Soon all is quiet save for the rattle of the train as she sped over the rails of the Grand Trunk Railway.

At Cornwall I am awakened as the train comes to a stop. I hear voices outside. As I raise the window I see young ladies on the platform. One not so shy as the rest longs to kiss the soldiers. A man, apparently her brother lifts her up to the window, and as many of the boys as can kiss her, which she seems delighted to return. A handshake and a good-bye and we are again travelling through the darkness, and once more we lay down to sleep. It is breaking day at 6 a.m., when we awake, and we revive ourselves by having a good wash. At 7 a.m. we go to breakfast, which is served in the dining car, and consists of porridge, potatoes, beans and bacon, with coffee. After breakfast we go to our seats, and read or write letters home, while others indulge in card playing, while outside all is dull and miserable with the heavy rain that is falling. At 11.30 a.m. we stop at a place in the province of Quebec, where the only language we can hear spoken is French. Children rush up to the side of the train asking for souvenirs. We give them letters to post for us, and soon their pockets are bulging with letters and post cards, and money rattle in their pants' pockets which is given them to buy stamps to put on the letters. After a brief stay we move off, leaving the French town and its rain-sodden urchins, wondering if they will be honest enough to post our letters. Dinner time comes, with Irish stew, bread and butter, and tea; then for the want of something to do we go and sleep, or watch the rain as it beats unceasingly against the car windows. The province of Quebec, in my eye, is a poverty-stricken looking country. There are very few prosperous farms with fine barns and houses, that we see in Ontario, and for the most part are very small houses painted white with the barns of the same color. The land seems to lie very low. Hundreds of acres of swampy bush lies on either side of us, and the boys all remark that they would much rather live in old Ontario than in this province, which, to give it its due, is worse looking, owing to the drenching rain that is falling. Some one draws our attention to some object away to the left of us that looks like a big building. Another, who apparently knows more, and has better eyesight than myself, informs the crowd that the object we are looking at is the Quebec bridge that collapsed a few weeks ago. Supper time comes, with soup, soda biscuits, bread and butter, cheese, and tea. At 8 p.m. I am put on guard for two hours at the door of the car. Every car has a guard at each end to prevent men running from one end of the car to the other, except the proper authorities. At 10 o'clock I am relieved, and go to my resting place and sleep till daybreak, rise and have breakfast, write a letter home, and at 11.30 on Monday morning we arrive at Moncton, N. B. We leave the train for a route march around the town, which is, as far as I can see, a nice looking place. The march gives us an appetite for dinner, which we partake of when we again board the train. We are travelling now through New Brunswick, with its villages of houses of a slate color, with a few here and there painted white. This is an English speaking province, and by its looks is a more fertile province than Quebec. Along the route we pass numerous saw mills, surrounded by bush, indicating that we are passing a section of the country where timber growing is the chief industry. Houses are rarely seen through here, but here and there we see a few children gazing at us as we go by, but as to where their place of residence is we are at loss to understand. The sun shines pleasantly through the car windows as we now travel through some low marshy ground, similar to that one sees near the sea coast of England, which is mostly used for pasture. Haystacks, round in shape and small in stature, stand in these fields, while sheds stand here and there, erected, in my belief, to shade the cattle that are pastured there from the heat of the sun, and protect them from the cold nights of the fall. All is one big grassy plain, separated by fences at different intervals. Houses are scarce in this district. Creeks run through here with what looks like a quicksand bottom. Now we pass through more farming land of a sandy loam, and the roads are of a red sandy color; others are black in appearance. We now come to Amherst, N. S. People wave to us as we pass through the town. We pass by a building which, seemingly has been converted into a barracks. Soldiers are standing around, and wave to us as we go by, pleased no doubt to see their brothers in arms.

Through Amherst we pass more sheds and haystacks. The boys today are enjoying the cigarettes which were given to the boys of Belleville by Senator H. Corby. Our Chaplain comes through the cars collecting letters for postage, and is a general favorite with the boys. Our next stop is Springhill Jct. A young lady leading a baby by the hand is a source of attraction to the boys. They are anxious for her address. She has an orange in her hand, which one lad offers her five cents for. She agrees and takes the nickle, but refuses to hand over the orange, much to the amusement of the boys. After 15 minutes stop we move off again, through more swampy bush. Now we come to a line of high hills that rise high above us, on which are trees with leaves with different colors—brown, yellow and green—which make a picture that no artist would ever paint to such perfection. On the other side we look over a valley of beautiful scenery, with hills rising on either side, displaying the different shades of foliage of the trees. Now we rush through a big cut, with rock on either side, to emerge again overlooking the valley to the big mountains of Nova Scotia. On we go till at length the call comes for supper. With knife, fork and spoon in hand we move to the dining car and satisfy our hunger. The evening shadows are fast closing over the Nova Scotian sky, the lights of the cars begin to cast their glare around us. We stop about 8 p.m. at a place we find out to be Truro, N.S. In a few minutes men and women are alongside the train shaking hands with as many of the boys as can get their heads and shoulders out of the window. Soldiers ask girls for their addresses, which in most cases are given. Souvenirs are handed out to the girls as keepsakes. After a stop of half an hour we once again move off. The boys give a cheer, handkerchiefs are waived, and we settle down to be called on in a few minutes later by our major, who gives us a few instructions on how to act to guard our own safety—all blinds are to be drawn and no noise is to be made as we draw near to Halifax. We now indulge in a few hours sleep. At 4 a.m. I wake up to do guard duty and find we are in Halifax, walled in on one side by high houses and a train load of the 156th on the other. We wash and have breakfast and pass the time by discussing the question of when we shall board the boat. Rumor says we are quite near the dock where we shall board the boat and lift our feet from Canadian soil, hoping to be spared to again meet those that we hold near and dear to us. At 11 a.m. rain is falling heavily and all is dreary outside. By looking out of the top windows of the car we can see the top of a four-funnelled boat, which is largely discussed among the boys as to whether she is a battleship or a troopship, but which later turns out to be a cruiser. Boys come alongside the train selling apples—two for five cents—also tobacco and matches. Women are anxious to post any letters for us. The man from the Y.M.C.A at Barriefield Camp comes through the train distributing post cards, envelops and writing paper, and selling stamps to those who want them. Through him we find out that C. and D. Companies have arrived at Halifax. Dinner time comes, and we spend the afternoon in the same manner as we did the forenoon. Supper at 4 o'clock, an hour earlier than usual, as we are to leave the train at 6 to go aboard the boat. Some are still playing cards, which fills the pockets of some and empties others, the owners of the last named wearing a sorry look on their faces. At 5.45 orders are given to prepare to leave the train. Tunics are put on, blankets that were unpacked for sleeping in are again put in the knapsack, and we fasten all our belongings to us with the exception of the kit bag, which we carry in our hand. The order comes to file out quietly and quickly. We pass out in the inky darkness between two rows of cars in single file. Then we cross the track over to a road paved with bricks, alongside of which stands a big brick building, probably a Customs-house. Here we are joined by the other two Companies of the 155th. When all is ready we get the order "form fours." Right through the darkness we go to a big building that is all lighted up and guarded by soldiers. Here we are enabled to take a look at our comrades for the first time since leaving the train, owing to Halifax being in darkness.

Through the doorways and windows of this building we can see a boat lying alongside. There is a railway track running into this building, which makes it convenient to load freight from the cars to the boat. We march down one side of the building and up the other, where there is a gang plank. Tickets are now taken from us that were given us on the train, with our name, number and battalion, by our lieutenant. A number of ships crew hand us a ticket with the name of the boat, number of our berth, and section, also the number of our table. A group of the crew, with white jackets on, watch us as we go aboard the Northland, that is to take us across the broad Atlantic—the 155th and 156th Battalions. Arriving on board we walk along the top deck down the first hatchway to one set of berths, then down another flight to a place with about 200 beds in it. The beds are numbered and in two rows, one above another, made of iron and have spring bottoms, with a mattress and a pillow of straw, with a brown blanket, a white sheet, and a quilt as our bedclothes. As soon as we find our berth we divest ourselves of our heavy pack and go on deck, but owing to the darkness we are unable to see much. A canteen is on the boat, nd the boys clamour for a drink of English ale, at ten cents for about a half pint mug. The canteen does a busy trade for an hour or so, when it closes down, and those who are responsible for its closing are called names they were not christened by. Soon we turn into our bunks for the night, with nothing to awaken us but the starting of the engines for a short period, when they cease their noise and all is quiet. We rise at 7 a.m. Wednesday morning and have breakfast at 8 of meat, bread and butter and coffee, and are called on deck from below to allow the orderlies to clear up the quarters, we having made our beds. A cold biting wind is blowing from the northeast. There are three or four boats in the harbor, two cruisers lay close by, one a French and one British, which are expected to convoy our party of three boats over. In the distance we can see part of a town, which some say is part of Halifax, lying across the harbor, while on the water motor boats skim here and there, and small tugs go about their daily labor as if all the world was at peace. Seagulls fly around and skim the water to pick up bread or other eatables that are thrown overboard, while at our boat's side are two small rowboats, tossing up and down by the rolling waters. The owners of the boats are selling grapes for 50 cents a basket, and plums 10 cents a dozen. The grapes are got aboard by tying the centre of a rope to the handle of the basket. One end is then thrown on to the boat, while the man in the boat holds the other end so as to keep the basket from hitting the side of the boat as it is pulled up by the boys on deck. The money is then placed in the basket and lowered to its owner, who has a big demand for his grapes. Dinner time comes; we have beef, potatoes with the jackets on, and prunes, after which A Company is warned for guard. I am lucky to get out of it, but am captured a little later by a corporal to go with five others to scrub the floors in the officers' quarters. In an hour or so we are finished, and go and have supper at 4 o'clock, an hour earlier, as all the lights are to go out at 6 p.m.. Soon we hear the engines working, and feel the boat moving, and we go on deck to find that we have left the dock, and the boat is turning her bows to the east. The French cruiser is ahead of us, and behind us are two more transports, while bringing up the rear is the British cruiser. In this order we leave the shores of Canada, where we leave our loved ones, trusting that God will watch over them, and keep them in safety till our return, if He so wills it. Steamboats toot their whistles as a farewell to us; the boys give a rousing cheer as we draw further from the shore. The bugle band plays for a while on deck till darkness comes over us, and gradually the boys go below to spend their first night on the ocean, with nothing to disturb us but the guard as they go to relieve their comrades of their tedious watch of two hours.

We awake at 6 a.m., and wash ourselves in salt water, which is the only kind we can get most as much dirt on as it takes off, as the soap will not lather in it to any advantage. We have breakfast of red herrings and potatoes. We go on deck and find we are out of sight of land, and the sun shining on the windows of the boats behind us that are following us like huge ducks in an enormous pond. Orders are given for every man to go on deck with his lifebelt on, which is kept at the foot of his bed, and get instructions as to what lifeboat he is to take in case any accident happens. The deck is now filled with soldiers wearing their lifebelts and falling in in their respective companies. We are taken and shown our life boat, which we are to make for on hearing more than four blasts of the ship's whistle. Next comes dinner. All we are called on to do in the afternoon is half-an-hours physical drill, so we sit on deck and pass the time away. Supper of Irish stew, coffee, and marmalade, after which we walk to the bow of the boat, while the shadows of evening begin to fall. We go to the concert room, where the piano is playing and singing is going on, while at some tables card playing is going on. Soon we go to our beds, but owing to a heavy cold pass a restless night listening to the propellers as they revolve in the water, making a noise that resembles a huge churn with the butter slapping the sides. At 6 a.m. Saturday we rise and go through the usual process of washing, and go to the breakfast table, where an awful racket is going on with knives and forks being pounded on the table, and the boys making such a hullabaloo that, in my mind, they resemble a menagerie of wild animals waiting to be fed, which indicates that seasickness has left most of them. All hands on deck at 9. A Company of men receive a plug of chewing or smoking tobacco, whichever he prefers, and some barrels of apples are stood on the deck, and soon a rush is made for them, and amid the scuffle that ensues the barrels are in great danger of being upset, and the man who can span the most apples is the lucky one. After dinner we lie down, to be hauled out at 3 p.m. for lifeboat drill. Then comes supper, after which the boys sit and discuss what would happen if a submarine should strike the boat. This is a misty day, and there is a heavy sea running. Soon the lights will be out, and we must sit in the dark or be in our bunks till the Sabbath day dawns, when we shall be drawing near to mid ocean, and every day will bring us nearer to the Motherland which we are going to help to protect. We are awakened on Sunday morning by the stewards rapping on a tin pan to remind the orderlies who wait on table that it is time to get up. We rise and wash ourselves, and long for the time when we can once more indulge in a wash with fresh water. I notice my towel looks somewhat grimy, but will have to wait till we land before I can wash it. Breakfast consists of eggs, hard boiled, bacon, and coffee, and potatoes with the jackets on. After going on deck at nine a.m. we sit around till dinner, which is very good, with boiled chicken, potatoes, and cabbages, and plum pudding. Divine service was held this morning in the saloon, but in other parts of the boat card playing has been indulged in by those who do not reverence the Sabbath as much as they ought. Supper over, the lights are soon put out, and we crawl once more to our bunks. Monday morning we wake up to find the sun shining pleasantly after breakfast. We are taken on the top deck for physical drill, which lasts for half-an-hour, then we are privileged to sit on deck till dinner time. This is the nicest day we have had since we left Canada, and we enjoy the deck far better than below. In the afternoon barrels of apples are put on deck, and boys file in behind one another to have a dip in the barrel and draw forth as many apples as he can grasp. Some who are not inclined to be greedy walk off to a quiet spot to eat their apples, while others fall in again behind the others to get a second helping, and soon there is an endless chain going round the barrel till someone takes the last apple from the barrel. Then there is a job for the deck hands to sweep the decks clear of apple cores. The sky looks as if we might get a storm, but after supper we sit on the deck and tell stories of the days we spent in old England before we left her shores for Canada.

At last bedtime comes, and we go below to get a few hours sleep, but rough, and the boat rolls us from one side to the other in our berths. About four in the morning we are awakened by the noise of rushing water. Before waiting to rouse themselves enough to find out what had happened some of the boys rush out of bed and make for the stairway. One lad, clad in very little more than Adam wore, was seen making the best of his time to get aloft. Finally someone, who realized the truth, bid the boys be calm, as it was only a little water that had come down the hatchway. Soon quiet prevailed, and we had a good laugh at the expense of the more nervous ones. We rise and go on deck, and fine we are in rough sea, and it gradually gets worse, till it is hard to keep our feet. At dinner time we sit at the table the waiters pour soup into our plates, which at a roll of the boat runs over on the table and courses down to the end and drips off. Then with a rush, cups, plates, knives and forks sweep down to the other end, he is a lucky man who does not get his pants greased up before he leaves the table. Finally every man hangs on to his own crockery and silver ware, and and as the boat rolls tips his plate the opposite way. Often as the waiters are coming down the ladder we hear a crash and more dinners have come to grief owing to the roll of the boat. Lots of the boys are hanging to the side of the boat on deck and feeding the fishes. This is a very rough day there is nothing to do only keep your seat and your foothold and from being sea sick. Supper comes, but there is not much clamouring for meals. As at noon, cups and plates slide to and fro on the tables, and we eat our supper under difficulties. This day our platoon have had to scrub floors, peel potatoes and do the fatigue work of the boat, and while going through the boat sounds of breaking crockery are frequently heard, and one needs his sea-legs on to navigate up and down the boat without coming in contact with an obstacle of some kind. Every one is ordered off deck, as it is not safe, owing to the heavy sea. We spend a restless night and none of us get much sleep as the ship is struggling in about as rough a sea as one would wish to experience. Wednesday passes in almost the same manner as Tuesday, with a sea running mountains high—a sight that is worth seeing, but unpleasant to experience. At one moment on the one side the waves rise high above the boat, with their white caps of foam and the spray blowing across the water as the snow blows over the frosty snowbanks in winter with the water a deep blue colour; then we rise on a big swell high above the level of the water to drop again into a big hollow, while her sides almost dipping the water, and we wonder how she can ever right herself again; but still she goes on fighting the waves and always coming out on top. Our two boats and cruiser that were with us are gone, we know not where, so we are now groping our solitary way to old England. Night again comes with a little calmer weather, and we go to our bunks with a better heart than the night before, and have a better night. During the day we saw a little row boat pass close to us, with the oars in it, and there was some discussion as to whether it was washed off a boat or if its former occupants had been drowned. On Thursday morning it is calmer weather and all are anxious to be seeing an end to this journey. We see a boat a way off to the starboard side, which is instantly called a submarine by someone who never saw one in his life, and the news soon travels round that we are in the danger zone. "A" Company is on guard to-day, so at nine a.m. we fall in to do our turn of two hours on and four off. Apples are given away on deck, and the same endless procession proceeds slowly around the barrels till they are empty. We see some fish this morning, and the boys are asking one another what kind they are, and hardly two answers are given alike; some say sharks, others say porpoises. Flying fish, sword fish, and other numerous names are given them.

At about 3 p.m. rain begins to fall and a heavy wind is again blowing which makes our good ship roll again. As time goes on the gale gets worse, and is one not many of us have experienced before. At 7.30 I go on guard at the stern of the boat, where there is a gun with its gunners ever watchful for an enemy. The wind howls through the machinery that stands on the deck ... we seek a sheltered place in the darkness. We find a place, where we sit and watch the phosperous thrown up on the waves and shining in patches as far as the eye can reach, while the wind shrieks through the rigging, and we think of old Canada's shores, where our loved ones we know are anxiously wondering and praying for our safety. Rumour says four lifeboats have been smashed and one washed overboard by the heavy seas, but I would not vouch for the truth of this statement. Guards are all called off from the exposed places at 9.30, as the gale is too fierce, and we sleep with the ship rolling and tossing throughout the night. Friday morning the welcome news comes that land is in sight, and we go on deck and peer through the dusky sky to get a glimpse of the Irish coast that we sighted about midnight. Looming through the mist we see a streak of hills along the shore, and everyone is delighted to see land after eight days. We are travelling by the south of Ireland and another day will bring us to our destination, all being well. We now sight several boats, but have none with us, though unknown to us there may be some of those ever alert "sea dogs" of the British Navy guarding us. Shoals of fish follow our boat, and we see them as now and again they jump from one wave to bury themselves in another. A cold damp wind is blowing and it is miserable on deck, and we are glad to go down below as soon as we are allowed at 11 a.m. We have dinner with the usual noise as if Bedlam were let loose, and pass the afternoon away by going on deck or sitting around, and are pleased to hear from some official source that we shall sight land some time to-night, and we go below and spend what is to be our last night on board the Northland with a better heart than we did the last two or three nights, owing to the boat rolling so much.

Saturday morning everybody is up good and early, and while the sky is still dusky the boys are on deck looking for the long looked for land of old England, that we see first. All we can see as yet is the light of a lighthouse and the light on a boat in the distance. After a breakfast of sausage and mashed potatoes we clean our buttons and boots and pack all up, take the tick from our bed and fold it with our blanket and quilt and pillow case and lay them at the foot of our bunk. About 9 a.m. the engines stop, and we go on deck and find a boat alongside, which is bringing the pilot on board to navigate our boat into the harbour of Liverpool, where we are to land. Large and small boats are all around us now, and in the distance we can see the houses and trees once again and a high tower that looms high above all else. A big four-funnelled boat lies at anchor, that some say is the Olympic, while gulls by the hundred fly all around picking up bread from the water. The decks are now crowded with eager faces, many of which look upon a scene that they never dreamed of seeing a year ago. In the distance a clock tells us it is 10.25. Every man is paraded to get a loaf of bread and some canned beef, which we are told is a 24 hours' ration, so evidently we are expected to be on the train some time. After this we sit around with our packs ready to put on at any time, to move off the boat to set our feet on old England's shores. Orders now come that dinner will be served at 12.30, and everybody is expecting his dinner; but, alas all but about a dozen were doomed to disappointment. About a dozen dinners had been brought down, and the owners were busy with knife and fork while others hollered for something to eat, when the orders came, "All packs on and fall in." Everything was soon in disorder, partially eaten dinners were left, and oaths filled the mouths of a good many instead of food. Up the ladders we struggled, which was only just wide enough to allow the passage of our packs. Before we could get in our platoons it was "Form fours, right and away," we so set our feet on English soil, that not a few of us had left years before, little thinking that we should return under such circumstances as we were now doing.

We pass off the boat in single file, and a few score yards take us to the platform of the London and North-Western Railway, where a train is waiting to convey us to Whitley Camp, Surrey. We are rushed into the little

Church Union and a Greater Canada

By The Rev. Charles G. Paterson, D.D., Winnipeg

TO the enemy and to ourselves the war has revealed a united Canada. In the trenches across the ocean men from all parts of every province of our Dominion stand side by side, while here at home lovers and wives and mothers with hands devoted to keep them there and to send all they can to them, cross section of our national life from sea to sea. Between and underneath the partisan divisions which emerge like the peaks of a mountain range, there is a deep underbody of conviction and sympathy that at the critical hour unites in all essentials. Surely here is a real Canada, a distinct national spirit, an indivisible union of Dominion, which unites our borders. To meet the future we have fast approaching us from out the present picture we go forward as a Canadian people, more united in its conditions, more ready to cooperate, as the war has done in its lordship, as one as the best.

Something wear more important is more generally recognized "by the man on the street" or. The war has developed a strikingly existence between our Canada of what reserve powers of character and love and loyalty there are that the nation can command in the hour of its need. Further, it has revealed a unity of soul, an underthat binds the imagination, grips the heart, and rests the intelligence of the people. "There is evidently accomplished a most powerful spiritual consciousness which is or should come to our country than all the visible gifts which the Creator has stored its land and water. Our vast material and scandalous, are the instances of unscrupulous and treasonable conduct which recently have been brought to light during our days and months of peace. But the very thoroughness with which all such proceedings have been condemned and their agents repudiated, and the universal and insistent demand for radical action in other cases of a like nature, gives ground for the conviction that the old virtues of truth and honor are securely entrenched in our midst. And more particularly may be noted the extraordinary display during the war of that mutual kindness which underlies all higher phases of social evolution, and is essential to national fitness. The spirit of combat with our cruel and unjust foe has released a flood of sympathy and good will that has cleansed and fertilized our land and prepared the soil for rich harvests in the days to come.

Naturally, therefore, we are looking for a greater Canada hereafter—not as regards territory nor primarily in growth of population, nor increase of material development, but greater in quality of spirit and, expression of life. All we are sure of that such a hope will be abundantly realized, provided that these ethical powers and this moral passion be conserved and augmented, and enlisted for national progress after the war. Nothing but the "saving kindness" now so much in evidence, and finding ever wider general and active, for the end and fruition of the present distress, process when normal conditions again be given full and generous. Many of the forces now working together for the uplifting of the war will afterward become again antagonistic and divisive, and there will be an imperative need for that kindness and forbearance which are indispensable to national unification in thought and action. Our genuine national unbuilders will be those who strive with energy to bring Canadians together in larger bodies of mutual appreciation and good-will, and so exalt the reach and increase the effectiveness of kindly feeling. And any proposal which merits our cordial support we need a greater Church.

which will promote closer union of minds and more mingling of sections with fellowship, aiding in the welding of an entire people into a moral unity.

One such proposal is that which would merge the Methodist, Congregational and Presbyterian Churches into the United Church of Canada. No one would pretend that this union of churches would furnish the key to millennial conditions. A change in ecclesiastical organization, on however large a scale, could not insure a better type of membership and life. But such action taken by more than half a million of our adult citizens would have a very great effect for good upon themselves as Canadians, and would make it easier for other union movements to come to maturity. The tendency to-day is toward greater simplicity and sacrificial of structure in every province of life, and toward united emphasis upon the essentials held in common in every department of thought and belief. Let this trend of sentiment and conviction find expression in the calling into existence of one great Church to take the place of three lesser bodies, and it will be seen that sometimes the whole is greater than the sum of all the parts.

Should these hundreds of thousands of our church members take this step, the minister of finance would be persuaded by true patriotism the sacrifice of inherited customs, tender associations, deep-rooted preferences and cherished opinions. Such a sacrifice would be costly and hard to make; but the exertion upon those who effected it would be most wholesome. In losing their denominational life for the sake of others they would find a larger and more worthy life of useful service and power. The effect would be the sublime into a manifestation of good-will in action that would greatly facilitate the increase of friendliness and the growth of kindness. The scientific discoveries of last century have made the world a neighborhood; the religious spirit of this century must make it a brotherhood. One of the first requisites in the subordination of organization to life, and willingness to give up what is not essential so that the instinction may render the largest possible service to the people for whom it exists. This was what Canada Union would involve, and Christian spirit and religious life of Canada would be quickened and energized by this display of genuine self-sacrifice and evangelistic moral earnestness. For a greater Canada need a greater Church.

For Business or Pleasure

THE BRISCOE B "4-24" brings the joy of motoring within reach of the man who has never before been able to find a quality car at a price he could afford to pay. It is a car that arouses a pardonable pride in the breast of its owner—a car that combines both luxury and utility—an ideal car for business or pleasure.

The owners of a BRISCOE can drive for hours and look the gasoline gauge in the face without experiencing that "all gone" feeling in the region of his pocket-book. Famous "Half Million Dollar Motor," with its 3½-inch bore and 5½-inch stroke, makes possible a much greater mileage per gallon and reduces the item of fuel expense.

The BRISCOE B "4-24" is not a high-priced car, and yet its complete equipment and luxurious appointments would naturally lead you to expect to pay much more. These include: Electric Lighting and Starting System—Full Elliptic Springs, front and rear—Floating Type Rear Axle—Tilted Eye Saver Windshield—Trouble Light Socket in dash—Gasoline Gauge on dashboard—Switch with Key Lock—Complete Set of Tools—Demister—Ammeter—Electric Horn—Tools—Repair Kit—and other important accessories usually charged as "extras."

RAIDING HUN TRENCHES

OUR OWN SOLDIERS PERFORM DARING DEED.

A Scientific Plan Carried Out With Coolness and Courage Accounted for Almost 200 of the Enemy, and Our Own Casualties Were Very Heavy.

THIN snow, hardened by frost —woe to sandbags and parapets when the thaw begins!—still covers the battleground, and a white mist blurs the landscape of war. Hazy-blue fields on the edge of the fighting world are topped with snow so that they look like sugar loaves, and flocks of rooks make black blots on all this whiteness.

It is upon this picture that our soldiers look out from their billets in French farmyards, and across the snow-fields they go trudging on their way to the trenches, or over No Man's Land when they are out for one of those raids which happen now almost every day at some part of the line.

The full narrative of the Canadian raid near Calonne is well worth more than the few lines already sent about it, because of its coolness, mastery of method, and the grim human interest of it, and the fine finish. From the men who dig the job—fine, fit-served, straight-shilling men, have heard every detail, and although there is much I must leave out because the Germans would like to know, I can tell enough to give the spirit of it.

The Canadians were preparing the surprise with scientific industry and patience. A brigadier and his staff officers and company officers were studying every feature of German position from every angle of observation.

The men selected for the raid, picked men, were trained for the task so that each one of them knew exactly what he was required to do, the time in which he had to do it, and the place in the German lines where with luck he should find himself.

They were even taught some words of German — kommen sie herauf, sonst wollen wir handgranaten werfen! (come out, or we will throw down bombs)—so that they could get prisoners more easily. It was a complete education in the art of attack, which is not a gentle art.

To save the lives of our own men, as well as to kill or capture the enemy is the treat by which the success of a raid is judged. The Canadians were not out to lose men but to save them. "The cheapest possible price," was the brigadier's bargain with his officers, and he is a good soldier.

Our artillery was bombarding north-west of Lens, and the enemy was nervous in that direction, keeping his own guns ready for an attack up there. One or two minor raids in different directions distracted his attention and worried him.

Things were boiling up northward by a ruined house in his lines. He sent up reserves of men to strengthen the support lines and assembly trenches along this line of front—the still bad forty feet of "knife rest" as a great protection.

To the Canadians it was also a question of that belt of wire. Could the guns make lions through it? The guns got to work, and poured shrapnel on the entanglements. But neither the forward observing officers nor the staff officers, nor the company officers, were sure whether that the wire had been cut well enough for men to walk through. It was impossible to see through the white mist. They were told of as wire cutters. Ultimately they might have to depend upon hand-work to open the gates, increasing the risk a thousand-fold.

(The attack was in the daylight on a Thursday morning. The men themselves preferred the light. It had been snowing all night and there were four inches of snow on the ground. The Canadians liked that idea, as it gave them a "homely" feeling.

They went over with bombs grouped to their chests to save their hands free, with every machine-gun bringing back wounded prisoners. German dugouts, with wire-cutters on their bayonets. They were mostly young men from 18 to 22. Only a few of them had been "over the top" before. But they went with cool heads, without hurry or any wildness of excitement. It was like adventure, which would mean death for some of them. Some of them certainly, though the price was to be cheap.

A belt of wire was found lower in a flight over their heads, flinging a straight, steady barrage upon the German lines. Up by the Double Crassier, nearly a mile to the north of them, they saw a big bombardment. It extended southward. Smoke barrages were rolling across the snow, uniting with the white mist in the air. Canadians were boxed in and invisible.

Somewhere near Lens a mine was blown up. It shook the earth like with its roar. Rockets, mostly green, rose like huge sticks into the mist, and floated like toy balloons. The German artillery fretted—but in an answering barrage, but nowhere near the raiders, who were walking at quick march across No Man's Land 100 yards wide, to the salient in the German line.

Some of them, the officers especially were listening for the patter of machine gun bullets. This ground might be surely saddled by machine guns. There were a few bursts of machine-gun fire.

"We're not it!" thought one of the officers, and a few men dropped. "Silly there!" shouted the sergeants. Unwounded men halted and dropped to give first aid to their comrades. It was the law of the heart and of discipline in war, for which have nothing to do with that.

The matter of it stopped, for a reason they knew afterwards. Then the "heavies" claimed a direct hit, or at least a silence. There was no more machine-gun fire.

Then bursts of bullets came from those places marked on the maps. "Good guns" had smothered them. "Good guns" saved the Canadian soldiers, and they felt themselves protected by the creeping barrage ahead of them. And not very much behind, either.

The great query had still to be solved. How about the "protective" wire? Upon the answer to the question depended many men's lives. The answer was not good news to all the Canadians trudging through the snow.

All that broad belt of wire was down. Great lanes had been smashed through it by our shrapnel. The Canadians poured into hundreds could and the Canadians streamed through, entering the enemy's front line just four minutes after the screen from over the British parapets. Pretty quick work for all that distance of No Man's Land.

A second wave passed through the first, and went on to the second line without halting. There was some bombing on the left flank, but that was not important. Seven German officers, fifteen men, surrendered, and then disappeared into a hole, from which they came taken later.

In the second line of trenches there was hardly a fight. The inhabitants of dugouts came out quickly in answer to the words shouted down by men in khaki. It was not very good German, but it was understood.

For an hour the Canadians remained in the enemy's trenches, collecting booty and prisoners, and papers. No German barrage had yet fallen upon them. The enemy's guns were still plugging away at the wrong place. No machine-gun fire enfiladed them. They had complete mastery of their ground.

By their synchronized watches the men knew the time to return, and, carrying their wounded, they made their way back. Afterwards the enemy barraged their own front line; but no men were there except the German dead.

This, as far as I can tell it, is the narrative of the Canadian raid, planned in a scientific way, and carried out with great skill. It accounted for about 350 of the enemy and our own casualties were not heavy.

An American Surgeon

He Was Needed Because He Would Not Tell

By HORACE BRADFORD

I am a surgeon, and my home is in Florence, Italy. When a young man I studied at a college of physicians and surgeons in my native country, America, but showing a taste for art, decided to change my profession. Coming here to Florence, I studied art for a while, but soon saw that I did not possess the talent necessary to make an artist. Having fallen in love with this delightful city, I remained, deciding out my alongle as a surgeon.

One night I attended a ball at the Pitti palace. It was my first appearance among the aristocracy of Florence, and I was much interested in watching the people there. Few of whom I had ever seen. A young girl with a gentleman attendant on each side of her walked by me. The appearance of the three told a story. The man on her left was young, handsome, in every way attractive. He on her right was past middle age and disagreeable looking as the other was engaging. As they passed me he gave the younger man a malignant look. The girl appeared to be much troubled. It was plain that her heart was with the man on her left, that she was constrained to choose the man on her right and that the two men hated each other on her account.

"Everywhere," I remarked to myself, "the stream of life is troubled. To be rich, to be prominent, does not render one immune from that which is disagreeable. Happy love has evidently come to this young girl, to be interfered with, by one who, judging from her expression, has some claim upon her. How I should like to know the story!"

As I thought the last words I little dreamed that within a few hours a climax would come in the drama being enacted by these three persons and that I would come upon the stage for a minor part. When I left the palace I went directly to my rooms and to bed. An hour later I was awakened from a sound sleep by a violent knocking. I arose, slipped on a gown and opened the door. Two gentlemen in evening dress stepped into the room.

"You are the American surgeon, I believe?" said one.

"At your service," I replied.

"You are wanted to attend a man dangerously wounded," said the other. "You are chosen partly on account of your standing in your profession, but principally because you are not one of our circle. We do not like our affairs to be known. I must ask you to permit me to blindfold you."

I objected to this, but one of the men put his hand to his hip pocket and drew forth a small pistol with mother-of-pearl mountings, while the other produced a stiletto. I picked up my bag of instruments and suffered them to tie a handkerchief about my eyes. They led me out to the sidewalk, told me to raise my foot, and I stepped into a carriage.

"Drive a roundabout way." I heard one of the gentlemen say.

"No," interposed the other. "He may bleed to death. We must go as quickly as possible."

There was no need to make turns, for I had no idea where they were taking me. In what I supposed to be ten minutes the carriage stopped. I was helped out and soon by the tie I crossed warmth of the air felt myself to be in a building. Then I mounted steps, and at last the bandage was taken off my eyes. I was standing beside a bed on which lay—mirabile dictu—the youngman I had seen walking on the left of the girl at the Pitti. I knew too well the danger of showing any sign of recognition.

"Signor Dottore," he said with a feeble voice, "I have been stabbed on the left side—here," unovering. "It is near the heart."

It was near the heart, but that fortunately just escaped that organ. After an examination I assured the patient that if he kept perfectly quiet till the wound should heal he would recover. But I thought that, considering its close proximity to a vital organ, a surgeon should remain with him until a healing should be established.

"Then," said one of the men who had brought me, "you must remain. We do not care that two surgeons should be beforehand here just now."

"But my practice—my patients?"

"All damages to your practice shall be liberally paid for."

I made a virtue of necessity and assented.

Meanwhile I had bandaged the cut and when I had finished turned and looked about me. I was in one of those old palaces, as they are called in Florence, belonging to some influential family. The furniture, at least some of it, must have been several hundred years old. The bed on which the wounded man lay was canopied. On the walls were paintings, some of which I recognized as masterpieces of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. There was no one in the room except the two men who brought me and the patient. I directed that a large in sage, of antique pattern should be made comfortable for me to sleep on, as it would be best for me to be very near the patient. Then the men who had brought me left, one of them first giving to me

"Signor Dottore, we are very glad to hear you say that the patient is so much better than he was. I told you we have been discreet and all will be well with you, but if you should tell all I have to say is you will not talk very long."

I remained a week at the palace, the name of which I did not know. Indeed, I was not permitted to leave the room of the patient, my meals all being served there. My mail was brought to me, and it was amusing for the first day or two to read the messages of patients with reference to my sudden disappearance. Then I asked those who had kidnaped me to have word at my apartments that I had been called to Genoa on a very important case. This had the effect of quieting those who sought me.

My patient turned out to be as engaging a man as I had imagined him to be when he passed me in the Pitti palace.

"Your effort," I said to him one day, "to keep your dreams—it came, very near to being a disaster. Had you not possibly have been successful had it not been that I was at the ball at the Pitti palace, that you were brought to my stabbed. I saw you pass me with the man who stabbed you and the lady for whom you were stabbed. So you see it would be safer for you to tell me the whole story. Then I have a part of it. I pledging myself to secrecy, rather than to permit you to go away with what I already have unplowed."

He was not only very much astonished, but pleased at the reasonableness of what I said.

"I did not notice you," he replied, "at the ball and supposed that you had no position in court society. An Italian gentleman would have been unable to do us. We are all so interested socially, those being constantly watching those who are and all watching one another, that we dare not trust any one not our own minions. You, as an American, are not mixed in our jealousies, our disputes, our—"

"Your wife?"

"You are wrong there. There are no assassinations in modern Italy. I fought with the Duke—and I will tell you the story and have every confidence that you will not reveal it.

"I am Count Baradini, and my ancestors have lived in this palace since the twelfth century. The man you saw on the other side of the signorina at the ball was the Duke of Abolino, a relative of the king. The signorina herself is the daughter of the Countess Francesca, an old family that sprung up under the influence of Lorenzo de' Medici, commonly called Lorenzo the Magnificent. Signorina Blanca Francesca and myself have been lovers ever since I was sixteen and she fourteen years old. Upon her entrance into society lately on her eighteenth birthday the duke saw her and became desirous of possessing her. He is a widower, very rich and has great influence with the king. Soon after seeing Signorina Blanca he made a formal application for her hand. Her mother-her father is dead—urged her to accept what is to be considered in a worldly point of view a better position than I could give her. To be a duchess and rich is higher in the worldly scale than to be a countess and with no pecuniary accept this old palace. As for Blanca, her heart is all mine, as mine is hers, and if left to her own will she would refuse the duke to marry me. Indeed, rather than wed with him she declares she will go into a convent.

"The duke was expected to have his own way in the matter when at the recent ball at the Pitti he discovered that I was his rival. I saw Signorina Blanca a few minutes before we passed you, when the duke joined her and got a look that me give way to him. I asked the lady to go with me into another apartment, the duke seeing whereupon the duke went with us. On reaching the other room Blanca showed me by the plainly that his presence was not desirable that he left us, giving me a malignant look as he did so that plainly meant 'I am a man of too much importance to be interfered with by such as you.'

"On leaving the palace the duke, who took occasion to go out at the same time I did, jostled me. Seeing that I must have it out with him, I sent him a challenge.

"Just at present the king would be furious if he know that members of the nobility so much as look for support, especially his relative, had fought a duel. If I were known to have sent a challenge to the Duke of Abolino I should in some way be made to suffer, and then within an hour after we left the Pitti; but, realising my position, I did not dare even pink him. He came very near killing me as you see, and I doubt not will be disappointed if I recover.

"The duke and my second joined in conference as to how to keep the matter a secret, and decided on the plan you to attend me.

"You now have the story so far as it has been enacted."

The balance of the tale I learned from Blanca herself after she had recovered. Signorina Blanca was commanded by her mother to marry the duke, and the king sent a message to say that he would be pleased at a marriage between her and the well beloved counts. Despite these commands and requests the girl flatly refused to marry any one but the man she loved, and when those who were conspiring to force her found it impossible to move her they desisted, and finally her mother gave a reluctant consent that she should marry the count.

When the wedding came off I was present and had a pleasant chat with the bride about her husband's wounding, of which she had been kept in ignorance till the affair had blown over. So four as I remained in Florence I was welcome at the palace of Count and Countess Baradini.

She's a Winner!

The new Gray-Dort has swept the country. After a winter in the hands of some of the most experienced of Canadian motorists, she has an enthusiastic army of followers. She's there—there with the speed, the power, the comfort. She's economical too.

"The Quality Goes Clear Through."

She goes over hills like a bird—she pulls through sand and mud like a bull. She's as easy to ride in as a palace steamer. And her bills for gas and tires are easy on your mind. She's a winner from the drop of the hat.

Every Requirement Met

Are you in a hurry? Right under your foot in the Gray-Dort is more speed than you'll care to use. Are you touring a thousand miles? The extra long springs and deep, cushioned upholstery will bring you through fresh as a daisy—without fatigue. And p-a-n-e-s! Etienne Planche built the Pagnot. Then he built the Gray-Dort. And Planche says the Gray-Dort is the greatest motor he ever saw.

We might mention in passing that there is an infinitesimal amount of looking after with the Gray-Dort. She's trouble-proof. And she is complete. Note her equipment—everything from Westinghouse starting and lighting system to the tools.

Cherub Devine

By SEWELL FORD

Copyright, 1916, by Sewell Ford

...suddenly the Cherub pushed to his accustomed corner, and began tearing pieces of paper into small bits, with the same fairly unhurried air of abstraction as usual. Many glances were bestowed upon him by the others, those of sympathetic, some curious, and a few hostile. Everywhere he was regarded as a beaten man. Now and then a gray uniformed floor boy bobbed impetuously, with a head inclined, and as leisurely reduced to obsequiousness, by the presence about him of those whose every word or gesture was a revelation of unbridled resources and unexhausted reserves of force.

The climax of the struggle was reached during Thursday. About noon, about the hour the members of the Blaine-Hamner combination were forced to admit that the Cherub was still in the game. They made the admission with profane unction. They did not understand why it was so. They only knew that in some mysterious manner their triumphant career had been checked.

Then it went. All that afternoon the contest waged. Now the price of P. K. and K. stocks plunged despondently, now it skyrocketed amazingly, after which each would settle down, a whole list quaked and quivered as the struggling giants of finance wrestled heedlessly about the scene.

Placidly smoking a fat, black cigar and sitting comfortably back in one of Walloway & Co.'s mahogany office chairs, Cherub Devine received belligerent from the front. That was the position in which Nick Walloway found him, when, after the day was over, he dropped in to see how things were, with an anxious look in his eye.

"We back fifty shares," he announced briefly.

"Then that's fifty we must get to-morrow morning," remarked the Cherub.

"It can't be done," declared Walloway, dropping hopelessly into a chair. "The country has been raked with a fine toothed comb. It's the day after-of-another shave, I'm sorry, Cherub, but I've only got ten hundred shares of P., Z. and N.'s annual meeting is held at noon tomorrow, and the Bates-Hiimer crowd has practically got us beaten on now. If we only had fifty shares more we could wipe them off the face of the earth."

"You're as bad as the countess," chuckled the Cherub, and Walloway, as this reflection recalled something to his mind he thrust his hand into an inner pocket of his coat and drew out a long envelope, at which he stared blankly.

A twinge of guilt pricked his conscience. There—he had completely forgotten the first errand with which she had intrusted him. Doubtless it was to exchange this stock for that which she had been so anxious to come to the city. Perhaps she had been expecting a telegram by this time. Shamefacedly he opposed the envelope to make an idle examination of the contents. At the first glimpse his expression changed. Hastily he ran through the documents, then shoved them back into the envelope.

A moment later he asked quietly, "How many shares did you say we lacked, Nick?"

"Fifty," promptly responded Mr. Walloway, his head between his hands.

"And about how much would that be worth to us just now?"

"Worth! Why, anything—three hundred, five hundred, a thousand dollars a share if you could get them—which you can't."

"No?" responded the Cherub. "Well, what do you say to those?" and he tossed the long envelope to Walloway.

That young man took his head from between his hands and glanced reproachfully at the Cherub. It was no time for joking. But he took the packet and began a spiritless investigation. Suddenly he jumped to his feet.

"Devine!" he exclaimed hoarsely. "These are P., Z. and N. preferred!"

"Sure." The Cherub was watching him with calm interest.

"And there are twenty-five—fifty—one hundred shares!"

"Right you are, Nick."

"But where on earth—Cherub, are you a wizard?"

"Just make a note of it that I owe the Countess Vecchi a hundred thousand dollars. Guess I can afford to bell the market a little on her account."

"Afford to! Why, Devine, this gives you control of the road! You've got the Bates-Hiimer crowd under your thumb. You're won, man; you're won!"

CHAPTER IX.

ON Friday the countess received this communication from Mr. Devine: "Will be coming up tonight. Important."

As a result Hewington Acres hummed with anticipation. What could it mean? What had happened? What was going to happen?

Epitaga was certain that Mr. Devine ...

...ing very one seated at ...

..."It's because of Mr. Devine, sir," said Epitaga, with a sigh. "He's such a special friend, sir, and I must be on the table at nine, sir."

Every member of the household of mind with Mr. Devine had centered on his himself was in a state of a twice-a audience that he gave it, although he was neither seen nor filled with cheer. But he was very much alive. His bubbling, spasmodic activity was in full blast. The fervor during was at that season. His spirits seemed to be lashed by a veritable storm of enthusiasm, the moment rising to giddy heights, the next sinking to deep depression.

Young Mr. Walloway, who was his sole companion, was somewhat disconcerted with this illogical behavior. Much against his will he had been dragged from his office to accompany the Cherub when that gentleman went to work to be done.

"Oh, that railroad be blowed, Nick! Lots of time to attend to that. Forget it."

Yet now that the day was well started toward Hewington Acres the Cherub evinced a desire to talk, although the precise topic at which he was aiming was not clear. It was unrelated to business, for the coming was of an intimate and personal nature.

"Nick, you rascal," he suddenly exclaimed, "why aren't you married?"

"Why aren't you, Cherub?" he returned.

"Me!" Mr. Devine affected to be profoundly surprised at such a question. "How, come, Nick, what sort of a fine woman would have Cherub Devine?"

"You're too modest, Cherub. You underrate yourself. I suppose you never tried!"

"Never had a chance, my boy. Why, see here, Nick, there's never been a time in all my life that I've had even a speaking acquaintance with a real good woman, such as you know by the dozen—that is, leaving out the last few days, of course. Now, with you I've been different. You've had a chance to pick and choose."

"Ah, have I?"

Cherub Devine caught the subdued note of pain in the quick rejoinder.

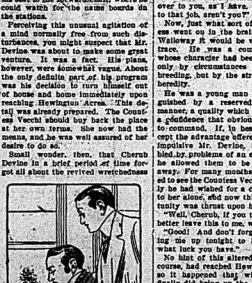
"You don't mean, Nick, that you got a turndown?"

Brusque as were the words, they carried a message of sympathetic feeling which rang true, and that was the quality which made so many friends for Cherub Devine. Young Mr. Walloway was certainly not the one to shirk confidences, but he nodded his head in assent.

Unexpectedly finding himself an intruder on private grounds, Mr. Devine curbed his buoyancy and gazed with embarrassed solicitude at the proprietor thereof.

"Oh, well," he observed, "maybe you're just as well off. Guess it was some time ago, when you were young and salty, eh?"

"I was a young ass, if that's what you mean," cynically responded Nicholas. "I was too sure of her and played the fool. You see, we were youngsters together, Cherub, and it was one of those affairs that everybody understood—dear and old from like time we were a dozen years old. I took it as a matter of course that I was the only person she could ever care for. In time she rewarded it, and before I knew it I had lost her."



"Went off with some one else, did she?"

Again young Mr. Walloway inclined his head. He got up, took a seat on the other side of the car and unfolded a newspaper.

It was less than an hour's ride at best, but before it was half over Cherub Devine was consulting watch and time table and had again shifted his seat to the forward-facing one, so could watch for the same bounds on familiar objects.

Perceiving this unusual agitation of a mind normally free from such disturbance, you might suspect that Mr. Devine was about to make some great venture. It was a fact. His plans, however, were somewhat vague. About the only definite part of his program was his decision to turn himself out of house and home immediately upon reaching Hewington Acres. This decision was arrived at because the Countess Vecchi should buy back the place at her own terms. She now had the means, and he was well assured of her desire to do so.

Small wonder, then, that Cherub Devine in a brief period of time forgot all about the revived wretchedness of young Mr. Walloway's. A question suddenly occurring to the Cherub, he abruptly walked back to where young Mr. Walloway still sat, intently gazing at something he held shielded in his two hands. It was nothing more than the gold oval which he wore as a watch fob. Dozens of times the Cherub had seen it dangling from the breast pocket of Nick's coat, without specially ...

...on which young Mr. Walloway was gazing with such rapt fatuous was a miniature of the Countess Vecchi. It is an instant it was made clear to him that the woman whom Nicholas Walloway had loved and lost and still considered to love was the Countess Vecchi.

Fortunately Mr. Devine had not spoken, and the roar of the car wheels had drowned his approach. Swiftly he withdrew. Then he sat down to ponder on the situation. Quite strangely the Cherub now came upon the realization of his own purposes. He was a little staggered by the discovery of his audacity, but this was no new sensation. His audacious flights were always more or less of an impromptu nature. In a moment he was smiling confidently, as was his custom after once he had decided upon a line of action, however unconventional it be the future. The bridge he would ahead the lighter the skids. Nick was a good boy and all that, and if he chose to mope inactive in the background let him stay there. He (Cherub Devine) would show him how to play the game boldly—perhaps how to win.

And then came the thought. Would that be absolutely fair to the Countess Vecchi? She and Nicholas had been snoopy on each other for years, and she must have liked Nick. He was a likable fellow, clean, sturdy, substantial, one of her own class, and oh, the Cherub winced at it—one whom she would call a gentleman. Yes, Nick would measure up to all her demands as to what a gentleman should be.

And had it been really she who had broken off the match, or was it due to the ambitious plans of her father? Then after she had come back, banished in spirit, the Hewington fortune dissipated, had she perhaps held Nick at arm's length because of her pride? Was this the reason of his seeming inaction? Had he been all the time waiting in the hope that some day she would relent, and might she not be now that in some measure her fortune had been restored? Might not she have the chances? Was not the opportunity for a free choice due to her? Shouldn't Nick have another show?

Floundering through some such maze of reasoning, the Cherub at last came to this brilliant conclusion, without only a faint suspicion that he was about to make an astonishing dump of himself. He even experienced a glow of satisfaction as he hastily mapped out his new program. If you would almost have thought by the cheerful manner in which he laid it before young Mr. Walloway that he thought he was attaining a long desired end.

"Well, Nick," he began, the time for giving young Mr. Walloway due warning of his approach, "we're almost there. Now, the first thing on the docket is for you to fix up this business about the house with the countess."

"I?" exclaimed Nicholas.

"Why, sure! You know her better than I do. You go up and have a talk with her; tell her how you sold the stocks and what she can buy back the property for."

"But—but—why don't you?"

"Me! Oh, I've got to skip back to town on this train. Just wanted to get you started straight. You don't mind? It so much better than I can, being one of her own kind, and all that. Aren't afraid of the countess, are you?"

"Why, no. But see here, Cherub"—

"Now, that's all right, Nick. You can do this fine. But, say, you call on up on the phone at my hotel tonight and let me know how you succeed, eh? Don't forget that, about 9 o'clock. Just give me a line on how she takes it and so on. You'll have a new report or other to make, I'll bet. Needn't make too much of my share in the business. Just talk like I'd handed it over to you, as I have. You're equal to that job, aren't you?"

Now, just what sort of mental process went on in the brain of Nicholas Walloway it would be vain to try to trace. He was a complex product whose character had been molded not only by circumstances of birth and breeding, but by the strong stamp of heredity.

He was a young man chiefly distinguished by a reserved stiffness of his being a quality which often betrays a confidence that obvious genius fails to command. If, in business, he accept the advantage offered him by the impulsive Mr. Devine, he was troubled by problems of an ethical nature. If he allowed them to be easily swept away, for many months he had wanted to see the Countess Vecchi, that was by he had wished for a chance to talk to her alone, and now this very opportunity was thrust upon him.

"Well, Cherub, if you think you had better have this to me, why, I"—

"Good! And don't forget about calling me up tonight to let me know what luck you have."

No hint of this altered program, of course, had reached Hewington Acres, so it happened that when Timmins finally did bring up the battered coupe with a fine flourish the whole household was assembled to witness the Cherub's much heralded return.

The Countess Vecchi had at the last moment abandoned her angelic pose and yielded to curiosity. Mr. Hewington was even more eager to learn what it was all about. Mr. Devine never knew just what he missed by backing out.

In his stead there stepped from the carriage Mr. Nicholas Walloway, outwardly cool and self possessed, but secretly very much at loss to know just how he should proceed. For a moment he regarded the expectant group with some astonishment. Then Mr. Hewington voiced the common thought in one question:

"Why, Nicholas, where is Mr. Devine?"

"Mr. Devine is on his way back to town."

—to "get word"— began the countess, only to be silenced by Mr. Wallaway's hasty explanation.

"He has no time to transact some business with you, countess. Might I suggest—" And he glanced significantly at the door.

The Countess Vecchi promptly led him into the library.

"Well, Nicholas?" she asked.

Mr. Wallaway had seated himself at the library table and was looking over documents. It had been years since she had called him Nicholas. Well, like was a magical password. She smiled indulgently, straightened his shoulders, and placed his finger tips together in a judicial manner. It was rather an effective pose, indicating the patiently receptive mood of a superior mind.

"My dear Adele—"

"Mr. Wallaway!" The Countess Vecchi could be a most explosive young person, and her lovers were called mistake indignation very convincingly.

"Mr.—her—you called me Nicholas," he protested.

"I didn't call you my dear Nicholas, did I?" I want to know why Mr. Devine sent you instead of coming himself?"

Mr. Wallaway proceeded to state not at all in the way he had meant to put it his errand. He told the other one the amount for which the stocks had been sold and of her opportunity to buy back Hewlington Acres. The Countess Vecchi heard him with widening eyes.

"And I really have all that?"

"The check is drawn for the full amount, I believe, less the brokerage commission. Here it is." A little awed, she accepted the slip of pink paper and stared at it incredulously.

"You are sure there's no mistake?"

Mr. Wallaway was quite sure. He explained that the shares had brought $1,000 each and that there were a hundred of them.

"I don't in the least understand," said the countess, referring once more to the check, "but I hope that whoever paid that much for them could afford—why, here is Mr. Devine's name!"

"He bought the shares, and he could well afford to at that price."

"Could he? Oh, and those horrid men you were talking about! Did he smash them?"

Mr. Wallaway indulged in a faint smile.

"He did smash them."

"But did he smash them hard—as hard as I told him to?"

"He made a very thorough job of it —quite thorough."

"Oh, goody!" The Countess Vecchi's hands were shut tight; her lithe figure was held very erect; her eyes were alight with excitation.

CHAPTER X

NICHOLAS squirmed a little in his chair.

"Mr. Devine is in many ways a—er—a remarkable man."

"If he were only something besides a stock gambler. If he would only apply his talents to something different—"

"I hadn't thought of his talents as being misdirected," he said slowly. "If I may be so bold as to say something to soothe one who thinks as you do, for he told me that he has given up speculating in stocks."

"He—he has given up! Why? When?"

"At noon today, when he obtained control of the P. Z. and N. railroad and became its president."

"A railroad president! Why, that is quite—quite respectable, isn't it?"

"Almost," gravely assented Mr. Wallaway.

"Isn't he splendid!" exclaimed the countess, clasping her hands. "And don't you think, Nicholas, now that he has—well reformed—that he will be asked about among nice people?"

"My dear countess," began Nicholas, once more assuming the judicial pose, "you must not forget that he is still Cherub Devine. As a successful manipulator of stock he is entitled to respect; as a railroad president he will be a financial power to be reckoned with; as social fitness, that is a matter to which I have not given the attention which you appear—"

"Am I being lectured, Nicholas Wallaway?" asked the countess demurely, her eyes dancing. "You have known each other long enough, Adele, for me to offer a friendly suggestion. But if you resent it—"

"Oh, no! Go on, Nicholas. What else about Mr. Devine?"

Young me, Wallaway flushed under the subtle mockery of her eyes.

"Nothing more, countess," and he bowed stiffly, "only I did not know that you considered Mr. Devine a—"

The countess laughed lightly. "Oh, I've told him he wasn't."

"You—you said that to the Cherub?" The countess nodded.

"And he—what did he—"

He said he had never claimed to be a gentleman."

Ah!" Young Mr. Wallaway seemed to have gained a new viewpoint. His exclamation was one of relief. Now he could understand the attitude of the countess toward Cherub Devine. He was simply an unimportant interest which she had taken in a somewhat picturesque public character whom she had chanced to see at close range.

"I beg pardon for my suggestion," he said, "I see you know the Cherub better than I thought. Interesting chap, isn't he? He has his good points, too—oh, really, has a code of honor all his own that he sticks to as faithfully as if it were—well, generally accepted code. And he is generosity itself to those whom he fancies."

"He is indeed!"

There was an encouraging note in her tone.

"Oh, extremely! Now, in the matter of buying those shares they were never actually quoted at that figure, though you would not accept his figure if offered directly, so he asked me to come. Met last that night."

"HERE HE PRACTICALLY MAKES ME A GIFT OF THEM"

"To join the party?" And so quietly did she ask it that Nicholas should have had warning.

"What! You didn't know how long I have waited for just such a chance. Did you know, Adele, and you?"

He had risen and was approaching the countess with outstretched arms. But she quickly evaded the capture the happy reunion was for her to throw herself into them. However that was not precisely what happened.

"Nicholas," said the countess reprovingly, "don't!"

"But if you will only just listen to—"

"Please sit down, Nicholas."

Nicholas sat.

"You used to tell me, Adele, that you loved"—

"Did I? It's no wonder, for you were forever mooning around asking me if I did."

"I can imagine no reason why you should refuse to bear me say that I love you still."

"Well, there is a reason. If there wasn't I should invent one."

He looked very abashed—he began, with great humility, "that anything I may have said—"

"Now, that's better," said the Countess Vecchi, relenting cheerfully. "When we start regretting very, very few you don't to the best means it, but you're very kind to me. I forgive and forgive me for bringing you up so sharply and let us finish our business. Ought I to accept all that you have offered me?"

"You're right. Well, I accept, then And I do want to get back to my home here. But I feel I ought to deal directly with Mr. Devine himself in that matter. You will see that he comes with you?"

Mr. Wallaway, assuming an air of stately gloom, stalked away from Hewlington Acres. By the time dinner was over he had quite recovered his natural poise and felt equal to the task of calling on Mr. Devine.

"Well" queried the Cherub eagerly, "how did you come on with the countess?"

"Excellent" said Mr. Wallaway, with a glance of the business he had been asked to transact. "It's all settled, the countess."

"What's that, Nick? Accepts what?"

"Why, the check. She will buy back the property for—"

"Oh! Is that all?" An unmistakable air of satisfaction came over the Cherub's face. "Why, I gave her more than that."

She wants to see you about it, though. Says she can't decide unless you want to know if you can come up tomorrow."

"Why, sure I can. But say, Nick, are you certain there's nothing about—no hocus-pocus connected with it?"

"Why—you might congratulate the countess on making a good bargain if you wish."

This was indefinite, but convincing. "Poor old Nick!" said the Cherub as he hung up the receiver. "He's had his tryout, though. Tomorrow it'll be my turn."

Cherub Devine, having resolutely steeled a very all too strong sense of business cares, went smilingly out to Hewlington Acres and into the presence of the Countess Vecchi.

"Well, countess, we smashed 'em. Didn't we? Did you had a hand in it, after all, Nick? Or, eh?"

Evidently she had been standing there in the window recess in the library waiting for him. Whether by accident or design, it proved to be a very effective pose, for the slender grace, fulness of her dark robed figure came out in strong relief against the dull green window hangings, and the mellow afternoon light showed the tint of color in the long curl of her cheek.

"Yes, Nicholas has told me, Mr. Devine—told me all about everything. In fact, he made it quite a full confession."

Decidedly this was not a cordial opening. Her tone was cool, almost cynical. Something was wrong.

"I hope Nick didn't overdo the thing, countess. Did he?"

"I'm sure I don't know, Mr. Devine. That all depends upon how much you intended him to say."

"Well, he told you about how handy those shares came in?"

"Yes."

"And the price he got for them and how Mr. Wallaway was to offer me this check and an opportunity to buy back Hewlington Acres for the price you paid. Is that correct?"

"That's O. K., countess."

"Also you confided to Mr. Wallaway that you were—that you entertained certain sentiments of regard for me. You called it love, I believe."

"Eh?" ejaculated the astonished Cherub. "Say, Nick didn't give me away like that, did he? Honest, he wasn't chump enough to let on that I said—"

"To be made the topic of such an intimate disclosure, and by a person whom I have known for such a short time under such peculiar conditions, you can fancy perhaps that I'd rather—"

Studebaker

THE LITTLE THINGS

Studebaker cars are fine cars. The excellence of Studebaker chassis design—the beauty of the body, both in finish and in line—the wonderful power of the motor—the smooth, almost effortless operation of the car—these are the BIG things that indicate quality, which makes Studebaker a fine car.

In both the Studebaker FOUR and SIX you find: high-grade Yale Ignition Lock; pedal guards; high finished metal paint; hand grips on the door; leather-bound carpets in the tonneau; aluminum bound linoleum in the driver's compartment; leather edged top; Blackmoor curtain openers; leather-bound robe straps; big pockets on every door.

These are some of the LITTLE things that indicate the perfection not only in BIG things but in detail, which make the Studebaker such a wonderful value for the money.

ON ACCOUNT OF THE JOURNEY OF THE 159TH BATTALION FROM CAMP TO CAMP, LEAVING MARKET FIELD CAMP, OCT. 14TH, 1916, TILL THEY ARRIVE IN ENGLAND

compartments that in ordinary times will hold ten passengers, but owing to us having our packs and kit bags with us we have only eight in each, which is much room to spare. Soon the Guard's whistle blows, the little engine gives a shrill toot-toot, and we are moving. One of the boys, who had never seen England before, wonders if the train can travel more than fifteen miles an hour; but with such a toy engine, but I surprised when she gets going at a rate of about fifty miles an hour. We go through numerous tunnels, and are a long time before we leave the outskirts of Liverpool and emerge into the country where the grass is very green as in the spring, and the scenery is splendid, with its old winding roads and hedges, which are a striking contrast to the old rail fences of Canada. Everything looks so neat even to the railway tracks, which are held in place by chairs instead of the railway spike, and while the Canadian horn boys are entirely strange, and things, when those who are near and dear to us long to hear tidings of our safe arrival, and hope that we may all be returned to them in the near future.

Canada North a Land of Promise

WE in the consciousness of every intelligent Canadian that when peace which is inevitable, and may even now be on the way, will mean for the Dominion expansion and growth in the next generation far beyond anything this country has known. This, in view of the opening to the plowshare and to civilization of the prairie provinces, is naturally a great deal, but when Charles Camsell, of the Geological Survey of Canada, tells us that there are in Western Canada, areas aggregating 642,000 square miles that must still be considered as unexplored, and in Northern Quebec about 350,000 square miles more, making an aggregate of 992,000 square miles, it will be seen that the opportunities for development, in the light of modern ways, and with modern tools, can hardly be exaggerated. Great of Reindeer Lake and Kazan River, in Manitoba and the Yukon Territory, this authority tells us, are together 79,000 miles of unexplored country, or a division of the continent larger than the sum of the areas of New York, New Jersey, Connecticut and Massachusetts. To some people the term "unexplored" is synonymous with "uninhabitable." Many in Canada used so to regard the areas now included in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta a few years ago. But the statement that territory is unexplored carries with it, to people informed on the subject of settlement, the inference that, assuming ripeness for that, everything is possible for the prospector and the immigrant within its borders.

On the peninsula between Ungava and Hudson Bay there is an area of 75,000 miles that no man can call about with authority, and this is only one of several areas within the great inland sea toward which a railroad was building when the war broke out. In ignorance of what these stretches have to offer, many are saying now, as in the past they have said of other unexplored lands, that there is nothing in them to invite adventure, enterprise, or industry. They do not know. Regardless of pessimistic beliefs, energy, and capital united, previous to August, 1774, in entrusting their cause to open up the Hudson Bay country, and the work was only temporarily interrupted when Belgium was invaded.

Every argument that is used to chill expectation with regard to the Hudson Bay country was employed to turn the early westbound tide of trust, south of the line, a generation ago, away from the fertile valleys of the Dakotas, Montana, Wyoming, Oregon, and Washington. These territories, it was held with pertinacity and confidence, would "of course" be never become habitable, "at least, not to any extent." Later the same discouraging future was predicted for Western Canada, east of the Rockies. The people who have made a careful investigation of the Hudson Bay region say that there is no more reason why populations should not exist, and thrive, and prosper within it than that populations should not exist in Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Iceland, Finland, and other countries.

A touch of civilization goes a long way toward "warming up" a country, as Ward Grilling found it the atmosphere of the wilderness. The new settlement would not handle it entirely reasonable to assume that the land in Northern Canada, now hidden from the eye of man, contains everything necessary for the maintenance of those who shall drive in it.

When the war is over, the railway that was to be built, at a cost of $18,000,000, in order that Western Canada's great cereal surplus might be carried to Liverpool at a saving of 1000 miles, will be completed. Or if this does appear to be one deed and with contentions once established, thorough exploration will follow, and that, of course. Until it is found that, in the vast territory from Whale Hudson Bay there are ocean outlet, there is no fertile soil and no mineral wealth, or, in other words, until it is found that Canada North is less favored naturally than any other part of the globe, it would be well enough to reserve judgment. The indications are that the zone of activity on the North American Continent will move upward a degree or two in the next few years.

Fire Protection Protects.

Canada lost through forest fires in 1916, over nine million dollars, according to information supplied by Hewitt Black, secretary of the Canadian Forestry Association. This sounds more than six times what has been spent on forest protection work from coast to coast. In areas where fire-ranger protection systems are in operation losses of life and property have been held down to a remarkable minimum. Within the 24,000 square miles of Quebec covered by the two well-organized associations of limit holders the amount of green timber burnt was practically negligible.

PREMIER'S WIFE

Charming Consort of England's New Prime Minister.

MOTHER OF FIVE CHILDREN.

Little Is Heard About This Welsh Woman Except That She Makes a Model Mother and Enjoys Going Fishing With Her Husband.

MRS. DAVID LLOYD GEORGE.

Born Margaret Owen, and wife of England's famous Liberal since 1888, Mrs. Lloyd George has not been feared widely except as the mother of two sons and three daughters. The eldest daughter of the house has become her father's "right hand man," assisting him in public duties and ministering to comfort and health in his home.

The prime minister is a man of highly nervous temper ment, and occasionally he has to have a day in bed, where he receives his private secretaries and attends to the routine of business. At such times his daughter assumes full charge of his room, allows the secretaries just as much time as her father's strength will allow and then politely but firmly ends the day's work.

She has the knack of getting her father's thoughts off his mind often by saving her dear him when every one else is excluded from his room.

When he is in good health the two are companions for long walks or at golf, in the summer. Lloyd George has been fond of going with his wife and daughters on camping excursions, living out of doors and cooking his meals in a gypsy fashion. He returns from such excursions with his nerves much strengthened.

Here's a Rich One For Sodgoy Winter Weather.

One cupful ground suet, one cupful breadcrumbs, one cupful dates, one cupful sugar, one cupful seeded raisins, one cupful currants, one-half cupful finely cut citron, one-half cupful finely cut figs, one tablespoonful finely cut orange peel, one tablespoonful finely cut lemon peel, one-half teaspoonful ground cinnamon, one-half teaspoonful ground allspice, one-fourth teaspoonful ground cloves, one-fourth teaspoonful grated nutmeg, one tablespoonful salt, one cupful grape juice or any fruit juice, one-half cupful sweet cider, flour, sugar, cinnamon, ginger, cloves, nutmeg, mace and salt into a bowl and stir thoroughly. Wash and dry the raisins and currants and then add the figs, the citron, orange and lemon peel; add one cupful water and the fruit juice and mix thoroughly. (This should be a stiff dough. If there is not enough moisture add more water. Steam, mold in a little with a little melted butter and put in the pudding. The mold should not be quite full. Boil four hours at once as they are filled. These should be prepared a week ahead of time, well cooked; then boil one hour before serving. You may add one-half cupful chopped and blanched almonds to this if desired. Serve hot with hard or lemon sauce.

FORTIFIED CENTRES ARE WRESTED FROM ENEMY

PARIS, March 19.—Special.—Yesterday our troops entered Peronne. Standing alone that statement would be sensational enough. The French fought for Peronne desperately through more than two years of war, and now it is the lock of British troops to enter it, as yesterday we entered Bapaume after a short action with the enemy's rear guards; but the news does not stand alone. The whole of the old German line south of Arras, as strong as one vast fortress, and built by the labor of millions, dog and tunneled, and cemented and cluttered with thousands of machine guns, redoubts with an immense maze of trenches protected by forests of barbed wire, had slipped away as though by a landslide, and the enemy is in rapid retreat to new lines many miles away.

As the enemy goes he is laying fire and waste to the countryside north-east of Bapaume, into which we went yesterday with our troops, and east of Peronne scores of villages are burning. One of them, larger than a village, the town of Athies, is a flaming torch visible for miles around. Others are smouldering ruins from which volumes of smoke are rolling or into the clear blue sky. In all of the great tract of France which the enemy has been forced to abandon to avoid the menace of a combined attack there is not a beauty left and no homesteads nor farms, but only black ruins and devastation everywhere.

The enemy is adopting the full cruelty of war's malignancy. He poisoned the wells in his wake, so that if our soldiers are thirsty should drink there they would die. This was first discovered at Barleux, where the water is used yesterday after the Germans retreat was found to be full of arsenic.

MOST GLORIOUS DAY IN HISTORY OF FRANCE

March 17 Celebrated in Forceful Manner Strategic Retreat Made By Teutonic Troops

PARIS, March 19.—Special.—The 17th of March will remain among the most memorable days of the war in the opinion of the French who are at the front, who say the advance on the front is the greatest since the battle of the Marne. It is considered not merely a local success, but a strategic retreat forced upon the Germans, the full consequence of which could not be revealed till later. The fact that the French at certain points went beyond the road from Roye to Noyon indicates that the German retreat will not end there.

"The Germans are still at Noyon," a favorite phrase of the Parliamentary opponents of the Government, who sought to impress upon it the fact that the Germans were only sixty-seven miles from Paris, will now have to be abandoned, it is hoped, as the town is expected to be in the hands of the French soon.

It would be difficult to say, military critics assert, where the Germans propose to establish a stable defence. The retreat of modern armies, encumbered with great supplies of material, can be effected only with extreme slowness, which permits an active and resolute adversary to maintain contact unceasingly.

This is the first occasion since the armies have been established on the western fronts that French villages have been evacuated by the Germans and occupied by the French and British. Bapaume, Roye, Lassigny and a large number of villages in Picardy and Artois, which for two years have held each French uniforms, now can witness the Tricolor of their country and the flag of their allies.

The Image Of The Beast

Deeply interesting Subject Discussed by Evangelist Johnston

An interesting and forceful discourse was delivered Sunday night by Evangelist Johnston in Campbell Street Hall, on the subject entitled "The Image of the Beast." Basing his remarks on Rev. 14-9, "If any man worship the beast and his image, the same shall drink of the wrath of God," he first of all enquired as to what is the Beast; for unless we know what is symbolized by the Beast, we can never tell what the image is. The Beast, he declared, was a symbol of a kingdom. Dan. 7-23-24. In context, however, it is a spiritual kingdom, and according to the indestructible outlined in Rev. 13-4-7, the Beast referred to is a pope other than the spiritual kingdom of the papacy. No other power ever did fulfil the specifications here given, both with regard to its work and the time of its continuance. But what is the Image? Mr. Johnston enquired; for an Image of anything is a likeness or similarity and since the Beast of papacy is a religious organization system, the image of the Beast would be one like the same in order to be an image. Where then shall we look in the great religious world to find a religious system that looks like papacy? The world, religiously speaking, is divided into three parts, Protestants, Roman Catholicism and Protestantism. It is evident that heathenism could not be the image of the papacy; for heathenism existed before the papacy was born. An image of anything must come after the original. You couldn't very well take a photograph of a person before he existed. So since the papacy came after heathenism, therefore the latter cannot be like an image of Catholicism. Where then shall we look? The answer is plain. Fallen Protestantism answers the question; and is there a portion of Protestantism that upholds the doctrine of Rome? We answer in the affirmative. Mr. Johnston then outlined some of the doctrines of Rome and pointed out a number that were believed and practised by Protestants. Does it not follow, therefore, that when one follows Roman doctrines that they look like Rome? And if they look like Rome then they are an image of the Beast? The conclusion is inevitable.

Not only that, but Roman Catholicism was once a persecuting power when she held control of the civil law. Therefore Apostate Protestantism must become a persecutor, and will it? Rev. 13:15-17, says so. At present, however, Protestants are divided, and therefore, cannot, but that the time will come when Protestants will tolerate and become a great combined religious power, and when her doctrines by the arm of the civil law. Already we find some doing it in that system known as "The Lord's Day Alliance," that is attempting to persuade depend on Parliament to enforce religion? Does Christ want the government to help Him or does He not Christian people depend on the power from on high and convince and persuade by the force of conviction instead of by the force of the policeman? Civil law is all right in dealing with civil matters only, but as religion is just what should be left members. Church and state should remain distinct and separate. When the church becomes a state, the state becomes a persecutor, and when people are compelled by law to become religious it makes them hypocrites instead of Christians. The splendid evidence was present, and although the discourse lasted for over an hour, a very keen interest was shown by all present.

Twice Saved By Milukoff

New Foreign Minister Blocked Separate Peace

LONDON, March 18.—Henry W. Hyndman, leader of the Socialist party in England, commenting on the Russian revolution, said:—

"Prof. Milukoff, the new Russian Foreign Minister, formerly was a member of the Socialist party. He was feted as one of our comrades in England a few years ago. He has the confidence of the Russian Socialists and Labor men.

"M. Kerensky, Russian Minister of Justice, the Socialist leader in the Duma, is acting with the Provisional Committee of the Duma.

"There is no harm in saying now what has for long been known in official circles, namely, that Russia was on the very point of making a separate peace with Germany last autumn, through Premier Stuermer. The action of Prof. Milukoff in the Duma forced the resignation of M. Stuermer and saved the Entente from the most dangerous intrigue since the beginning of the war. But the intrigue was only scotched, not killed, and we were on the eve of another movement of the same kind, when Protopopoff, the deposed Minister of the Interior, when Prof. Milukoff and others in the Duma saved the situation, this time by the bold step of revolution.

"I hope the Emperor will leave the country as there is always danger of intrigue when an uncrowned monarch remains in a kingdom. We have arrived at the greatest crisis of this war, for there is no question that one of Germany's great hopes has been for an anarchistic revolution in Russia which could be managed to secure for Germany a draw in the world war."

U. S. MARINES FIGHT HUNS

Clash on Interned German Raider Several Germans Wounded

PHILADELPHIA, March 18.—Two German sailors are said to have been shot and six others arrested at the League Navy Island Yard when they were detected by United States marines in the act of sending messages from their ship, Kronprinz Wilhelm, one of the interned German raiders. Two marines patrol the ship day and night in the act of signalling with flash-lights and other instruments, and were attacked. Outnumbered by upwards of numbers, the marines were obliged to draw their revolvers, and were soon reinforced by a detachment from the cruiser Chicago. The wounded Germans were placed in the navy yard hospital and the others were imprisoned. The clash followed close upon a boast made by the Germans sailors that they would throw overboard any American sailors who boarded their ship.

R. R. STRIKE IS DECLARED OFF

Announcement Made by Conference Official This Morning

NEW YORK, March 19.—Special.—An official of the Conference committee of the railroad managers announced at 1 o'clock that the railroads strike was off.

A few minutes after the announcement was made the railroad managers went into the Grand Central terminal to the Conference hotel and were joined immediately by the mediators. They refused to make any statement on the way to the meeting-room. It was presumed the announcement would be made through Secretary Lane.

The mediators and managers were believed to be awaiting the arrival of the brotherhood chiefs, who had refused, before making the announcement that the strike had been averted.

Secretary Lane issued this statement at 2.23 a.m.:

"Regardless of the decision of the Supreme Court on the Adamson law, the basic eight-hour day will go into effect."

Special to The Intelligencer.

PEKIN, March 19—Chinese troops have occupied German concessions at Tsieu Tain and Hankow without opposition.

Retreat Not Helpless Flight

Special to The Intelligencer.

LONDON, March 19—Newspapers generally take a fairly sober view of the German retreat, and while insisting the retirement has been forced, make no claim that the Germans are on the run, a distinguished staff officer at the front is quoted as representing the idea that the retreat has become a helpless flight.

MUNITION PLANT DESTROYED BY EXPLOSION

Special to The Intelligencer.

COPENHAGEN, March 19—Newspaper despatches from German says a munitions plant at Cologne blew up last Tuesday and several hundred workmen perished.

DESERTED GERMAN TROOPS COME FORWARD AND GREET CAPTORS

Special To The Intelligencer.

PARIS, March 19.—French closely following retiring Germans, reoccupied Quincard last night, and at several points reached the railroad from Ham to Neale, the War Office announces. The troops were pushed along the national road to St. Quentin.

East of Neale a second German position was reached. The statement says that one hundred towns and villages have been re-occupied in three days. Many of them have been devastated, thousands of persons whom the Germans were unable to send to the rear, caused onward to grow the French. On the Verdun front the Germans made a heavy attack between Avocourt and Malancourt Hill, after artillery preparation. They penetrated the French lines on a front of 250 yards, but were ejected from part of this position after violent hand to hand fighting.

MR. CARSCALLEN'S FUNERAL

NAPANEE, March 19—The funeral of Mr. T. G. Carscallen, M.P.P., took place Saturday from Trinity Methodist Church to Riverside Cemetery. Rev. Charles DeMille, assisted by Rev. C. E. Craig and Rev. J. A. Wilson, officiated at the services, which were under the auspices of the Masonic fraternity. The I.O.O.F. also was represented.

British Flier Gets Horseman

PARIS, March 19—Special— The Germans have's cavalry screen behind their rearguards. They were seen yesterday north of Bapaume and southwards beyond Roye, and some of them were chased by a British airman at a place called Ennemain. He soared down low, like and albatross, and brought a man out of his horse by a machine gun bullet. the others stampeded frim this terrible bird.

Orange Grand Lodge to Hold Session Here

The Right Worshipful Grand Lodge of Eastern Ontario will hold its annual session in the City Hall on Wednesday morning, March 21st at 10 o'clock.

The Grand Black Chapter meets in the Orange Hall, Front Street, on Tuesday 20th. The deliberations of the Chapter will last but one day.

A public meeting will be held presided over by his Worship Mayor Ketcheson, when addresses will be delivered by the Right Worshipful Grand Master, the Hon. Sir Sam Hughes Bro. Dr. J. W. Spence, M. P., and others. This meeting will be held in the City Hall on Wednesday evening.

LIABLE FOR A $200 FINE

Before Police Magnrate Masson today, Lewis McDonald of this city, was called upon to answer two charges, namely, of theft and of having and also having in his possession a broken package of liquor. The accused pleaded guilty to both charges and also having in his possession a broken package of liquor. The accused pleaded guilty to both charges and in reply to an enquiry by the magistrate, stated he procured the liquor from Montreal, and carried same about him for his own personal use. He was informed that he had no right to do this, and that the minimum fine that could be imposed for the offence, was $200 and costs. The magistrate enlarged judgment in the case for a week, upon the accused furnishing substantial bail for his appearance in court, which he did. For being intoxicated McDonald had to pay a fine of $10 and $4 costs, which was a fine of $10 and $4 costs, which was paid.

ONLY TWO DUMMIES

PARIS, March 19—Special—Yesterday morning British Mounted Troops entered Peronne itself. No enemy was there. The only thing there that looked like defenders were two dummies which were shot at by our men, until this German fake was discovered. Many dugouts were on fire, and part of the town was crossdefiling. But Peronne is not utterly destroyed but will be known again when the civilians come back again to see their homes.

RUSSIANS MAKE FURTHER PROGRESS THROUGHOUT PERSIAN TERRITORY

Special to The Intelligencer.

PETROGRAD, March 19—Further progress by the Russians in Persia, who have now reached the vicinity of the Turkish border, is reported to-day by War Office statements, as follows: Caucasus front.—In the region south of town of Baneh we dislodged Turks from number of positions Turks are retiring in direction of Pendsherin (probably pasjerin, across border in Turkey.) In direction of Kermanshah we are pursuing enemy We have occupied Harunabad, twenty miles southwest of Kermashah. Western front Scouting reconnaissances and rifle fire are proceeding.

Roumanian front.—Patrol encounters and artillery fire.

Military News

Lieut. Cooke was a visitor at the 254th Headquarters this morning.

The ladies of the Madoc Patriotic League, have presented a cheque of $200 to the 254th Battalion for Regimental Funds.

A Board of Inquiry has been authorized to investigate the fire which occured in the Armouries recently. The members of the Board are Lt.-Col. Barragar of the 15th Battalion, Capt. Bleeker and Capt. Carman of the 254th Battalion.

Lt.-Col. A. P. Allen, O.C. the 254th Battalion, and the splendid battalion band returned this morning from Madoc, where they held two very successful recruiting meetings on Saturday and Sunday evenings, in the Armouries in that village. Major Campbell, Chief Recruiting Officer, was the principal speaker on both occasions. The Armouries were crowded to the doors at each meeting.

Growing Too Many Varieties

Great Advantage in Sowing Tested and Recommended Varieties

Four hundred farmers in Dundas County, Ont., were visited by the Commission of Conservation in 1916. Among the 53 per cent who knew the names of the varieties of oats sown, there were 14 different varieties found. In another county in Ontario, on 100 farms visited in the improvement survey, 28 varieties were found. These great numbers of varieties are very undesirable. Many of them are not adapted to the district in which they are grown, and many are inferior sorts which have been bought by the farmers from seedsmen who were new or were different from what was being grown by the neighbors.

Farmers will find it much to their advantage to sow the varieties which have been tested and recommended by the Experimental Farms or Agricultural Colleges. These institutions have excellent facilities for conducting seed tests. Where 14 varieties are being sown in one community probably 13 farmers are not sowing the most desirable. A great increase in production and profits would result if farmers but took more notice of what varieties were grown on Canadian farms.—F. C. N.

Jail For Utterances Against Recruiting

John Ness, a Scotchman, was sentenced to thirty days in jail by Magistrate Denison in the City Police Court on the 16th inst., on account of his utterances against recruiting at a street meeting Thursday, 15th, at noon, and which was addressed by Rev. Mr. Boal, who has the reputation of having secured 7,000 men for the army in the old land.

It appears that this famous recruiter asked the crowd to hold up their hands if they were in favor of the war. Everyone held up his or her hand but the accused. He was then asked by Mr. Boal if he was in favor of the war and he gave a negative answer.

General Sullivan stated that Ness would have been in the hospital or probably the cemetery had not an escort prevented it.

"Your whole attitude was calculated to discourage recruiting. You made yourself as objectionable as possible," stated the Magistrate, and he imposed the above sentence.

OXO CUBES IN FRANCE

The following is an interesting letter received from France:—

"You must already know how widely OXO CUBES are used and how sincerely they are appreciated wherever the British Army is to be found fighting for the Empire, but I feel sure it will interest you to learn that here, during the 'great push' on the Somme, and now, when we are nightly worrying the Hun with raids, I make it an invariable rule to make an issue of hot OXO to the men before they 'pop the parapet.' We have, as you know, to face all weathers out here, and learn to take things as they come. This is done the more easily because we are never without a supply of your OXO in its most convenient form—cubes. We find them of the greatest possible benefit to us. OXO CUBES are of enormous value for home consumption, but you may take it from me that their value is multiplied many times over out here in the trenches, and often times when nights are bitterly cold and horribly long, I really do not know how we should get on without the hot OXO."

OXO CUBES aid and increase nutrition and stimulate and build up strength to resist climatic changes; they are invaluable for all who have to undergo exertion either to promote fitness or to recuperate after fatigue. They take up little space, are easily carried, and can be converted quickly into a hot nourishing drink, which, with bread or biscuits, will sustain for hours.

Be sure to send OXO CUBES

Tins of 4, 10, 50 and 100 Cubes.

CALLED BY DEATH.

HARRY HOMAN

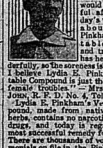
After a brief illness, Mr. Harry Homan, a well known and much respected yeoman residing in the 5th concession of Thurlow Township, passed away on Sunday morning. An attack of pneumonia was the cause of death. Deceased, who was in his 55th year, was born on the homestead, where he died. He was a son of the late Mr. John Homan. For a number of years he had been an active member of the Methodist Church, taking an active part in church work. A widow, and two sons Sheldon R. and John K. survive. An aged mother is also living. Mr. R. Homan of Belleville is a brother of deceased and Mrs. P. Ross of this city, is a sister. Another brother, James resides in Chicago.

FREDERICK ACKERMAN

Mr. S. Ackerman, Moira Street received word on Saturday evening, that his son, Frederick, has passed away; Mr. Ackerman was a former Belleville boy and had for several years been employed at the drug store of the late L. W. Yeomans. Deceased left Belleville for Wellington, and from there went to Cleveland, where he has successfully conducted a drug business. He leaves to mourn his loss a wife and three children, Mola, of Cleveland, Frederick who is somewhere in France, and Clifford who will shortly be leaving with the Kingston Medical Corps for Overseas, also a mother and father, and several brothers and sisters.

OBSEQUIES.

MRS. FRED DUESBERRY



On Saturday afternoon the remains of the late Mrs. Fred Duesberry were laid away at rest in Belleville Cemetery. At the family residence, 21 Pinnacle Street, Rev. Dr. Scott, Pastor of Bridge Street Methodist Church conducted the services and also officiated at the interment at the cemetery. That deceased had many friends was evidenced by the number of floral tributes, which were contributed. The bearers were Messrs C. Jeffrey, C. Barnhardt, L. Soule, J. Bird, R. Bland and A. Dinnine. The following were the contributors of the floral emblems.

Heart—Mother, Brothers and sisters.

NURSE HAD POOR HEALTH

Suffered Much Pain, Yet Had to Work. Finally Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Toledo, Ohio.—"I am a widow and go out nursing, and suffered from a female trouble that caused a great deal of soreness across my back, and thought my abdomen... Sometimes it would be very painful after a hard day's work. I read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and tried it and it has helped me so much during, so the soreness is all gone now. I believe Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is just the remedy for female troubles."—Mrs. ELIZABETH JONS, R. F. D. No. 4, Toledo, Ohio.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotic or harmful drugs, and today is regarded as the most successful remedy for female ills. There are thousands of voluntary testimonials on file in Pinkham's laboratory at Lynn, Mass., to prove this fact.

Why Eat Potatoes?

"At Four Dollars a bag the potato is a needless luxury," says the Board of Health. The potato is seventy-five per cent water and the rest is mostly starch. It is a good food when eaten in combination with proper foods—but not worth eight cents a pound. Cut out meat, eggs and high-priced vegetables and stick to cereals and fruits. Two Shredded Wheat Biscuits (cost two cents) with milk make a complete meal, supplying all the nutriment needed for a half day's work. For breakfast with hot milk; for dinner with sliced bananas or stewed prunes. Made in Canada.

OUR HORRIBLE STREETS

For the information of the Belleville Superintendent of Streets, it is timely to say that Hillcrest Avenue is in a wretched condition. When frozen up it is practically impassible; when thawed out, it is covered with slush, sidewalks as well. Other city streets will also bear looking after. Will some one please get busy?

FORMER RESIDENT DEAD

Mr. Alex. M. Chisholm, a former well know resident of Belleville, died yesterday at Enterprise, Ont., where he had been residing for some time. Deceased was in his 80th year. Mr. Chisholm was much interested in mining and was the owner of the Chisholm mine near Enterprise. In early life Mr. Chisholm resided here where he was well and favorably known. A brother, Mr. W. C. Chisholm resides in Belleville. The remains will be brought here this evening for burial in the Belleville cemetery.

CARD OF THANKS

Mr. Fred Duesberry and family desire to thank their many friends for sympathy and kindness extended during their recent, sudden and sad bereavement.

War Workers Form Organization

The ladies of West Belleville last week assembled for the purpose of organizing a band of war workers. A goodly number were present and proceeded with organization and the election of the following officers:

Honorary President—Mrs. Bailey, Mrs. Anderson.

President—Mrs. McMullen.
1st Vice President—Mrs. A. E. Woodley.
Secretary—Mrs. J. S. Hearst...
Assisant Secretary—Mrs. W. A. Woodley.
Treasurer—Mrs. Lucas.
Convenor of Sewing—Mrs. Grose.
Assistant Convenor of Sewing—Miss Smith.
Committee—Mrs. C. Walters, Mrs. J. Meagher, Mrs. Britton, Mrs. A. Morrice, Mrs. Cowell, with power to add to the number.
Machinists—Mrs. Brenton, Mrs. Meagher, Mrs. Lucas.
Buying Committee—Mrs. Grose, Miss Herity, Mrs. Luscombe and Miss Faulkner.

As this is an important branch of the Women's Red Cross, we extend a cordial and felicitous invitation to all the ladies of West Belleville to attend and become members at our next meeting, which will be held on Tuesday, March 20th at 3 p. m. at Queen Mary School. Any person having a sewing machine and table which they would loan for our work would be very acceptable.

MEETINGS HELD IN LOCAL CHURCHES

Tenlyson Smith, the well known Evangelist, addressed large crowds yesterday in West Belleville Methodist Church, Tabernacle Church and in the Baptist Church, and many joined the pledge to vote for Dominion wide prohibition.

County Councillor T. S. Morris explained that the campaign was under the auspices of the Royal Templars of Temperance and that the R. T. Order had pledged hundreds of thousands of total abstainers during its 28 years history. It had demonstrated that total abstainers lived longer than drinkers and that prohibition would lower the death rate, stop the shameful waste of foodstuffs and lower the death rate of nations.

He gave an invitation to join the Belleville Royal Templars Council and a number responded.

Information Bureau, March 7, 1917.

Dear Madam,—I beg to inform you that Dr. C. Saunders, No. 40,500, 1st Batt., D. A. Staff, R. A. Div., who is now at Beaufort War Hospital, Flashponds, Bristol, England, was admitted here lately, suffering from rheumatism. Our visitor saw him, and reports that Dr. Saunders is in bed, quite comfortable, and is being well looked after, and we much hope that he will soon feel better. He will be visited regularly, and we will let you know how he progresses. We will also be pleased to send him any extra comforts he may need from our Parcels Dept.

Yours very truly,

HERE IS A CERTIFIED CURE OF CHRONIC SALT RHEUM

By Use of Dr. Chase's Ointment—Also a Bad Case of Eczema Just Reported Cured

Eczema and Salt Rheum are different names for practically the same disease. Small pimples are vesicles that form in groups, break and run watery matter, a crust is formed, itching is intense and the disease shows a tendency to spread over the body.

Whatever may be the cause, Dr. Chase's Ointment will cure, for it heals and dries up the sores and leaves the skin soft and smooth.

Mr. Geo. E. Compton, Brooklyn, for two years with Salt Rheum, writes: Lot. 61, P.E.I. writes:—"I suffered Though I consulted three different doctors and tried many medicines, it was all to no effect. A friend advised me to try Dr. Chase's Ointment, and I am glad to say that when I finished the sixth box the Salt Rheum was all gone. There can be no doubt that the cure was entirely due to the use of this Ointment."

Mr. Geo. Hums, 3, Pa Brooklyn, Lot. 61, P.E.I. writes:—"This is to certify that I know Mr. Geo. E. Compton and believe his statement to be true and correct."

Mrs. Allan Weber, whose husband is proprietor of the Manitoulin Woollen Mills, Shegunlaah, Ont., writes: —"I have had a bad case of Eczema on my right leg below the knee, I tried all kinds of ointments and treatments but to no avail, and was pretty well discouraged. Hearing of how Dr. Chase's Ointment had cured Mrs. Sesma, I decided to give it a trial, and I am glad to say that it made a complete cure. The sores healed up completely, and I have had no trace of the old trouble for over a year."

It is with a little pardonable pride a severe case of Eczema or Salt Rheum, but you soon obtain relief by using Dr. Chase's Ointment. 60 cents a box, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Company, Limited, Toronto.

Trenton Brethren Visit Belleville

On Thursday evening, March 15th, the Trenton Council, R. T. of T., in goodly numbers, visited the Belleville Council, by invitation. Shortly after 8 P.M., Mr. R. A. Frederick, Select Councillor of Belleville Lodge, called the Lodge to order, and invited Sister Spicer, S. C. of Trenton Lodge, to a seat on the platform. During the meeting nine candidates were duly initiated in the Order. On motion the Lodge was adjourned and Sister Spicer was asked to take the chair. The members of Trenton Council then treated the Belleville Lodge to a splendid program, consisting of recitations by Sisters Johnston, McArthur and others duet by Sister Johnston and Miss Edna Johnston; solo by Miss Lena Johnston, and some splendid numbers by others from Trenton. During the program a magnificent addition was made to the company by the arrival of Grand S. C. Bro. T. S. Morris of Hamilton, also Bro. Tennyson Smith and wife, and Rev. Bro. S. C. Moore, who were all invited to the platform by Bro. Frederick, who asked Bro. Morris to take the chair. Bro. Morris then delivered a splendid address, after which Bro. Moore and Bro. Tennyson Smith were called upon, who treated the Lodge to short pithy addresses, after which the Lodge was closed by Bro. Morris.

All present were then invited, headed by Sister Boardman, Chairman of Refreshment Committee, to the dining hall, where about ninety people sat down to one of the finest repasts ever served by the ladies of the local Council. The inner man being fully satisfied, the gathering returned to the Lodge Room, where an hour was spent in games, songs, social intercourse, etc. The gathering finally dispersed at about 2 a.m., all feeling that one of the most enjoyable and best evenings of their lives had been spent in Belleville Lodge Room.

JUBILATION IN GHETTO

NEW YORK, March 18.—On New York's East Side where the Liberal party in Russia is regarded as the champion of the Russian Jew, yesterday was a day of frenzied rejoicing, as evidenced by the actions of thousands of inhabitants of the Ghetto.

When the Jewish papers conveyed the news of the revolution, excited crowds gathered at street corners and cheered speakers, who told of "a new era in Russia for the Jews." Groups of men and women sang the Marseillaise, and everywhere in the crowds men could be seen shaking hands, and women kissing each other.

Under a caption, "A New Light Has Come Over Russia," a Jewish paper said: "To-day we have the happiest news! With hearts trembling and with agreeable surprise we received the despatches of the Russian revolution. Hurrah! Hurrah! There is a ray of hope for Jews. The cause of the revolution is the cause of Jews."

Member of Belgian Relief Commission Relates Heartbreaking Experiences in Getting Supplies

MONTREAL, March 18.—George Barr Baker, member of the Commission for the Relief of Belgium, states that a large amount of the energy of the Commission is being exhausted appealing for funds and explaining the terrible condition of the Belgian nation so that help may be forthcoming to save them from wholesale death by starvation.

"We have worn out one good man after another," he states, "in explaining the appalling conditions and begging for help. One city sent us a ton of boot trees, for which the Commission paid the freight, not knowing the contents of the cases, and thinking that they might contain sadly-needed necessities. When the cases were opened our people were broken hearted. Another consignment consisted of five tons of chiffon dresses and pairs of shoes for peasant children to go to school in, and peasant women to use in their work in the fields.

"Incidents like these show how little the public realize the appalling misery there must be out of food with which the members of the Commission are so familiar. People here can get some idea of what conditions we are facing in Belgium when I tell them that the Commission has to serve 10,000,000 meals per day. Scanty meals they are, too, compared with what people on this continent understand as meals. There are as many as 3,000,000 people out of those to whom we serve food every day, who can only get to keep them alive a hunk of bread and a bowl of broth per day. "A short time ago the need of money was so urgent that Mr. Hoover, the chairman of the Commission, had to appeal to the Governments of Great Britain and France to add more to the generous aid already given, because voluntary subscriptions were falling so much behind what had been hoped, and, hard pressed as they were, they borrowed money to give him to save those poor people from death by hunger and disease and cold. The people of Britain are themselves voluntarily contributing $600,000 a month, but we are $3,000,000 a month behind actual requirements."

Will you help the Belgians? Any subscription from a dollar up will be gratefully received by the Central Belgian Relief Committee, 59 St. Peter Street, Montreal, or any branch, committee throughout Canada.

WAR LOAN

DOMINION OF CANADA

Issue of $150,000,000 5% Bonds Maturing 1st March, 1937

Payable at par at Ottawa, Halifax, St. John, Charlottetown, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Regina, Calgary, Victoria, and at the Agency of the Bank of Montreal, New York City.

INTEREST PAYABLE HALF-YEARLY, 1st MARCH, 1st SEPTEMBER.

PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST PAYABLE IN GOLD.

ISSUE PRICE 96.

A FULL HALF-YEAR'S INTEREST WILL BE PAID ON 1st SEPTEMBER, 1917.

THE PROCEEDS OF THE LOAN WILL BE USED FOR WAR PURPOSES ONLY.

10 per cent on application;
20 " 16th April, 1917;
30 " 15th May, 1917;
36 " 15th June, 1917.

The total allotment of bonds of this issue will be limited to one hundred and fifty million dollars, exclusive of the amount (if any) paid for by the surrender of bonds as the equivalent of cash under the terms of the War Loan prospectus of 22nd November, 1915.

The instalments may be paid in full on the 16th day of April, 1917, or on any instalment due date thereafter, under discount at the rate of four per cent per annum. All payments are to be made to a chartered bank for the credit of the Minister of Finance. Failure to pay any instalment when due will render previous payments liable to forfeiture and the allotment to cancellation.

Subscriptions, accompanied by a deposit of ten per cent of the amount subscribed, must be forwarded through the medium of a chartered bank. Any branch in Canada of any chartered bank will receive subscriptions and issue provisional receipts.

This loan is authorised under Act of the Parliament of Canada, and both principal and interest will be a charge upon the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Forms of application may be obtained from any branch in Canada of any chartered bank and at the office of any Assistant Receiver General in Canada.

Subscriptions must be for even hundreds of dollars.

In case of partial allotments the surplus deposit will be applied towards payment of the amount due on the April instalment.

Scrip certificates, non-negotiable or payable to bearer in accordance with the choice of the applicant for registered or bearer bonds, will be issued, after allotment, in exchange for the provisional receipts.

When the scrip certificates have been paid in full and payment endorsed thereon by the bank receiving the money, they may be exchanged for bonds, when prepared, with coupons attached, payable to bearer or registered as to principal, or for fully registered bonds, when prepared, without coupons, in accordance with the application.

Delivery of scrip certificates and of bonds will be made through the chartered banks.

The issue will be exempt from taxes—including any income tax—imposed in pursuance of legislation enacted by the Parliament of Canada.

The bonds with coupons will be issued in denominations of $100, $500, $1,000. Fully registered bonds without coupons will be issued in denominations of $1,000, $5,000 or any authorised multiple of $5,000.

The bonds will be paid at maturity at par at the office of the Minister of Finance and Receiver General at Ottawa, or at the office of the Assistant Receiver General at Halifax, St. John, Charlottetown, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Regina, Calgary or Victoria, or at the Agency of the Bank of Montreal, New York City.

The interest on the fully registered bonds will be paid by cheque, which will be remitted by post. Interest on bonds with coupons will be paid on surrender of coupons. Both cheques and coupons, at the option of the holder, will be payable free of exchange at any branch in Canada of any chartered bank, or at the Agency of the Bank of Montreal, New York City.

Subject to the payment of twenty-five cents for each new bond issued, holders of fully registered bonds without coupons will have the right to convert into bonds of the denomination of $1,000 with coupons, and holders of bonds with coupons will have the right to convert into fully registered bonds of authorised denominations without coupons at any time on application to the Minister of Finance.

The books of the loan will be kept at the Department of Finance, Ottawa.

Application will be made in due course for the listing of the issue on the Montreal and Toronto Stock Exchanges.

Recognised bond and stock brokers having offices and carrying on business in Canada will be allowed a commission of three-eighths of one per cent on allotments made in respect of applications bearing their stamp, provided, however, that no commission will be allowed in respect of the amount of any allotment paid for by the surrender of bonds issued under the War Loan prospectus of 22nd November, 1915, or in respect of that portion of any allotment paid for by surrender of five per cent debenture stock maturing 1st October, 1919. No commission will be allowed in respect of applications on forms which have not been printed by the King's Printer.

SUBSCRIPTION LISTS WILL CLOSE ON OR BEFORE THE 23rd OF MARCH, 1917.

CHURCH MEMBERSHIP

A correspondent wahts to know the churches to which the members of the Dominion Cabinet belong.

There are three Presbyterians, Sir Thomas White, Hon. Arthur Meighen, and Hon. Dr. Reid; six Anglicans, Sir Robert Borden, Sir George Perley, Hon. Martin Burrell, Hon. J. D. Hazen, Hon. Robert Rogers, and Hon. Dr. Roche; three Methodists, Hon. Frank Cochrane, Sir Edward Kemp and Hon. W. Pugsley; two Baptists, Hon. George Foster; four Roman Catholics: one Irish and three French-Canadians.

RE-ENFRANCHISEMENT OF INDIANS.

Without a dissenting voice, the Orange Grand Lodge of Canada West endorsed a resolution urging the Provincial Government to re-enfranchise the Indians of the Province. Sir Scobie Logan, Chief of the Muncey tribe, who is a delegate to the convention, declared there were eighteen thousand Indians in Ontario who can intelligently exercise the franchise. He stated that he had been a poll clerk and returning officer when the Indians had been disfranchised, and he had no knowledge of a single instance in which an Indian had spoiled a ballot in casting his vote.

It may fairly be asked why should the educated Red Man be denied the franchise, when it is conferred upon the ignorant uneducated foreigner who in many cases, do not understand the English language? This privilege was conceded by the Dominion Franchise Act passed by the Conservative Government, when the late Sir John A. Macdonald was Premier, and deprived of that right by the Liberal Government that succeed it.

It may fairly be asked why should the loyal native be deprived the right of citizenship, when it is extended to the ignorant foreigner who has no knowledge of the laws or language of the country; Why?

PROFITS vs. PATRONAGE

The Intercolonial Railway has a net surplus of $1,617,295 after defraying $1,612,800 in requirements. This is owing greatly to the elimination by the Minister of partizanship and patronage in the management of the Railway. One notices, however, that the Liberal politicians of the Maritime Provinces are far more ready to excite feeling against the Government over the disappearance of patronage than to support Hon. Frank Cochrane, who has produced such remarkable results.

It is not difficult to understand why the Liberals do not approve. They no longer enjoy the advantages of the picking and stealing that characterized the Management of the Road, under Liberal rule. For that reason the Hon. Mr. Cochrane, Minister of Railways may expect to receive the condemnation of the Liberals of the Maritime Provinces.

A WORKMAN'S GOVERNMENT

Leading in Social Reform.

Two years ago, says The Toronto News, the Ontario Government brought into operation the most advanced Workmen's Compensation Act ever devised, but it was not content with this great humanitarian achievement. The amendments submitted to the Ontario Legislature by Hon. T. B. Lucas "sustain the reputation of the Administration as one of the most progressive under the British flag.

As a result of the changes the Compensation Board will defray all the medical, surgical, hospital and nursing expenses of workmen during the first 30 days after an accident. In taking over the responsibility for first aid the State probably relieves employers of much embarrassment from levying upon employees for this object, except where employers have a first aid organization acceptable to the Board. The money will be taken from the Board's accident fund, and the Government will relieve employers by increasing the grant for expenses of administration from $45,000 to $125,000.

The increased provision for the orphaned and invalid children of workmen is a highly desirable step in advance, as is also the amendment giving the Board wider latitude in the adjustment of differences. The Legislature will not go far astray so long as it acts on the principle embodied in this Act and the present amendments. The measure has more than justified itself by the financial relief which it has already brought to many injured workmen and their families and to the families of deceased workmen. It is largely in such social and economic progress that civilization will justify itself after the war.

Every employers to-day will deny that the legislation is a benefit to them as well as to the workers.

Contributory negligence by employes as a reason for non-compensation has not brought the evil results which timorous manufacturers seemed to fear.

A REMARKABLE ACHIEVEMENT

Elsewhere in to-day's issue will be found a reproduction of the new "SALADA" Tea Company now nearing completion in Bay St., Montreal. Every modern convenience for the cleanly and speedy packing of tea is being installed in the building.

It speaks eloquently for the popularity of "SALADA" Tea in the United States, when it is claimed that this new SALADA building will be the largest in the world devoted entirely to product of the Orient and India to one country. Those interested in the romantic history of the tea-trade should write to SALADA TEA CO., TORONTO, for their little booklet entitled "The Story of the Tea Plant," for which there is no charge.

STYLE TIPS.

Every cloche brings from Paris the news that the skirt is "still" to be narrow. All those in the yachtwears have proclaimed the coming of the hobble skirt for spring. Nothing is better, but only to limited extents, or society has not yet been acted upon the recommendations of the fashion experts. In full skirts the average woman wanted full skirts, for reasons that she knew best of them, but by the thousands and in was only left to the exclusive women and their dressmakers to cut down the width and lengthen the hem.

The question which will soon confront every woman is not whether she wishes to change the silhouette of her skirt or go on wearing it until it is ready to be discarded, but the cheerful feature of the return to the slim silhouette is that a full skirt can be cut into a narrow one with ease.

That garment known as the culotte, blouse, or what is merely a short, twelfth century chemise, has grown still more important and popular since the large shops copied the extremely French models and placed them within the reach of the average purse.

Women like them. They are more becoming than the white shirt waist, and they do not wrinkle. Hitherto one's purse for laundry. They have a thin lining of their own, which is a boon to the woman who has neither the time nor the money to arrange a real variety of expensive underwear which shows so through the thin blouse.

These outside blouses are worn with skirts that are not of their material or color, so the makes for economy and comfort at once. So far they are in chiffon, embroidered in silk floss or knitting thread, but there are some very smart ones coming in colored satins. The sleeve is half length or long—but the latter should be chosen for very occasion except one's own dinner table. The neck is cut in the renaissance fashion. It is in fact, the extraordinarily high collar, standing or turned over, has given way to the flat, yeakth century neck line.

This is cut in many ways. The dressmaker does not hold one down to the veritable renaissance. Jenny has taken up the Italian decolletage for the daytime, which is cut in the form of a delta. A new gown which she sends out without waist copied from a Bernhardt portrait and which is of heavy brocade trimmed with girdle and arm pieces of black satin, has an oval inset at the neck line. The velvet is cut on the bias of the neck at the back, then run up in a point to the armpits and goes in a straight line across the chest below the collarbone.

GRAND TRUNK FIRST AID TEAMS COMPETE FOR THE CHAMBERLIN SHIELD

Montreal, March 14.—First Aid teams from the principal terminals on the Grand Trunk Railway System met in competition here for the honor of holding the Chamberlin silver shield. The Montreal team No. 1, from Point St. Charles shops, proved successful. Stratford team won second honors, Battle Creek third and Belleville was fourth. Eighteen teams entered the competition.

Dr. Charles J. Copp, Deputy Commissioner of the St. John Ambulance Brigade overseas, and Lieut.-Col. H. J. Birdwhistle, General Secretary, Canadian Branch of St. John Ambulance Association complimented the teams on the efficiency shown.

The shield was presented to the winning team by Mr. W. D. Robb, Superintendent of Motive Power, acting for President Chamberlin, who could not be present. He stated that the work done by the St. John Ambulance teams in the shops of the Company had earned the commendation of the executive of the railways. It was planned to further extend the movement to bring in men working on trains.

BETTER FARMING TRAIN ON GRAND TRUNK HAS SIXTY-FIVE DAY TOUR

Toronto, March 8th—Great success has attended the tour over the Grand Trunk Lines in Western Ontario of the special demonstration train containing agricultural exhibits. Over more than fifty agricultural centres have been visited and it is expected that the "better farming" lectures delivered in connection with the tour will result in a material increase in the production of farm products throughout the territory.

Six hundred people have visited the train each day. The tour will be brought to a close on Tuesday next, and on the arrival of the demonstration train at Toronto it will be visited by the members of the Ontario Legislature who are kindly interested in this co-operative work between the agricultural authorities and the Grand Trunk.

THE RAINBOW PRINCESS AT GRIFFIN'S TONIGHT

Daisy Ann Pennington makes her second photoplay appearance at Griffin's tonight and Tuesday night in the Famous Players pictorial version of Shannon Fife's brilliant novel of Gypsy life, "The Rainbow Princess." On the same programme with this fine part offering, the Mutual News Weekly showing interesting scenes from the recent Cuban Revolution, will be shown along with two new selected comedies.

WILD DEER SEEN AT GRIFFIN'S THEATRE

Camera Catches Animals in Filming "The Secret Kingdom"

"The Land of Intrigue," the first and introductory episode of the romantic Louis Joseph Vance serial, "The Secret Kingdom," which was filmed by the Vitagraph Company, featuring Charles Richman and Dorothy Kelly and which commences at Griffin's next Wednesday and Thursday night.

A number of scenes in this episode call for views of the dense forest with quick flashes of deer running to and fro. Bearing out its policy of spending any amount of money in order to secure realism and the proper atmosphere, the officials of this organization sent their company to various parts of the country to secure these scenes. The animals are not tame by any means and may be seen running swiftly as the royal hunting party appear upon the scene intending to kill them.

It was most difficult to photograph these animals for they would rear madly away the moment they saw the man and the camera and at one time it was thought the scenes would have to be omitted.

After much trouble and no little expense the scenes were secured and the finished production is greatly improved by their presence.

THE GIRL WHO SMILES AT GRIFFIN'S FRIDAY

There seems to have been a real longing for the coming here of "The Girl Who Smiles," a musical comedy invocation, which captured the New York public by nothing short of a furriches, and one unqualified approval during an engagement covering 200 performances at the Longacre Theatre in New York.

At last, "The Girl Who Smiles" is scheduled here for a hearing at Griffin's bet. Friday night and humming may be heard upon the streets, the whistling and humming of some of the irresistable song hits, among them, "Teach Me To Smile," "Oh Dear, Marie," "Dance Me Good-Bye," "Life Has Just Begun," "The Story of the Sparrow," and "My Paulina."

"The Girl Who Smiles," can boast of one of the most beautiful scenic and most startling costume productions, as well as one of the best singing choruses ever identified with musical comedy.

Montreal, March 14.—First Aid teams from the principal terminals on the Grand Trunk Railway System met in competition here for the honor of holding the Chamberlin silver shield. The Montreal team No. 1, from Point St. Charles shops, proved successful. Stratford team won second honors. Battle Creek third and Belleville was fourth. Eighteen teams entered the competition.

Dr. Charles J. Copp, Deputy Commission of the St. John Ambulance Brigade overseas, and Lieut.-Col. H. J. Birdwhistle, General Secretary, Canadian Branch of St. John Ambulance Association complimented the teams on the efficiency shown.

The shield was presented to the winning team by Mr. W. D. Robb, Superintendent of Motive Power, acting for President Chamberlin, who could not be present. He stated that the work done by the St. John Ambulance teams in the shops of the Company had earned the commendation of the executive of the railways. It was planned to further extend the movement to bring in men working on trains.

BETTER FARMING TRAIN ON GRAND TRUNK HAS SIXTY-FIVE DAY TOUR

Toronto, March 8th—Great success has attended the tour over the Grand Trunk Lines in Western Ontario of the special demonstration train containing agricultural exhibits. Over more than fifty agricultural centres have been visited and it is expected that the "better farming" lectures delivered in connection with the tour will result in a material increase in the production of farm products throughout the territory.

Six hundred people have visited the train each day. The tour will be brought to a close on Tuesday next, and on the arrival of the demonstration train at Toronto it will be visited by the members of the Ontario Legislature who are kindly interested in this cooperative work between the agricultural authorities and the Grand Trunk.

THE RAINBOW PRINCESS AT GRIFFIN'S TONIGHT

Dainty Ann Pennington makes her second photoplay appearance at Griffin's tonight, and Tuesday night in the Famous Players pictorial version of Shannon Fife's brilliant novel of Gypsy life, "The Rainbow Princess." On the same programme with this five part offering, the Mutual News Weekly showing interesting scenes from the recent Cuban Revolution, will be shown, along with two new selected comedies.

"The Land of Intrigue," the first and introductory episode of the romantic Lewis Joseph Vance serial, "The Secret Kingdom," which was filmed by the Vitagraph Company, featuring Charles Richman and Dorothy Kelly and which commences at Griffin's next Wednesday and Thursday night.

A number of scenes in this episode call for views of the dense forest with quick flashes of deer running to and fro. Bearing out its policy of spending any amount of money in order to secure realism and the proper atmosphere, the officials of this organization sent their company to various parts of the country to secure these scenes. The animals are not tame by any means and may be seen running swiftly as the royal hunting party appear upon the scene intending to kill them.

It was most difficult to photograph these animals for they would rear madly away the moment they saw the man and the camera, and at one time it was thought the scenes would have to be omitted.

After much trouble and no little expense the scenes were secured and the finished production is greatly improved by their presence.

Cherub Devine

By SEWELL FORD

Copyright, 1916, by Hudson Hawksley.

"Great Scott, you!" groaned the Cherub, beginning to wipe his forehead. "But—but you're a new model, aren't you?"

"I'm afraid I can't share your interest in that problem. Let us say I'm not ill any deeper, if you please. You told Mr. Wallaway, and then"—

"Ah, I understand," he sighed me Nick. Wasn't that nice of him when"—

"When what?" spurred on the countess.

"Why, when—when he was in the same boat."

"So Mr. Wallaway exchanged confidences, did he? Delightful!"

"No, not Nick didn't say a word. I found it out by accident. Saw your picture in his locket, you know, and I'd heard about how he and you used to"—

"Really! I'm glad that there was some reserve in that discussion. Was it held on a street corner or in a hotel lobby or"—

"Train!" groaned the Cherub.

"Ah!" said the countess, "The other passengers must have been entertained. Let me see, of them other stories?"

The Cherub sank into a chair.

"That's right," he observed. "Keep it up. I deserve it."

"Remorse," commented the countess, "is always exciting; but it carries no taste in the day. I am curious on only one point. Having made your confession to Mr. Wallaway and having learned of his—well, his attitude toward you—what prompted you to send him here?"

"Why, I thought Nick ought to have his chance."

"Too—you thought!"—The Countess Vecchi repeated to grasp the meaning but slowly. Her brown eyes no longer resembled any kind of fireworks. They regarded him with wide wonder.

"You see," continued the Cherub earnestly, "you so much—you're the kind of a chap—in your class and all that—and I didn't know how you two stood, you know. Why, it didn't look just right for me to butt in before—well, before and then after, you know, to make it up if you wanted to. That's all. It was only right."

The Cherub stopped. Behind his explanation lasted for several moments, and then, with the countess once again spoke the clear cut sharpness of her tone was somewhat softened.

"I understand. I believe I have been told by some one that you had a code of honor that was all your own, that's how you heard what see Mr. Wallaway made of his opportunity?"

"I had him on the bare right. I couldn't ask him right out, you know, but"—

"More delicacy!" murmured the countess.

"Oh, that's nothing for me! But I made him say enough so I could guess how he came out. You told him he wouldn't do, didn't you?"

The shoulders of the Countess Vecchi lifted in a trifle at this.

"I tried to be entirely frank with Mr. Wallaway, as I am now trying to be frank with you, Mr. Devine. I ought to ask you if my acceptance of this service is a purely business transaction."

"Why, sure!"

"You would have paid as much to any one else?"

"Sure, you bet!"

"And about your offer of Hewington Acres?"

"Straight business."

"Then I accept both proposals." She turned briskly to her desk and began to write. Also to arrange papers, as the exemption patent may be obtained as soon as possible. Business-like preparations.

A settler who has exhausted his home stead right may claim a purchase homestead in certain districts. Price $3.00 per acre. Duties—Must reside upon the homestead or pre-emption six months in each of three years, cultivate 50 acres and erect a house worth $300.

WEAK FROM GRIPPE

Ottawa Woman Tells How She Restored Her Strength.

Ottawa, Ont., "Last winter both my husband and myself had a bad attack of La Grippe, and it left us run-down, with no appetite and no strength, and my husband had a bad cough. We tried Emulsions of Cod Liver Oil and other remedies without getting any better. Finally one day a friend told by husband about Tanlac. He got a bottle right away and it proved to be just the medicine we needed to build us up and restore our strength." Mrs. John Shaw.

The reason Vinol was so successful in building up Mrs. Shaw's health is because it is a constitutional remedy which contains beef and cod liver peptones, iron and manganese peptonates and glycerophosphates, all combined in a delicious native tonic wine.

We wish every person in Belleville who is suffering from a weakened, run-down devitalized condition, would try Vinol on our guarantee to return their money if it fails to benefit them.

Sleepy-Time Story About a Very Lively Little Fisherman.

HE WEARS A HANDSOME COAT

Small but Fierce Creature That Is Much Admired by Indians of British Columbia—Sometimes Steals the Farmers' Chickens.

Well, said Uncle Ben, as this is the season when furs are in fashion, I am going to tell you about A FUR BEARER.

The mink is a little animal that is found most anywhere in the northern part of our country.

The creature is about fifteen or eighteen inches long; a relation to the weasel and the skunk and shaped something like they are.

They are fond of brooks and rivers in a burrow or hole in the bank. Its food is fish when it can get fish and frogs or small animals when fish is not to be had.

The mink will take birds, and sometimes it will go for the farmer's poultry.

So when a country boy sees a mink near the farm he is apt to try very hard to catch it.

The mink is a cruel little animal it self and cash fight bravely if cornered.

The mink is a very fine fisherman. His way of getting the fish is to tour along the bank of the stream under a log or in a grotto under the water the mink creeps right after it, and, once it has it in his strong jaws, soon makes short work of it.

The Indians of British America, way up in the far north, admire the mink very much. Indian mothers have a lullaby song that they sing to their little ones, and it goes something like this:

See the merry mink there diving
In the water for the fish,
For the speckled salmon seeking
For the tasty little dish.

Although the fur of the northern mink is much finer than that of the animals found in the colder regions, you can live in almost any of our northern states.

In the winter Mother Nature gives the mink a thick and handsome coat, and it is then that trappers set traps to catch him.

No matter how cruel the mink may be, these furs are more cruel still, for the poor beast is held a living captive, sometimes for several days, until the trapper makes his rounds and puts him out of his misery.

To Be Continued.

CLOSING MEETINGS OF TEMPERANCE CAMPAIGN

The last of the series of free lectures by Mr. Tennyson Smith, B.A., B.D., in Emmanuel Reformed Episcopal Church, Victoria Avenue, tonight, at 8 o'clock, and as the audiences have been with every meeting held, a large gathering is expected. The subject will be "Canonading all along the Line." Tomorrow night, in the Y.M.C.A. Hall, Mr. Tennyson Smith will bring his campaign in Belleville to a close, with his dramatic lecture, illustrated by his subject, "The Humorous, Pathetic and Tragic Phases of Life." Considerable interest has been aroused in this "special night," and we are informed that the tickets which have been in the hands of the committee and workers for a week past, have been selling freely, as an advantage is given to those who purchase tickets before the night by an early door admission, without extra charge. Mr. Tennyson Smith has powers in his lectures, but the pro gramme tomorrow night will give him far more scope for his versatile gifts. The recitals are to be interspersed with vocal and instrumental music by Mrs. Tennyson Smith, whose singing has been greatly enjoyed during the

CHAIR DEAL SETTLED BY THE CITY COUNCIL AFTER HEATED SESSION

Previous Meeting of The Council Made Legal—Much Interest Manifested by Public in Proceedings—Lengthy Session of City Legislature—$5,000 a Month Asked for Patriotic Purposes

It was anticipated by many that this adjourned meeting of the City Council, which was held last evening, would be in many respects one of the most heated and talkative sessions this year, and such it proved to be. From the commencement of the meeting at 8 o'clock, until the approaching midnight hour, it was a continuous discussion. The chief item considered was Ald. Robinson's motion to hold, before His Honor Judge Wills, an investigation in reference to the purchasing of chairs for the City Hall. After an hour or two discussion the motion was defeated by a vote of 4 to 3. At the opening of the session a motion prevailed legalizing the previous meeting of the Council, presided over by Ald. Woodley in the absence of Mayor Ketcheson. This motion was in accord with the opinion of the City Solicitor, who was consulted as to the legality of the meeting, which point was raised by Ald. Robinson on Monday evening. A deputation of citizens, who were active in the recent campaign to secure funds for patriotic purposes, waited upon the Council, requesting that body to make a grant of $5,000 per month to the fund for 1917. The request will be considered at the next meeting of the Executive Committee. Some other matters were brought up and disposed of.

During the session the space in the rear of the Council Chamber railing was filled with spectators, who appear ently took much interest in the proceedings. A number of the police force also stood guard at the door.

When the Council had been called to order Ald. Woodley moved, seconded by Ald. Smith, that we proceed to the order of motions.

Ald. Robinson moved in amendment that we proceed with the first order of business. Ald. Parks seconded the amendment.

Ald. Smith—The motion introduced to proceed to the order of motions, was proper at this time. When the motion to be proposed was passed, then we can proceed to the first order of business.

Moved by Ald. Whelan, seconded by Ald. Smith, that in the opinion of this Council the appointment of Ald. Woodley to be acting as Mayor in the absence of Mayor Ketcheson made at the regular committee meeting of this Council on March 1st, 1917, at which committee meeting all the members of the Council were present, and hence objection is regular and in order; and this Council approves, adopts and confirms all the business transacted as set forth in the minutes of the meeting of the City Council held on March 5th, 1917, Alderman Woodley acting as Mayor.

Ald. Platt said if the motion showed that the last meeting of the Council was legal, then he would support it; otherwise he could not.

Ald. Parks contended the Mayor had not the authority to appoint Ald. Woodley to act in his stead during his absence. The Council should have made the appointment according to the statute.

Mayor Ketcheson—No member of the Council objected to Ald. Woodley being appointed. All members were present when this was done.

Ald. Robinson—We have the audit city that the Council can appoint a member to preside over a meeting in the Mayor's absence, but we have no authority that the Mayor can appoint a member to act in his place. He (the speaker) had the opinion of two lawyers that the previous meeting of the Council was illegal and there was no legal Council proceedings that night. He would record his vote in accord with his amendment. He wanted the matter discussed.

Yeas—Aldermen Robinson, Parks and Platt.

Nays—Aldermen Deacon, Woodley, Smith, Whelan, Marshall and St. Charles.

The motion made by Ald. Whelan was carried on the same division.

Ald. Robinson asked for the yeas and nays, which resulted as follows:

Yeas—Aldermen Deacon, Marshall, Smith, Woodley, Whelan and St. Charles.

Nays—Aldermen Robinson, Platt and Parks.

A motion was made that the minutes of the previous meeting be confirmed.

Ald. Robinson and Parks were both opposed to the minutes being confirmed. Upon a vote being taken Aldermen Deacon, Smith, Woodley, Marshall, St. Charles and Whelan voted for the motion, and Aldermen Robinson, Platt and Parks voted against the motion.

Mayor Ketcheson asked if there were any persons present who desired to address the Council.

A REQUEST

Mr. W. R. McCreary asked that a drain located on Geddes Street, which was blocked up, be removed.

Ald. Whelan replied that he would attend to the matter.

On motion the Council went into Committee of the Whole on reports, communications, etc., Ald. St. Charles in the chair.

The reports of the various committees recommending the payment of a number of accounts were passed, also various recommendations which have already been published.

RE SALARIES

The Special Committee report which dealt with the question of salaries for the city officials, which has already been published, was presented and recommendation was added that the salary of the clerk also a stenographer be employed in the city building.

Ald. Parks—Pension off some officials and get new officials.

Ald. Robinson—The correspondence of the city is not large, and we have two type writing machines in the building which can be used by the city officials. A stenographer was not necessary.

Ald. Deacon—We are taking in more assessment every year, and we have at times to employ extra help. We are going to get value for all the money expended for a stenographer. The city would appreciate such a stenographer, and we will have to get one somehow. We are making a mistake by appointing the city's business in a small business like manner.

Ald. Robinson—What are you going to pay for a stenographer? Ald. Deacon has given us no details, but a jump sum as to expenditures. The manager of the gas department works eight and six days and he earns his money. Some other officials do not work as the gas manager does.

Ald. Parks moved that this recommendation be referred back to the special committee for further consideration, and state the time of service and the salary named.

Ald. Robinson—I am in hearty accord with the amendment.

The amendment was defeated and the committee's recommendation prevailed. Ald. Parks—It is seen how business is done here.

RAILWAY BOARD MEETING

Mr E. G. Porter, K.C., presented a statement of his expenses as the city's representative to a recent meeting of the Dominion Railway Board held at Ottawa, which amounted to $47.

A motion prevailed to pay the account.

The Bell Telephone Company wrote the Council, thanking that body for the use of a room in the city building for a recent meeting, held by the representatives of the company.—Filed.

OTHER MATTERS

A complaint of holes in a board sidewalk on Charlotte street, was referred to the Public Works Committee.

A communication re a grant to the disabled Sailors' Association, was referred to the Executive Committee.

A petition for a concrete walk and a petition for water works extension on a street, were referred to their respective committees.

The committee rose and reported. The report was received and adopted.

ENQUIRIES

Ald. Parks asked Ald. Smith if it was not a fact that the chairs for the City Hall cost $1.50 each. Ald. Smith ordered them, knew they were only going to cost 90 cents wholesale.

Ald. Smith—The order was placed in the hands of a company at a price agreed to by the committee on Market and City property.

Ald. Robinson—Is there any minutes in the Committee's report authorizing any person to order the chairs.

City Clerk—There are none.

Ald. Robinson—Was the purchase made by the Executive Committee?

Ald. Woodley—The Market and City Property Committee purchased the chairs.

Ald. Robinson—Did the account receive the sanction of the Executive Committee?

Mayor Ketcheson—The account was passed by the City Council.

Ald. Smith asked ex-Ald. Duckworth for an explanation, re improvements to the City Hall.

Ex-Ald. Duckworth said Mr. Scantlebury offered to improve the City Hall for $300 and he did not get the contract, but another party got the contract for $400. Ald. Parks was chairman of the Market and City Property Committee, when this was done.

Ald. Parks stated that the roof was leaking and a scaffold had to be erected, and extra work had to be done even to plastering, which fell. The plastering and other necessary work cost $300. Tenders for decorating were asked for and some of the Alder men would not give the tender to Mr. Scantlebury. The tender was given to Messrs Atkins and Cochrane. Some of the Aldermen wanted water colors put on the wall, but it was decided to use oil paint. He was authorized to get the scaffold and he did so.

Ald. Robinson asked when the agreement between the City and Caretaker terminates as regards the administration of Justice account and also if the statistics had been compiled from time to time as required by bylaw to allow the city to make a new arrangement between the city and the county. Will the City Solicitor act as Solicitor for the county as well as for the city when a new agreement is made?

Mayor Ketcheson—How long ago was the agreement made?

Ald. Robinson.—It was some few years ago.

Ald. Robinson—The expenses of administration are less since prohibition and we should make a move to get another agreement more favorable to the city.

Ald. Parks asked the Mayor if he were going to make an apology to James Tickell & Son, and if there would be a refund of any money in connection with the chair matter.

Mayor Ketcheson—I am prepared to discuss this matter at the proper time. I have done no wrong and no one can impute or prove that I have. If any one have a charge that I have profited illegally by the transaction I will fight it out in court and it will not cost the

DEVILISH WORK BY AIRPLANES

Report Just Comes to Light of Means Taken by Enemy to Murder Civilians

Special to The Intelligencer.

LONDON, March 21.—A Reuter despatch from Jassy has given the official report that German airplane raids over Bucharest last November which states that more than one house and people were killed.

In one day Zeppelin and airplane killed three hundred. One group of airplanes descended close to the earth and spent several hours seeking victims, killing workmen and women in fields and streets. Two airplanes raced to overtake two horse vehicles on the road and killed first the coachman then passenger and horses. Airplanes attacked the Royal Palace where four-year-old Prince Marcel lay dying of fever and where it was believed the King and Queen still were. This raid was condemned by Pope Benedict in a telegram to the Queen of Roumania.

SKIRMISHES WITH ENEMY TROOPS FRENCH WIN AND TAKE PRISONERS

Special to The Intelligencer.

PARIS, March 21—Official statement—On Haut St. Quientin Road, skirmishes occurred east of them between our cavalry detachments and the enemy. Our troops late yesterday in a brilliant attack captured the Sevriennois Castle and the village of Jussy, notwithstanding a spirited resistance of the garrison.

South of Chaunay we are occupying the general line of the illiette. All objectives reached are being organized thoroughly.

North and northeast of Soissons we made important progress to the right and left of the Loan road, capturing ten more villages. On the right bank of the Meuse, Verdun front we penetrated German trenches north of Chatrettes farm after subjecting it to bombardment, and found there a number of German dead. Surprise attacks against small French posts southeast of Tahure, to Willy wood and in the region of Limey, were repulsed completely. We took prisoners.

On the remainder of the front the night passed quietly.

MRS. BRIDGET MONAHAN DIES 102 YEARS OLD

MONTREAL, March 20.—Mrs. Bridget Monahan, who was sent to St. Bridget's Home recently to be cared for as she had reached the great age of 102 years, died there this afternoon. For a long time, refused to leave her home where she lived with her daughter because she would not be allowed to smoke her old clay pipe in any home to which she might be taken. But that difficulty was overcome and so she ended her long life in the Home. She smoked her pipe to the last.

GRAND BLACK CHAPTER OF EASTERN ONTARIO

Forty-First Annual Convocation Held in This City—Large Delegation Present—Resolutions Adopted and Officers Elected

The brethren were called to order and the proceedings opened by the usual exercises. The order was well represented by delegates from practically every chapter in Eastern Ontario. Among the distinguished visitors present was a large number of Past Grand Masters and a number of other Past Grand Masters, who have filled this high office with marked distinction. These were seated on the platform with the Grand Masters, Sir Kt. J. H. Devlin, M.P.P., and Sir Kt. Sandy Grant, M. P.P.

A number of clergymen of the various denominations were also present, and took active part in the proceedings.

The Grand Master in opening his address spoke of the splendid brotherly spirit characterizing all the work of the order, and made fitting reference to our trust in the Heavenly Father in all our undertakings. He said that Belleville might well be called the cradle of the Black Knights of British America as it was here the order was instituted on Oct. 16th, 1874. Reference was made to the beautiful situation of the city on the Bay of Quinte and the provision that had been made for the visiting brethren.

Notwithstanding the heavy enlistments of knights, in connection with the war, many having gone overseas, some preparing to go and some having already passed to their great reward, through serving King and Country, the order nevertheless made satisfactory growth in numbers, reporting a considerable increase.

In touching on his work of visitation of the chapters in his jurisdiction Sir Kt. Featherstone, M. M., stated that a special visit was extended him, of the satisfaction he had at the splendid manner in which the work of these chapters was performed by the officers concerned.

His fitting drew attention to the Sentinel, that splendid paper owned by the deaths of a number of Sir Knights and urged the members to carefully read its articles and support it in its great work.

Feeling reference was made to the great loss the order had sustained in the deaths of a number of Sir Knights valuable members of the order.

The Grand Master in closing his address dwelt on the advancement of democracy as a result of the war; there was abroad a real movement towards democracy in church and state spirit that was the spirit of the Black Knights, we need more of that spirit in the Black Knights of 1918, which would make things different in Canada after the war.

The Secretary and Treasurer both presented gratifying reports, showing the excellent condition of the order in every feature of its work, and the bright outlook for the current year.

An address of welcome was presented by Sir Kt. E. Jackman, County Master of Hastings, which was fittingly replied to by Sir Knight F. A. Graham, P.G.M. The local Preceptory, No. 224, also presented an address of welcome which was replied to by Sir Kt. T. K. Allen, Asso. D. G. M.

WEDNESDAY MORNING

Meeting opened at 9 A.M., Rev. Sir Knight Featherstone in the chair. The number of members in attendance was increased by a considerable number.

The Resolution Committee presented report at 10 o'clock.

A resolution was presented expressing appreciation of the splendid service rendered by the late Minister of Militia, Sir Sam Hughes, for King and Empire, in securing thirty-two thousand men and training and equipping them at Valcartier for the war to render service at the front, and in his later work in raising and train-ing one great Canadian army of 350,000 men, expressing the wish that he may long be spared to serve as a valuable servant of the state.

RE-BILINGUALISM

It was recommended that a resolution be forwarded to Sir Wm. Hearst, commending and congratulating the Government upon their firm attitude in this important question, or demanding that they continue to still stand firm, expressing their Order's determination to resist by all lawful means attempts to control our Public Schools by any power other than the state.

RE-PROSECUTION OF THE WAR

We desire hereby to state our readiness to give our emphatic support to Sir L. R. Borden and the Federal Government in any reasonable effort by use of the Militia Act, or otherwise to organize and control the whole resources of the Dominion of Canada—both man and money power—to bring the war to a speedy and successful issue.

"Grand Black Chapter of Eastern Ontario, in convention, March 21st, 1917, raise our cheer brethren fighting for the Empire, but re-affirm our loyalty to the Empire, and our unalterable opposition to the coercion of Ulster."

Grand Master—Sir Kt. T. K. Allen, Kemptville.

Deputy Grand Master—Sir Kt. T. H. Thompson, Madoc; Sir Kt. L. E. Stanley, Ottawa.

Grand Chaplain—Sir. Kt. (Rev.) G. Nickle, Myrtle.

Grand Registrar—Sir Kt. W. J. Rhodes, Queensboro.

Deputy Grand Registrar—Sir Kt. W. E. Tummon, Crookston.

Grand Treasurer—Sir Kt. Geo. Brown, Tweed.

Deputy Grand Treasurer—Sir Kt. Jas. Moore, Eganville.

OUR WEEKLY SERMON

THE FOOTSTEPS OF SORROW

BY REV. A. M. HUBLY

"Few and evil have the days of the years of my life been." Gen. XLVII:9.

The patriarch speaks sadly, as he looks back upon life, from the twilight of its day. The evening shadows are gathering, and the day is but a memory—a mere lapse of time. Perhaps in keeping with human nature, he remembers the sorrows more than the joys, and so finds greater reason to complain, than to thank. The longest life may be marked by littleness; yet, the moment of strong mental impulse within, made real without, is worth all the ages of time! Life is disappointing because we do not embrace the opportunities it affords for working out the greatness of the soul. As believers, we to some measure begin here, that which faith may bring to an end, but we are gifted with powers which last beyond this life. What we begin here is never finished to perfect satisfaction.

Jesus Christ is the only man who could say with sincerity and truth: "I have finished the work which Thou gavest me to do," and He only lived thirty-three years in the flesh on earth.

Jacob, the tale of his years being one hundred and thirty, yet compliains: "Few and evil have the days of my life been."

This is what we learn from the inspired author's account of this man, of Divine covenant promise: most of the evil attending his life, grew out of his own conduct. He, himself was to blame for much of the sorrow along his path of life. This was the bitterest part of the evil, that part that lingers when the day is spent, and when the weary head seeks the pillow and would rest. It is retrospection's sad refrain:—

"Of all the words by tongue-or pen, 'It might have been.'"

How truly this might be the refrain of every one of our hearts, as we look back at the end of each ecclesiastical period of the passing year. We express the same thought and sentiment, confession in the words: "We have left undone those things which we ought to have done; and have done those things which we ought not to have done."

I am afraid, that too often, we say these words, without investing them with the sincerity of heart necessary to their currency at the throne of grace. We are all prone to put on artificial airs, when we approach our Heavenly Father with a hope of obtaining His blessing. We are in great danger of saying the "aish to God with our lips, when our hearts are far from Him." We need to pray earnestly as we enter our place of worship, "From all unreality, artifice, and guile, Good Lord deliver us."

Jacob was a praying man from his youth, no doubt. His Father, "Isaac the man of Peace" was also a man of prayer, and good sou follows good sire.

The trouble with Jacob's praying, it was diluted by selfishness. He always made the best of the bargain. He did it by most unbrotherly dealing with Esau, both as to his birthright and his blessing. He deceived his aged, dying father, and by sharp practice got the best of his shrewd uncle Laban. He was, both by name and character, a "supplanter." He was ever ready to dictate, to God, terms upon which he would be willing to return to God his legal due; the tenth of all he possessed. He also, sinned in neglecting to train his older sons in the way of righteousness, and also in showing partiality to the younger sons.

Let us note some of the "footsteps of sorrow" along this pilgrim's path.

(a) His flight from home. "He went out from Beersheba,' his home of piety, with an attendant, without a doubt a beast to carry him, or any other accommodation, except, as he afterwards, himself says, a "staff." Lonely and depressed with a sense of his desolate vagabondage, he pursues his way toward Haram with gloomy reflections upon what "might have been," had he not stooped to lying and deception.

(b) The anger of Esau, his brother, must have weighed heavy upon his heart, as the daylight gave place to nightshade.

When a man lies, and deceives, he pits himself not only against his brotherman, but against God. A like shall not triumph, he has a part to take in that hurneth, and the fire is kindled at once, the foundations of his implous structure are being consumed, and he knows it not.

Jacob would have liked to have hidden from God as well as from Esau, but he is in possession of the birthright, and the divine promise with which that birthright is invested must not fail; Jacob the supplanter must be saved, and he made princely, as a "prince with God."

That reformation must be along a path of trial! "Sorrow that worketh repentance unto salvation," must be experienced. "Our God is a consuming fire;" all that is rotten and crooked in the man who is in covenant with him must be destroyed.

Jacob would hide from God, as Adam tried to do, and every other man, who sins with the father of lies, rather than believe the word of divine precept and promise.

(c) "Surely the Lord is in this place and I knew it not."

The fuctitve learns an important truth in all the dark story of his wicked intrigue, the name of God is mentioned. The thought of God, in all such circumstances, is a disturbing element. Jacob wanted to get rid of the Divine presence, but here, in a most unlikely place he encounters the God of his father. "He was afraid, and said, how dreadful is this place!"

(d) Many sorrows must have attended Jacob through his sharp practice, and business deali igs of his uncle Laban during his sojourn sing in Haran.

(d) Most memorable are the "footsteps of sorrow," as He journeys back from Haran to Canaan. We may notice them most particularly at "Mizpah;" at "Mahanaim," the Brook "Jabbok," and "Penlel." Each one of these places affords ample material for an ipteresting and instructive sermon, but I must pass on to later scenes in the life of this man whose history is a continual struggle of religious life against disabilities. This is best understood as we listen to his plaintive words in Canaan at the time of the famine. He was a broken-hearted old man, with whom life had gone very hard. His beloved Rachel was dead. Joseph "was not." That was all he cared to know seemingly. Then, the uncertainty of his present fate was still worse than the knowledge of all past woe. They spoke of Benjamin down in Egypt, these older sons, who have, for a long time, been a constant source of anxiety and sorrow to him. The old man was physically worn and tired of his self and the world, and could only answer with pettish irritation when they proposed plans, saying: "If I am bereaved of my children I am bereaved. We see here, in Jacob, a man who has come through many struggles a moral victor, but an exhausted victor, worn out. He speaks as one who would be glad to find rest.

There is something very sacred, in the expressions of the heart-yearning of the aged who think only of preparing to depart and be at rest. Jacob seems to feel the lack of his sons' appreciation of his wishes in this the evening of his day. This would likely remind him of the disreputable manner in which he dealt with the aged dying Isaac, his father.

It was the dissecration of a holy calling when he knelt at his father's death-couch, playing the hypocrite to receive a blessing. In practising this sinful subterfuge, he was trampling upon the choicest and rarest flowers in the home garden of human life, the parting blessing of a Godly father.

It was a stealing of an old man's rights, for a young man's selfish use. It was taking the advantage of the blind, by one who could see for the purpose of serving his own end. The sequence of all such action is one of long, bitter repentance or sorrowful repentence. Some men need both, and Jacob was one of them. His history is written for our benefit. Great was his sin, and God who is mindful of his covenant, will save the sinner who will enter into that covenant, by the wrestling power of prayer, "I will not let Thee go except thou bless me." The blessing was granted, and the way by which it should be remembered, was physical weakness where strength was expected, symbolic of the fact that human strength, and wisdom is perfect weakness and foolishness when pitted against the strength and wisdom of the Almighty. Where Godly sorrow that worketh repentence has done its work God takes the sinner in hand and perfects his redemption in a way that seems disastrous.

Driven by famine to let his beloved Benjamin, be taken to Egypt by his wicked brothers, he cries out, "all these things are against me," when the very reverse was the fact. In the fullness of time he learned that all these things were working together for his good.

He found that Joseph had been preserved from the fate that he had wept over, and had been in Egypt, under the care and protection of his God, providing sustenance for Israel in time of famine. Binnion has been bound in prison to mortify and subdue his haughty spirit; Benlamin was to be taken away, that he might find Joseph alive, happy, honored and prosperous. Thus, do "footsteps of sorrow," shadowed by the "clouds of witness," lead to unexpected blessings.

Jacob is a remarkable instance of a man burdened with disabilities; and not until those are fairly estimated, can the triumph, which in his as he stands, the honored guest of a King, be known.

Life to be truly triumphant must be a heroic struggle with our human disabilities, and one made in the strength and inspiration of those who nobly take up and maintain the struggle.

It may be life-long, but with due respect to precept and promise, peculiar to the terms of the Divine covenant, that triumph is assured.

In the Mount of Jehovah shall be seen as it was with Abraham; God brings His people through sorrow to joy and immortality to fruitage, and through weariness to rest.

"The Lord of hosts is with us.

The God of Jacob is our refuge."

NEW TITLES CREATED

SUBJECT IS INTERESTING CANADA AT PRESENT.

Sir Hugh Graham of Montreal a Newspaperman, Receives a Seat in the House of Lords, and Attention Has Been Called to Our Long List of Knights and Baronets.

No Canadian title has caused more comment than the honor conferred on Sir Hugh Graham, proprietor of The Montreal Star. He is the first Canadian ever given a seat, during a resident of Canada, has been awarded a seat in the British House of Lords. His brother Sir Lord Shaughnessy, president of the C. P. R., is a privy good Canadian, but Sir Hugh Graham, Lord Beaverbrook (Max Aitken), raised to the peerage last year, and Sir Edgar is a native-born Canadian, but he has married Canada and resides in England. Baron Mount Stephen made his career and his money in Canada, but he was born in Scotland, and is also spending his last years there. It remained for a newspaper man to achieve the distinction of a simon-pure Canadian brand of British peerage.

Sir Hugh Graham is also a bona-fide newspaper man. His career is one of the romances of journalism. He has never been openly identified with any other business or financial enterprise. As a youth of twenty-two he founded The Montreal Star. That was almost fifty years ago, and since then he has devoted his whole life to it. It is true he has also made it what it is, which is the most widely read and most profitable newspaper in Canada, "without the influence of any political party, but without any stained policy and without being tied to fixed opinions on any question of the moment."

Incidentally this statement may give a clue to the newspaper opinion in Montreal which is unique. In the old days the Star had two rivals, the Herald and the Witness. Then one day they merged and every one believes that the man behind the merger is Sir Hugh Graham. Then the Star became the only influential in politics and the other paper Liberal. Sometimes it is rather anxious that Sir Hugh. Other papers still seem to the field, but there is probably not another city of half a million population where the newspaper field is dominated to the extent it is in Montreal by Baron Graham.

But why to the peerage? Officially the answer is that it is a recognition of "long and valuable and highest causes of Empire." Some day some critic may inquire if it would not be more to the ultimate benefit of the Empire if titles were granted for services rendered in Canada, for Canada, that is if titles are to be continued at all.

There is also an impression that a movement is under way to "imperialize" the House of Lords and get it in line for the part of representation which it is hoped by some is to take place follow'r peace. On history is that the imperial scheme the House of Lords will be given a large role to fill after the second chamber to an imperial "House" of Representatives or a like imperial legislative body itself. In either case representation from the Dominions in it would be necessary, for as a purely British House it would not undertake to govern the overseas Dominions. It is pointed out that such a representation as Baron Graham, Baron Beaverbrook and Baron Shaughnessy in Canada is securing an active representation.

But even those who do not object to the granting of titles in Canada ought to deny it is because many honors never go to elected representatives of the Canadian people, who have devoted their lives to the service of their country, but always to private individuals, generally of great wealth who sometimes have never held a public office of any kind, not even that of poundkeeper. There have been several instances that Sir Robert Borden would some day be called to the peerage. He would qualify both as a statesman and as a man of considerable wealth.

Canadian members of the peerage include Baron Aylmer and Baron de Longueuil, both of whom are Irish peers without seats in the House of Lords, and Baron de Longueuil, a Canadian title which was in existence before the Conquest, was perpetuated by the Treaty of Paris of 1763, but was not formally acknowledged by a British sovereign until Queen Victoria's day. In addition, there are the baronies Macdonald of Earnscliffe and Baroness Strathcona, the widows respectively of Sir John A. Macdonald and Lord Strathcona. Both live in England.

Pearage as a rule is hereditary. So are baronetcies. An encouraging feature about Canadian titles is that so far these hereditary ranks have been sparingly distributed. The common or garden varieties of knighthood die with the recipients, but there are a few baronetcies. Sir William Osler, the distinguished Canadian, who won his professional fame at Johns Hopkins, holds a baronetcy. So does Sir Edward Cochran Johnson, the fifth baronet in his line, an employe in the head office of the Canadian Pacific Railroad in Montreal. So does Sir Cyril S. Rose, the third baronet in line, a descendant of a former Minister of Finance; and Sir Charles Stewart Parker, a son of a former Prime Minister and Premier; also Sir John Bevercy Robinson, of Edgewater, N. J., U. S. A., whose title comes from the Lieutenant Governor of Ontario, and also Sir Vincent Meredith, head of the Bank of Montreal, who is his own person founds the title.

Australians on Skates.

The cold weather in England and the consequent revival of skating has proved a great novelty to the soldiers from Australia and New Zealand, many of whom tried to skate on the various lakes and stretches outside London. One man with one leg and two rubber-shod crutches made quite good progress at Richmond, with occasional lapses from the perpendicular, at Hollow-on-Thames, where the New Zealand Hospital is, the men were playing the sport greatly.

There were some Canadians who were experts in skating, and at Regent's Park one wounded man from Montreal gave a good exhibition of figure-skating. Afterwards he tried to teach a Newfoundlander, who was in full hospital kit, and their "shoes" and skates did not add to the general note of color. At last the Queensland lander retired, bathed, contented to watch the experts, among whom was Princess Patricia of Connaught.

CRISIS OF WOMAN'S LIFE

Change Safely Passed by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Wagoner, Okla.—"I never get tired of praising Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound because during the Change of Life it was in bed two days after my operations, but all my neighbors and operations did me no good. Now I have been in my garden. Several of the doctors had recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to me."—Mrs. Pinkham, Wagoner, Okla.

Such warning symptoms as sense of suffocation, hotflashes, headaches, backaches, dread of impending evil, timidity, sounds in the ears, palpitation of the heart, sparks before the eyes, irregularities, constipation, variable appetite, weakness and dizziness should be heeded immediately. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has carried many women safely through the crisis.

WHERE THE SHAMROCK GROWS
Splendid Production by Local Talent
At St. Michael's Academy Hall

The St. Michael's Dramatic Club added fresh laurels to those already won in the past years, when last evening the members presented "Where the Shamrock Grows." The hall where the play was staged was filled to capacity with a very appreciative audience, which generously applauded the amateur artists, everyone of whom carried out his or her part to perfection.

"Where the Shamrock Grows" is a very interesting drama in four acts, containing plenty of comedy, and through which runs a story of love and the legendary tales of the fairies of Ireland. The principal roles were very heavy, but their portrayers on evening did full justice to their apportioned parts, so that it would be unfair to particularize any one of them.

The cast of characters were:
Con. O'Callaghan, W. H. Wolff; Robert O'Neill, L. W. Boyle; Kenneth Griffin, Arthur Hebert; Phillip Blake, Geo. Lang; Corporal Kinks, Thos. B. Barrett; General Travers, John Fahey; Mr. O'More, John J. O'Brien; Private Murphy, Dan. Donohoe; Helen Blake, Miss M. Burke; Molly McShane, Miss S. Keating; Mrs. McShane, Miss G. Wrese; Fairy Queen, Miss Hilda Foltz. Accompanist, Miss Helen Foltz. Fairies: Marjory Lynch, Margaret Smith, Mary Cummins, Evelyn McCourt, Violet DeMarsh and Marjory Deane.

Under the direction of Arthur Hebert.

During the performance Harold Barrett, W. H. Wolff, John Fahey and Thos. B. Barrett rendered Irish songs, to which the audience demanded encores.

Another feature of the performance was the presence of a seven piece orchestra, which provided music during the intermissions.

If Stomach Hurts Drink Hot Water

"If dyspeptics, sufferers from gas, wind or flatulence, stomach acidity or sourness, gastric, catarrh, heartburn, etc., would take a teaspoonful of pure bisurated magnesia in half a glass of hot water immediately after eating, they would soon forget they have a stomach. Pittsburgh with stomach trouble, and doctors would have to look elsewhere for patients." In explanation of these words a well known New York physician stated that most forms of stomach trouble are due to stomach acidity and fermentation of the food contents of the stomach combined with an insufficient blood supply to the stomach. Hot water increases the blood supply and bisurated magnesia—instantly neutralizes the excessive stomach acid and stops food fermentation, the combination of the two, therefore, being marvelously successful and decidedly preferable to the use of artificial digestants, stimulants or medicines for indigestion.

Government To Take Over Plant

Enfields to be Made Where Ross Rifle Was Turned Out

OTTAWA, March 20.—No more Ross rifles are to be made in Canada for the Dominion Government. The contract entered into with the Ross Rifle Company in February, 1916, for 100,000 rifles has been cancelled, the company having defaulted on deliveries. By the cancellation of the contract the country has virtually saved something like two million dollars, as the rifle, having been condemned by the British high command, could not be used by the Canadian forces.

FINAL CHAPTER OF ROSS RIFLE.

The circumstances leading up to the cancellation of the contract, which records the end of the fight the Ross rifle chapter—emphasize the care with which and the entire subject has been handled by the Government.

While there were no rifles procurable for Canadian soldiers other than from the Ross rifle factory, the Government was compelled to take over that factory the only rifle they could make, without the long, necessary delay consequent upon rearranging the machinery to produce another kind. The British Government made it clear that they would not consent to such arrangements that they could not undertake to arm the Canadian troops. This condition prevailed until July, 1916. Only three months before—March 30—the War Office had definitely stated, in reply to a cablegram of the Prime Minister, that they could not undertake any undertaking whatever as to when, at all, they would be able to provide rifles for our troops in addition to their own.

TAKEN FEAR TO INSTAL.

It takes at least a year after notice is given to procure and install machinery, tools and so forth, pass the necessary experimental stage, and produce a new kind of rifle. The Ross rifle contract made by the Laurier Government recognized this fact, and provided that a year's notice for such change should always be given. Whether it had so provided or not, anyone acquainted with rifle production, and especially anyone who has studied the experiences in rifle production for the present war, in the United States and elsewhere, knows that no production of a new rifle can possibly be expected without at least a year's preparation. Promises of manufacturers are very readily given, but the rule has been that they are not fulfilled.

URGED ORDER FOR 200,000.

Under these circumstances the Militia Council, on the urgent advice of Sir Sam Hughes, then Minister of Militia, decided to order 200,000 rifles from the Ross Rifle Company. This was done in the winter of 1915-16 strongly urged that not less than one hundred thousand rifles should immediately be placed. The responsible officers of the Militia Department, some of them officials appointed by the late Government, urged in the strongest terms that no less an order would be sufficient, and that an order for a smaller number, as orders for the material had to be placed at once to ensure delivery even by 1918 in the winter. The Government, anxious to confine their commitments to the lowest possible limit, took the responsibility of placing an order for the smaller number, one hundred thousand. The Ross Rifle company represented that they could deliver 17,500 rifles a month, commencing after the completion of the then outstanding order. This previous order was, according to contract, to have been completed some time in October, 1915, and the new order was to have been begun immediately. The company, however, did not complete the old order until the latter part of January, 1917, and, consequently, did not begin to turn out the last order until January, 1917. Even when it did start work upon it, it failed to turn out the 17,500 rifles per month specified, and, as a result cancellation by the Government followed.

MADE CONDITIONS DEFINITE.

The original contract made by the Laurier Government in 1912 did not make orders placed with the company subject to cancellation, but, luckily for the country, Sir Edward Kemp, of the War Purchasing Commission, inserted in definite terms this condition in the order placed in February, 1916 (that is, the House was in session, the Opposition urged the cancellation of this contract upon the ground that the rifles were no longer being used by the Canadian forces, although the Government have taken such advice and cancelled the contract upon such grounds it would have made the country liable to damages perhaps equal to the whole value of the rifles. Instead, the Government gained for default and default being followed by cancellation promptly followed. Cancellation given the company, and not the country, as had been the case before.

It is understood that the company is still turning out rifles for the British Government under an order placed before the Ross was officially condemned.

ASSOCIATION CONFERENCE AT BAPTIST CHURCH

Two addresses were delivered at Victoria Avenue Baptist Church Monday night and were greatly enjoyed by all who were present. As formerly announced this conference was in connection with the conferences being held in different places in Ontario and Quebec, in the interest of Baptist Home Mission work. Rev. J. R. Welsh of Peterborough, who is visiting Hamilton and ways thoroughly employed in Belleville, was accommodated by Mr. T. F. Matthews, Blackwell Co., who offered the cause from the standpoint of a business man. This was the first appearance of Mr. Matthews on a platform in Belleville, but if appreciation will influence him to pay a return visit we will see him again soon. He has the appearance of a prosperous and thoughtful man, and rallies his remarks with similar precision, making those who hear feel that there can be no other side to the question than the one being presented. The addresses were followed by resolutions of thanks and accepting the responsibilities so clearly laid upon this Baptist constituency. The collection taken served ten in their usual cheerful and adequate fashion. There was also a program of choice music.

Alkali in Shampoos Bad for Washing Hair

Don't use prepared shampoos or anything else, that contains too much alkali, for this is very injurious to it dries the scalp and makes the hair brittle.

The best thing to use is plain unsulfited cocoanut oil, for this is pure and entirely greaseless. It's very cheap and beats anything else all to pieces. You can get this at any drug store, and a few ounces will last the whole family for months.

Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in, about a teaspoonful is all that is required. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, cleanses thoroughly, and rinses out easily. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and is soft, fluffy, looking, bright, fluffy, wavy and easy to handle. Besides, it loosens and takes out every particle of dust, dirt and dandruff.

Mr. E. T. Smith's Farewell Night Delayed

An Evening of Dramatic Recitals Pathetic and Tragic Phases of Life—Audience Highly Pleased

Last night, in the Y.M.C.A. Hall, Belleville, Mr. Tennyson Smith brought his campaign in the city to a close by his evening of dramatic recitals, illustrative if the "Humorous, Pathetic and Tragic Phases of Life," Mr. D. V. Sinclair presided, and spoke highly of the lecturer's work.

Tennyson Smith's work as an elocutionist have impressed all who have attended his lectures, but in his recital he exhibited even more remarkable powers and in his interpretation of the varied selection of poems was masterly. His humorous sketches of characters were most amusing, and that of the concert which he attended, convulsed the audience with laughter. He is finished in his rendering of pathetic and tragic pieces, and these held his audience breathless. The climax came and the tension by long continued applause.

Mrs. Tennyson Smith played several most entertaining snatches of songs between the recitals and rendered two pianoforte solos with fine execution, and her solos were sweetly rendered and pleasing. One of the most tractiveness of the programme, which was all greatly enjoyed by a most appreciative audience. At the close Mr. F. H. Henry proposed a vote of thanks to Mr. and Mrs. Tennyson Smith for the splendid service they had rendered in the cause in the town, and this having been very cordially endorsed by Mr. Sinclair and put to the audience was carried with enthusiasm. Mr. Tennyson Smith responded and thanked the committee and workers, mentioning several who had been especially active, also the ministers and churches, the local newspapers, which had both been generous in their help. Mr. T. S. Morris, Grand Councillor, of Hamilton, and Mr. and Mrs. Penn, of those home he has been with, had been entertained. The proceedings closed with the National Anthem.

There is to be another public gathering tonight in the Belleville Conservatory, over Bleecker's store, on Front Street, at 8 o'clock, when Mr. Tennyson Smith will be present, also Mr. T. S. Morris, and after the meeting those who desire to join the Royal Templars will have the opportunity of being initiated.

Pte. Bloom of the 254th Battalion has been ordered to report at Kingston Barracks for medical examination by order of the battalion.

WOUND STOPS SHOCK

A shell explodes in the vicinity of a soldier. He is unwounded, but violently shaken, perhaps knocked over or buried. Its loses his senses for a varying period, and his nervous system, having suffered a violent shaking, is no longer what it was. He starts at the least sound; he cannot sleep; he has pains in the head, and his hands are slightly tremulous; all, except the last symptoms that depend on the word of the patient, and not on the observation of the doctor. Now, there is one remarkable fact to be noted about all these cases. These men are unwounded. No case of "shell shock" is ever found to occur in a soldier who has a wound, no matter how trivial. It seems as if the rending of the flesh by a bullet or a fragment of shrapnel acts as a sort of safety valve, localizing in the injury the destructive force that otherwise is spent on the nervous system.

ARLINE PRETTY OF QUAKER PARENTAGE
Forced to Overcome Parents Opposition Before Going on Stage
Arline Pretty, the clever Vitagraph star who plays in the new serial by Louis Joseph Vance, "The Secret Kingdom," which commences at Griffin's tonight and Thursday and runs and is to be shown for the next 15 weeks, was born in Washington, D. C., on September 5th, 1895. She began her education in the public schools of that capital city, finishing her training at a private school.
Like numbers of other young girls who become fascinated with stage life and believe they have the necessary qualifications to become a Bernhardt or Maude Adams, when she made known her wish to become an actress she met with the opposition of her Quaker parents. Being of a most determined nature, however, she finally prevailed upon them to let her try, with the result that she became a member of the Columbia Players, a prominent stock company of Washington. The fact that she remained three years with this organization, playing leading and leading parts for over two years, establishes the soundness of her judgment in regard to the vocation best suited to her talents.
About three years ago, Miss Pretty was induced to accept a part to pose for the motion picture producing of "The Old Guard," a one-act curtain raised successfully used for years on the legitimate stage. Pictures appealed to her and she later joined a moving picture producing company that had a studio in Tampa, Florida, to play leads.

"TERRIBLE FIGHT" AHEAD

Pool Resources; Fill Army Gaps, Urges Chamberlain

LONDON, March 20—In an appeal to the employers to amalgamate by pooling their interests so as to release all available labor to fill gaps in the British army, Col. Neville Chamberlain today said:

"When the German make a stand we will see terrible fighting and heavy casualties, and in order to defeat them and prevent a decision this summer we must keep the army reinforced.

"It is a long way from Dapaume to Berlin, or even from Dapaume to the Rhine, and we must prepare for the fierce battles to come. We must not let the army languish for reinforcements and therefore must rob some trades of their labor in order to fill the places of men who have gone to join the army in other places."

To Sir Robert Borden:

"Toronto Orangemen believe the successful conclusion of the war is the Empire's main and first duty and that the coercion of Ulster would be the first step towards disruption. Hundreds of thousands of Canadians hold this view."

That He Could Depend on Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills to Cure Many of the Common Ills of Life

Maynooth, Ont. March 21—Living eighteen miles from a drug store, Mr. Chas. Lynch found it necessary to keep in the house some treatment to regulate the action of liver, kidneys and bowels. The habit of keeping these important organs active by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, when required, he attributes the good health of his large family.

Here, surely, is evidence of the value of these pills as a family medicine to protect the health of every family who use it from the common ills, so many of which arise from constipation of the bowels and torpid condition of liver and kidneys.

Mr. James Carr, Maynooth, Ont., writes:—"About 19 years ago I received an envelope containing two of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. I was doctoring at the time with two doctors, and as they did me no good I used the Pills, and by the time I had finished one box I was cured of the pain in the back and shoulders.

"We have great confidence in Dr. Chase's Medicines. I have a family of ten children and have never had a doctor in the house for any of them. We live eighteen miles from a drug store and find that these will save us nearly all the ordinary ills by regulating the liver, kidneys and bowels. That we are all well, we gratefully attribute to their use, and I have recommended them to hundreds and given away many a box, because I believe there is no medicine so good."

By awakening the action of the kidneys, and bowels Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills cleanse the system of poisons and remove the cause of biliousness, constipation, sick headache, backache, kidney disease, and rheumatism. One pill a dose, 25 cents a box, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Ltd., Toronto.

ORANGE GRAND LODGE.

The fifty-eight annual session of the Loyal Orange Grand Lodge of British East, opened in the City Hall in this city, at 2 o'clock this afternoon. There was a large attendance of delegates from the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge. Worshipful Grand Master Capt. E. H. McLean, Paymaster of the 235th Battalion, presided over the deliberations. An address of welcome was presented to the Grand Lodge by Mayor Ketcheson.

Organize For Fight Against Conscription

MONTREAL, March 20.—A series of meetings is being arranged in all parts of the city to protest against conscription and the enforcement of the Militia Act.

At a meeting held last evening which Alderman Vandelac urged the people not to sign the National Service cards, and in which other speakers declared that the questions asked on the card were merely a trap to find out who was fit for war service, a resolution was passed protesting against the action of the Board of Trade in urging the Government to enforce the Militia Act. It was claimed that men were being urgently needed for production here and to send more to "the abattoir of Europe."

The sooner some of these agitators are sent to jail the better for the country.

WHY IT FAILED

These "National Government" promoters do not seem to be living up to press notices. Apparently the backers of these rare individuals have lost faith in the feasibility of the enterprise and have withdrawn their support. At any rate there is an ominous lull in the agitation—ominous for the cause of this so-called "National Government." This last campaign, following so closely upon the heels of the ill-fated Coalition movement, has quite naturally aroused grave suspicion in the public mind that the backers of both are one and the same, and that the real motive behind it is not to win the war so much as to defeat Borden. But both agitations have failed and their failure may in both cases be ascribed to the same cause, viz., Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

At the time the proposition for a Coalition was first mooted the Liberal premier of Manitoba, Mr. Norris, made the statement publicly that if Sir Robrt Borden would stretch forth his hand to Sir Wilfrid Laurier the latter would grasp it.

But did he?

When Sir Robert Borden launched the National Service movement he immediately extended a cordial and pressing invitation to Sir Wilfrid to join him in this great work—a work quite above and beyond the limits of party politics—but Sir Wilfrid tartly refused, and in an attempt to justify his refusal dragged in matters of only petty artisan import. The hand of fellowship in a worthy task thus offered was scornfully spurned. Even some staunch Liberal papers harshly criticized Sir Wilfrid for this regrettable act and it spelled the death-knell of Coalition.

The people of Canada, fully aware of the affront thus offered to Sir Robert Borden, infinitely more to be deplored at a time like this, naturally look with suspicion on any movement aimed at altering the present administration by such underhand means, and for two very good reasons:

First, because the Borden Government is satisfactory to all the people, has carried on Canada's share of the war in a manner satisfactory to all the people, and can be safely trusted to continue the work in an equally satisfactory manner until the end of the war.

Second, because the Liberal leaders, from Sir Wilfrid Laurier down, are not the sort of men who could be trusted at this critical period with any share in the executive management of the affairs of Canada.

THE INTERCOLONIAL

The annual report of the Department of Railways and Canals shows a net surplus for the Intercolonial of $1,517,295 after crediting $1,515,895 to equipment renewal account. Thus has business administration of this road rescued it from a lengthy list of costly deficits to a position of financial stability. For years the Intercolonial was chiefly regarded as a partisan auxiliary of Maritime politicians. More and more it became a mill-stone around the neck of the country and a reflection upon the theory that Government ownership was sound. Hon. Frank Cochrane was the first Minister of Railways to conduct the road along business-like lines. Partisanship and patronage have been slowly but surely eliminated from the railway's administration, and the country taught that in future it is to be conducted by the people for the people instead of by the politicians for the politicians. The splendid surplus of last year speaks well for the new regime.

LIBERALISM.

The Toronto Telegram pays its respects to the Laurier Secretary of State in the following truthful style: "Canadian Liberalism should be proud of the buckets of blatherskite abuse that Hon. Charles Murphy empties upon the head of Lloyd George. "Canada recognizes Hon. Charles Murphy as one of the smallest, cheapest articles that Sir Wilfrid Laurier's favoritism ever put in the shop window of this country's public life. The vote hunter who can inflame Irish-American resentment against Britain's Premier in this hour of trial is the sort of stuff out of which Laurier Cabinets would be made. Hon. Charles Murphy is also one of the reasons why Sir Wilfrid Laurier should not be entrusted with the making of any more Canadian Cabinets."

RURAL SCHOOLS IN MANITOBA.

In a recent report of the Department of Education of the Province of Manitoba, Canada, considerable attention is given to the rural school situation. The prairie provinces of the Dominion are notable for their magnificent distances. The rural schools are frequently very far apart, and it often becomes quite as difficult a problem to find teachers as to assemble pupils in the remoter regions. The work of supervising schools so separated, in many cases situated far away from railroads and good highways, is in itself a task demanding not only exceptional fidelity but endurance.

Yet during the year covered by the report the rural-school inspector visited ninety-eight departments twice, twenty-three departments three times, and ten departments four times. Now and then he found a school closed without notice. He held numerous conferences with parents and trustees. Generally he met with a sentiment of co-operation. Ninety per cent. of the schools had school gardens. An improvement in the local supervision of teaching is noted and commended.

But the report does not stop, as such reports usually do, at a recounting of the usual facts about educational progress. It asks that the same consideration be given to the rural as to the urban child, since the future qualifications of the one for citizenship are as essential as those of the other. And it points a way to better training of the rural child through better treatment of the rural teacher. As matters stand at present the teacher is not given due attention. In the first place, a premium is put upon competition and underbidding: the department would have salaries plainly announced in advertisements, and would make appointments solely upon merit. Moreover, it recommends strongly that comfortable homes be provided for teachers.

Educators have long seen that the great defects of rural education in English-speaking North America lie in the tendency of county and district boards to put price before proficiency. There has been a strong reaction from this idea in nearly all the Eastern Canadian provinces, but it is a remarkable fact that the longest steps toward bringing the rural up to the average urban standard have been taken in the West. Touching upon this subject, The Toronto Globe recently said: "Educational work in the rural districts is carried on out West under climatic difficulties more formidable than our own, but the people are learning to adapt themselves to unfavorable conditions, and carry on a process of intensely practical development." The resistance they encounter is, perhaps, the greatest spur to their endeavor.

Sir Adam Beck a Man With Ideas

NOT a "busy man"—that, after all is ordinary, understandable, human. Most men who are worth while are busy men. That's what makes them worth while. But a living dynamo, ceaseless in activity, limitless in energy, gripping, indomitable, inspiring—such is Adam Beck. The "Sir" seems out of place. Knighthoods clutter wealth, position, special interests, politics, and amiable mediocrity. Adam Beck is no show performer. He is all Man, real red-blooded, much-alive man. He is the property of the ordinary, everyday common folk. His motto is "pro bono publico."

There is nothing ordinary about Adam Beck. Because he is human he is unusual. He has wealth and position—yet none is closer to the masses. He is devoted to "the sport of Kings," breeds fine horses, shows them, and even rides and races them—but no wild-eyed Socialist rises to denounce him as a time-wasting aristocrat. He calls himself a Conservative—but Canadian public life has still to produce a more ruthless Radical.

He has a personality. People take a second look at him. His sound, well-knit, athletic figure is surmounted by a strong face. About the corners of the eyes are the crow's feet of laughter. His lips are tight pressed, as are those of every man of action, but three is an upward turn at the corners. They are very ready to break into a smile, but they can straighten with irrevocable and relentless decision when there is call to fight "with his back to the wall."

Beck's bigness—the mysterious magnetic quality about the man—goes deeper than mere attractive individuality. It rests, in the final analysis, on fundamentals. His convictions are himself. Years ago, early in life. He formed his own philosophy of public service. He determined for himself that humanity was more important to the State than property. The welfare of those whom Lincoln described as the "common people" loomed larger in his eyes than the smug, profit-accumulating complaisance of the Big Interests, dominated as well as spelled with the capital "I." He is a manufacturer, and he turned his factories into profit-sharing-with-the-employees concerns. He threw himself into municipal service. He launched projects for pure drinking water and fought the white plague by establishing sanitaria. Once, twice, thrice he was chosen Mayor of his home city of London. Then the people sent him to the Legislature.

Here came his greatest work. He was never a conventionalist. He was a born trail-blazer. During the latter part of his municipal experience he had associated himself with an embryo movement to secure Niagara power for the people. One morning, shortly after he had been made a member of the first Whitney Cabinet he strode into the Press Room at the Provincial Parliament Buildings and invited the newspapermen to come to his room and confer with him. At that "conference" he did most of the talking. He had dreamed a dream, and with burning earnestness he talked for nearly an hour. When he finished, the Hydro-electric system, almost as it is known today, had been painted in prophetic picture. While the newspapermen were still sitting silent, awed by what appeared then to be the daring and the immensity of the project, Adam Beck rose.

"That," he commented briefly, "is the project I propose to lay before the Prime Minister and the Cabinet. It will go through. It is a people's project; there is no party politics in it. I want the counsel, criticism, and co-operation of the press." It was perhaps the first occasion when a Minister of the Crown appealed directly to the press even before taking his plans into the Council chamber.

The story of how that dream has been realized is recent history. There were times of up-hill tugging; there were disappointments and discouragements; there were occasions when the man had to "fight with his back to the wall." But the man and his work triumphed; the dream came true; the vision became reality.

Three qualities have stood him in good stead. He is thorough; he is practical; he is enthusiastic. If Adam Beck were appointed a commissioner to investigate microbes, he would find out more practical things about germs than a professor of bacteriology. Then he would give leadership to a health campaign that would hum. His campaigns are cyclonic. His energy is dynamic. He dashes from meeting to meeting, imparting his fire to each audience, sometimes five and six in a night. He is patient and painstaking with honest doubt, but ruthless and relentless toward organized opposition. Back of his earnest advocacy he has two big advantages—he has "made good," and the people believe him to be "straight."

Just how much of his public success is justly attributable to the loyal and charming lady who presides over his home and the little daughter who is his almost constant companion on occasions when "father is free" cannot be told; but those who know how eagerly Sir Adam heads for his home whenever opportunity comes, and how buoyantly reinvigorated he returns to public service, attribute much to the inspiration of the hours at "Headley." For Sir Adam is a "home man."—The Globe.

A POET-FARMER SPEAKS.

Peter McArthur Has Unique Views on Empire Building.

Mr. Peter McArthur, the Canadian farmer-poet and litterateur, who in his newspaper sketches and his books such as his recent work, "In Pastures Green," sings the praises of country life, and sounds the slogan, "Back to the Land," recently addressed the Empire Club in Toronto. He claimed some authority to deal with topics of Empire, for, as he humorously said, he had had a unique experience in the study of Empire problems, have been "dead broke" in all the great centres of Anglo-Saxon civilization. This had given him the unusual opportunity of studying imperial problems from the bottom up, instead of the usual way, from the top down, with a return ticket in your pocket. The difference was shown in Kipling's poem—

The toad beneath the harrow knows
Exactly where the tooth-point goes.

The speaker had felt a good many of the tooth-points. In the ordinary way of travel the opposite attitude was true, as shown by Kipling—

The butterfly beside the road
Preaches contentment to that toad.

The public opinion by which the problem of democracy in the Empire will be solved is now being formed, not so much by press or platform or pulpit as by the letters from the boys at the firing-line or on their way there. Hundreds of thousands of these letters are penetrating every community of the country, giving first-hand impressions of Canadian boys on coming in contact with the old-world civilizations; and something is happening that is entirely in accord with the genius of the Canadian people. We are having a great force developed which is entirely leaderless; nobody could have planned it; no one foresaw it; but we are having at the present moment a democratic conference regarding the affairs of the Empire. Our boys are meeting their fellows in the old-world, and the impressions they receive they transmit to us, with the result that public opinion is forming rapidly and becoming very coherent. While we are all interested in the Imperial Conference, and look for the accomplishment of great things from it, it is well to remember that the public opinion by which the men of that conference must stand or fall is now being formed, by the democratic conference of the boys at the front. The speaker told of buying the old farm on which he had been raised, and finding among the documents an old parchment with the king's seal, and the description which for the first time since the creation of the world set out the metes and bounds of the lot of land which his own father had cleared. It made him feel as though he had received the deed directly from the hand of God. He told with fine touches of pathos and humor, how Neil McAlpine had saved the Talbot settlement in Western Ontario by refusing to sell his precious store of wheat, the whole 3,000 bushels of which were given to the settlers in time of stress on the basis of bushel for bushel, to be returned from next harvest. McAlpine, as described by an Irish Catholic who profited by his loyalty and goodness, was "a Presbyterian on Sundays, but a good neighbor all the rest of the time." McAlpine, said the speaker, was a true Empire-builder, helping his neighbors in time of need; and this will be the spirit of Empire after the war. The speaker thought the inner history of Canada had never been written, for thousands of men like McAlpine were never mentioned in histories.

A Gallant Doctor.

Colonel (Dr.) Howard G. Barrie, who is again leaving for the front from his home in Kuling, China, and who has been twice honored by the Serbian Government, was formerly a resident of Toronto. He married the late Hon. John Macdonald's daughter, who with her three children are at present in Kuling, China. At the time of the South African war Dr. Barrie went over to South Africa in charge of several students, and was the first to organize the Y. M. C. A. on the battlefield. A few years ago he went to China as a misisonary for the Methodist Church. He established a hospital at Kuling, China, and went to Edinburgh, where he took a post-graduate course. When the present war broke out he volunteered for service, and in charge of a medical unit, was sent to Serbia. He was the first English doctor in Serbia, and was in command of eighteen doctors. Gradually his staff dwindled to three; he became a victim of typhus fever epidemic and was ordered home to China for a rest.

HOW TO KEEP WELL

Laundry Rules.

THE FLANNELS, knitted bands, undershirts, etc., should be washed without a washboard by soft squeezing with the hands in warm water. Any good soap without too much alkali should be used. They should then be rinsed in several waters of the same temperature. A sudden change from hot to cold water hardens the fibre of the wool and thickens up the garment. Cotton garments may be washed in soap and hot water.

Care of Diapers.

A large enamel or galvanized pail should be provided to soak the wet diapers when taken off and another for soiled diapers. Both should be covered to keep off the flies. The wet diapers should stand in water until they can be washed. The soiled diapers should be cleaned separately. The rinsings of both should be disposed of in the water-closet. Diapers should be scrubbed with good soap and hot water until clean. They should then be rinsed in two or three waters until the water shows clear. Sore and raw buttocks may result from the use of impure soap or imperfect washing or rinsing. If the water is hard, soften it by using sufficient pure borax. Clothes dried out of doors are sweet and white and smell sweeter than those dried inside.

BABY SICKNESS.

The fussy baby who may just be beginning to get sick and the sick baby, no matter from what ailment, should be kept strictly in bed. Do not rock or nurse him. Keep things very quiet in the room. How are you to know that he may not be at the beginning of an attack of scarlet fever, measles, or diphtheria?

Get a competent doctor and in the meantime secure good ventilation by having the window open wide, if possible, a grate fire in the room. The temperature should be at 65 Deg. F. Try it with a thermometer.

Write down a record of what is happening so that you may be able to tell the doctor when he comes. Take the baby's temperature if you have a thermometer and know how to use it. Mark down the number and character of the movements and the rest of the time appears to be any. Think of what food the baby has had, the quantity of urine, and save a specimen in a clean enamel dish. Note if there is cough, rapid breathing, or vomiting, restlessness, and crying. Mark the color and general appearance and hours of sleep. The written record makes it easier for the physician to come to a satisfactory conclusion regarding the trouble.

Getting Well.

When the baby begins to get well do not stuff him with too much food. A child will take food when he needs it. Some diseases such as acute rheumatism, nonitis, and diphtheria require prolonged rest if full recovery is to be expected.

Taking the Temperature.

A baby's normal temperature runs from 98 to 99½ Deg. F. If above 101 Deg. F. get a doctor at once. Take the temperature in the following manner: Shake the mercury well down and insert into the rectum for about one inch. If carefully done there is no pain. Leave it there for half a minute and mark down the record. Be alarmed if the temperature is 101 or 102 Deg. F. or over. Many temporary ailments of children show moderately high temperatures, and relief is often obtained by simple measure.

Croup.

Simple croup is a spasmodic condition of the larynx (windpipe) with a rasping cough and difficulty in breathing. It often alarms the mother but is not dangerous. In the absence of a doctor it is a good plan to induce vomiting, which may be done by the administration of a teaspoonful of syrup of Ipecac. An infant of six months old should be given five drops every fifteen minutes till relief is obtained. Inhalation of steam is also useful. Make a tent over the bed and put the steam from boiling water over an alcohol stove. A teaspoonful of tincture of benzoin (Friar's Balsam) to a pint of water is more useful. Hot compresses or a mustard plaster over the upper part of the chest is a good measure. Five drops of syrup of Ipecac hourly in the evening will help to prevent recurring attacks.

Have the doctor assure himself that the baby has no adenoids or large tonsils, as these are a common cause of Croup.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

Winnipeg, March 19.—Wheat responsibly just before the close in sympathy with American markets. The price was 3¾ up for May; 2¼ for July and 1¼ higher for October. Oats gained ¾ in May and ¾c in July. Barley gained ¼c. Flax gained 1¼ in May and 1¼c in July. There was a light local trade. Wheat futures bought lightly, as did exporters, but the bulk of the business was in the hands of scalpers.

The cash market was unchanged for the straight grades, with coarse a little better. Offers were unchanged.

Shell Kentish Coast.

LONDON, March 20.—German torpedo boats shelled towns along the Kentish coast early Sunday morning. It did little damage, according to an official statement issued Sunday night.

The official report reads:

"Some enemy torpedo boats and destroyers approached the Kentish coast at 12.45 o'clock Sunday morning. They fired a number of shells at certain coast towns. There were no casualties. The material damage was slight, one occupied and two empty houses being hit."

Released Famous Woman.

PETROGRAD, March 20.—Madame Catherine Breshkovskaya, otherwise known as the Grandmother of the Russian Revolution, has been invited by M. Kerenski, Minister of Justice in the new Cabinet to return to Petrograd. Madame Breshkovskaya has spent thirty years in exile, most of the time in prison. She escaped twice, only to be recaptured. She is 72 years old, and was a daughter of a Russian noble.

PERSONALS.

Ontario Woman.

Chatham, Ont.—"Some time ago I had a general breakdown. It terminated in quite a bad case. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription was recommended to me by a friend who used it and received great benefit. I began taking it and in six months I was entirely cured of my ailment and have never had any return of same. I can recommend this medicine as being good, if one will give it a fair trial."—Mrs. Conrad Accaret, 69 Edgar St., Chatham, Ont.

Thousands of women in Canada have taken it with unfailing success.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a true friend to women in times of trial. For headache, backache, hot flashes, mental depression, dizziness, fainting spells, nausiada and exhaustion, no one should never fail to take this tried and true woman's medicine.

Prepared from nature's roots and herbs, it contains no alcohol, or narcotic nor any harmful ingredient. In either tablet or liquid form. Write Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., to-day for free medical advice.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets not only the original but the best Little Liver Pills first put up over 60 years ago, by Dr. R. V. Pierce, are entirely vegetable, perfect in action, mild and natural laxative. Sugar coated. Druggists sell them.

"Find My Stand There."

Just because a man wears civilian clothes is not sufficient reason to take it for granted that he is a shirker or is loafing on the job of serving the king's uniform. A minister's daughter, disdaining to have any such thing to do with a creature still in mufti, learned this to her regret when she entered a street car in Toronto recently.

The car was, as usual, crowded. A young man rose and offered his seat to the young lady who entered.

"No," she said, with a toss of her head and a scornful look at the young man. "I wouldn't accept a seat from a civilian."

For a moment the young man was embarrassed.

"Have you any relatives at the front?" he queried.

"Yes, I have two brothers there," she replied.

"Well, the next time you write ask them if they can find my hand over there," he said quietly, as he showed his arm minus the hand.

With this it was the lady who was embarrassed. The parties separated and the lady made her exit.

A True Democrat.

Mr. John Ross Robertson, proprietor of The Toronto Telegram, had well known for his public benevolence, has declined a knighthood, which, it seemed, was proffered to him among the Grizard New Year honors. "There is no reason to give, and (that I cannot) the same right as the others who have accepted," said I declined—I hope graciously and gracefully," remarked Mr. Robertson.

On the same day, it seems, Mr. John Ross Robertson declined a knighthood, which the Borden Government offered him, and, in the words of a well known politician, "it is the first time in the history of Canada that anyone declined a knighthood and a senatorship at the same day."

The first Canadian to decline that honor was the late Sir J. B. Robinson, in 1834, when both he and Sir Allan Macnab were recommended for knighthood. Sir Allan accepted. Mr. Robinson declined, but was knighted many years later.

Record Filling Contract.

The largest piling contract ever given on the Pacific coast, according to the Vancouver Sun, has just been awarded by the Canadian Pacific Railway to a Vancouver creosoting company. The contract amounts to $150,000. A large number of the piles to be delivered will be 120 feet long. This gives a idea of the size and permanency of the dock extension that is being made by the railway.

Bank Clearings Increased.

Canada's bank clearings were $10,157,187,917 last year, as compared with $7,796,781,250 in 1915, an increase of about 35½ per cent.

WAR LOAN

DOMINION OF CANADA

Issue of $150,000,000 5% Bonds Maturing 1st March, 1937

Payable at par at Ottawa, Halifax, St John, Charlottetown, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Regina, Calgary, Victoria, and at the Agency of the Bank of Montreal, New York City.

INTEREST PAYABLE HALF-YEARLY, 1st MARCH, 1st SEPTEMBER.

PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST PAYABLE IN GOLD.

ISSUE PRICE 96.

A FULL HALF-YEAR'S INTEREST WILL BE PAID ON 1st SEPTEMBER, 1917.

THE PROCEEDS OF THE LOAN WILL BE USED FOR WAR PURPOSES ONLY.

10	per cent on application
30	" 16th April, 1917;
30	" 15th May, 1917;
26	" 15th June, 1917.

The total allotment of bonds of this issue will be limited to one hundred and fifty million dollars, exclusive of the amount (if any) paid for by the surrender of bonds as the equivalent of cash under the terms of the War Loan prospectus of 22nd October, 1915.

The instalments may be paid in full on the 16th day of April, 1917, or on any instalment due date thereafter, under discount at the rate of four per cent per annum. All payments are to be made to a chartered bank for the credit of the Minister of Finance. Failure to pay any instalment when due will render previous payments liable to forfeiture and the allotment to cancellation.

Subscriptions, accompanied by a deposit of ten per cent of the amount subscribed, must be forwarded through the medium of a chartered bank. Any branch in Canada of any chartered bank will receive subscriptions and issue provisional receipts.

This loan is authorized under Act of the Parliament of Canada, and both principal and interest will be a charge upon the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Forms of application may be obtained from any branch in Canada of any chartered bank and at the office of any Assistant Receiver General in Canada.

Subscriptions must be for even hundreds of dollars.

In case of partial allotments the surplus deposit will be applied on the payment of the amount due on the April instalment.

Scrip certificates, non-negotiable or payable to bearer in acceptance with the choice of the applicant for registered or bearer bonds, will be issued, after allotment, in exchange for the provisional receipts.

When the scrip certificates have been paid in full and payment endorsed thereon by the bank receiving the money, they may be exchanged for bonds prepared, with coupons attached, payable to bearer or registered as to principal, or for fully registered bonds, when prepared, without coupons, in accordance with the application.

Delivery of scrip certificates and of bonds will be made through the chartered banks.

The issue will be exempt from taxes—including any income tax—imposed in pursuance of legislation enacted by the Parliament of Canada.

The bonds with coupons will be issued in denominations of $100, $500, $1,000. Fully registered bonds without coupons will be issued in denominations of $1,000, $5,000 or any authorized multiple of $5,000.

The bonds will be paid at maturity at par at the office of the Minister of Finance and Receiver General at Ottawa, or at the office of the Assistant Receiver General at Halifax, St. John, Charlottetown, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Regina, Calgary or Victoria, or at the Agency of the Bank of Montreal, New York City.

The interest on the fully registered bonds will be paid by cheque, which will be remitted by post. Interest on bonds with coupons will be paid on surrender of coupons. Both cheques and coupons, at the option of the holder, will be payable free of exchange at any branch in Canada of any chartered bank, or at the Agency of the Bank of Montreal, New York City.

Subject to the payment of twenty-five cents for each new bond issued, holders of fully registered bonds without coupons will have the right to convert into bonds of the denomination of $1,000 with coupons, and holders of bonds with coupons will have the right to convert into fully registered bonds of authorized denominations without coupons at any time on application to the Minister of Finance.

The books of the loan will be kept at the Department of Finance, Ottawa.

Application will be made in due course for the listing of the issue on the Montreal and Toronto Stock Exchanges.

Recognized bond and stock brokers having offices and carrying on business in Canada will be allowed a commission of three-eighths of one per cent on allotments made in respect of applications bearing their stamp, provided, however, that no commission will be allowed in respect of the amount of any allotment paid for by the surrender of bonds issued under the War Loan prospectus of 22nd November, 1915, or in respect of the amount of any allotment paid for by surrender of five per cent debenture stock maturing 1st October, 1919. No commission will be allowed in respect of applications on forms which have not been printed by the King's Printer.

SUBSCRIPTION LISTS WILL CLOSE ON OR BEFORE THE 23rd OF MARCH, 1917.

SAFETY AT ANY SPEED

In both Series "18" FOUR and Series "18" SIX, Studebaker has concentrated in refining, perfecting, and strengthening one of the best full-floating axle systems ever put under a car, regardless of price.

In qualities of steels; in development of design; in accuracy of manufacture, Studebaker could not improve on its construction, even if it manufactured a car to sell for $5000.00.

The weight of the car; the strain of stopping, starting and driving the car; the strain of side-thrust in turning corners at high speed, are all absorbed by the giant strong axle housing, and all of these strains and the weight of the car, are carried on this housing on big Timken bearings.

Cherub Devine

By SEWELL FORD

Copyright, 1909, by Mitchell Kennerley

"Why, the sneaking, unmannerly villain!" exploded Timmins. "He ought to be put in jail, sir."

"Well, something ought to be done with him. What's that little stone coop without any windows down there by the swan lake?"

"That's the icehouse, sir."

"Full up, is it?"

"Oh, no, sir; not now, sir. It's very near empty, I think."

"Room for a cot bed and a chair or so, is there?"

Timmins grinned expressively.

"Plenty of room, sir."

"How about air, Timmins?"

"Excellent ventilation, sir. Has to be, you know."

"Good! Now, you slip out the back way and go down there, will you? Go inside and shut the door. When you hear me knock you'll know I've come with a caller. Get the idea, eh?"

"Do I, sir! Oh, my eye! Oh, my eye!" And, with one hand over his mouth, Timmins disappeared.

The icehouse at Hewington Acres was a most substantial building. In the front were two doors—one at the top, reached by a permanent ladder; the other on a level with the ground. This latter was a double door, with an air space between. The outside half was of thick oak and swung on heavy strap hinges. In the upper panel was a diamond shaped design of auger holes. Standing outside and looking up at these perforations was Cherub Devine. He was not studying the design. He was talking to some unseen person behind the thick door, conversing easily and pleasantly in spite of the handicap. True, he was on the free side of the door. That makes a difference, of course.

On the whole, Cherub Devine felt a grim satisfaction in knowing that the count was safe under lock and key instead of dodging around the grounds, where he might come across the countess at any moment. Even if there was no danger of a tender reunion it was best to have the count shut up, for he was bent on making trouble. At that very moment he was so declaring to the full extent of his lung power. Through the auger holes he was shouting that Mr. Devine, the countess, Mr. Hewington and Timmins should all pay dearly for this high handed outrage.

"Sorry you're so stirred up over it," soothingly observed the Cherub.

"Kidnaper!" shrieked the count.

"Guilty," responded the Cherub. "First offense, though. Now for heaven's sake calm down."

"It's beastly in here! My shoes are getting full of something!"

"Nothing but sawdust," answered the Cherub. "I'll have Timmins spread a rug or something over it."

"I'll make it hot for you when I get out!"

"Sure! And—for—the Hewingtons, too, I expect?"

"You'll both have to pay for this as soon as I'm free."

"There! You see!" exclaimed the Cherub cheerfully. "You'd stir up a bad muss, of course. We could put you in jail for attempted blackmail, but that would bring out that the countess wasn't a widow, and all that old gossip would be dug up again and printed in all the papers, and I'd be held up as a kidnaper. No, my dear count, it wouldn't do at all."

The Cherub had wished him a pleasant evening and a good night's rest and was just turning to go to the stables to see Timmins when he found himself facing Mr. Hewington. Astonishment was stamped on every line of the old gentleman's aristocratic countenance.

"Why—why, Mr. Devine! You seem to be holding a conversation with some person in there." And he indicated the closed door of the icehouse.

"Guess I was," admitted the Cherub.

"How singular! And—er—might I—er—ask"—

"Suppose you don't," put in the Cherub. "It would simplify matters a lot if you didn't."

"I have been accustomed, Mr. Devine, to be told of all that went on about this estate, even to the smallest detail. I should like to know, sir, to whom you were talking just now."

"All right," said the Cherub, with a gesture of resignation. "There's the gentleman's card."

As Mr. Hewington [illegible] and read the full name of Count Vecchi an expression of complete consternation, not to say panic, spread over his features.

"Impossible!" he whispered hoarsely.

"Just what I thought when he sprung it on me," commented the Cherub. "I told him he was a dead one. He says he isn't."

"Then the count isn't dead, eh?"

Cherub Devine watched with mild amusement the confusion of mind into which Mr. Hewington was immediately plunged.

"My dear Mr. Devine," said he at last, taking the Cherub by the arm, and leading him away from the icehouse, "I—er—ah—that is—I hardly know how to—to"—

"Yes; I understand. Why not let it come straight out, though?"

"Well, I must begin by making the regretful admission that we discovered soon after my daughter's marriage—indeed, on the very day of the ceremony—that he was a person of dissolute habits."

"Yes. I heard all that the first day I struck here. And then?"

"Then, sir, there was an immediate separation. For a time I continued to supply him with funds, however, but after we left Italy I gradually ceased to do so. About two years ago the count became so dissipated that it was necessary to confine him in a sanitarium. He disappeared from his old haunts. This gave rise to the rumor that he was dead. It was so reported here. Naturally the countess assumed appropriate mourning garb. A few weeks later we learned the falseness of the rumor. The count was still in the sanitarium and much benefited by his stay there. But this fact was not made public."

"I see," said the Cherub. "He says he's come to collect that income you promised him."

"The impudent scoundrel!" exclaimed Mr. Hewington, lifting his clinched fists.

"That's the talk! I wouldn't give up to him if I were you. But he says if he isn't paid he'll bring suit and advertise the fact that he's still alive."

"The villain!" gasped Mr. Hewington.

"I had him sized up that way from the start. That's why I chucked him in on the ice."

"On the—the ice, Mr. Devine?"

"Why, sure! I thought he'd cool off quicker in there than anywhere else."

"Ah, I had forgotten! That is the icehouse, of course. And he threatens to make public his identity? This is terrible, Mr. Devine. I have told every one that he was— Why, just think! It will be known that I have stooped to—to deception."

The trembling jaw of De Courcey Hewington grew firm.

"Devine," said he, "this must not be. That man must not be allowed at large."

"Oh, I'll attend to that, all right. You just stay mum and I'll keep him on the ice. But not a word to the countess."

"Not a word," promised Mr. Hewington. "And in a month or so I will build another icehouse for next summer's use."

"For next summer!" And the Cherub's gaze widened as the full significance of this remark became clear to him. "Then you're planning to give the count a good, long term, eh? Well, say, there's nothing slow about you, is there? Whew! Guess I'll have to think it over."

CHAPTER XII.

MR. DEVINE took the path toward the stables, chuckling softly at the odd dilemma in which he found himself.

"If ever I needed the help of a slick lawyer, I guess it's now," mused Mr. Devine. "I'll go to town and look up Bob Driscoll."

Mr. Hewington was content that Count Vecchi was no longer a menacing figure to him and to his daughter. Mr. Devine was seeing to that. Besides, there were more cheerful things to occupy Mr. Hewington's mind. He had learned only a half hour before of some very good news. Hewington Acres was no longer owned, even temporarily, by another. In some way or other the estate had been restored intact to his daughter. He had not grasped the details of this fortunate transaction, but he [illegible]ly that young Mr. Walloway had been largely instrumental in clearing up the difficulty. Adele had mentioned him. He was an excellent young man, Nicholas Walloway. True, his family was not of precolonial origin, but it was well enough established as families went nowadays. And he was so distinctly superior to such young men as this Cherub Devine, who had his good traits doubtless, but who was so lacking in the finer instincts. It might be well to talk the subject over with Adele.

He could have found no topic better suited to the mood in which he found the countess that evening. Her brown eyes seemed to glow with a rapt radiance at the first mention of the Cherub's name.

"What absurd notions we did have of him a few days ago!" she observed.

Her father waved his glasses in mild protest.

"We took only reasonable precaution, my dear."

"Against what, daddy? He didn't become intoxicated; he didn't carouse; he didn't fill the house with sporting characters. You remember how you stormed when you heard about his party?"

"I admit being somewhat concerned upon your account, Adele. I feared that his guests might be"—

"Yes; I know. I was looking for a crowd of prizefighters and gamblers, and the Walloways came with Bishop Horton! How silly I felt!" she exclaimed.

"But he is crude—very crude—in manners, bearing, speech, especially in his speech. Now, compare him with Nicholas Walloway. Nicholas is a well born, polished, refined"—

"Blockhead!" broke in the countess. "He's wooden all over."

"My dear, my dear! Nicholas, you must remember, is a gentleman!"

"So I have always believed," replied the countess. "But I don't care. I prefer a live man to a wooden gentleman!"

Mr. Hewington had hoped, now there was no longer necessity for Adele to propitiate this person, that she would politely but effectually put an end to their brief friendship. In his own tactful way Mr. Hewington stated as much.

"Then you should be thoroughly satisfied," responded the countess, "for soon after he had given us back our home I sent him away forever."

"What! Forever! No, no, Adele; that will not do at all. You must not be so abrupt. The fact is that I—er—there is a little matter in which Mr. Devine has undertaken to give me assistance."

"Daddy! You haven't borrowed any money from him, I hope?"

"I? Borrow money of him! Certainly not. It is quite a different affair."

Mr. Hewington clearly saw that the time had come for him to employ that superior mind of his in the skillful management of a daughter who was at times presumptuous enough to form opinions of her own. And what a shrewd old gentleman he was, to be sure! How well he understood the limitations of feminine mentality!

"For example," he went on, "you have never seen how this paragon of yours can deal with a rival."

"Oh, a competitor in business!" laughed the countess. "I shouldn't expect him to be generous in business."

"In the instance I had in mind," suavely continued Mr. Hewington, twirling his glasses slowly, "he was not dealing with a business competitor. I believe I said rival."

"You don't mean a—a"—

"Exactly. A man who stood in his way in what I presume Mr. Devine chooses to regard as an affair of the heart."

"Why—why, I don't understand, daddy! What man can you possibly mean?"

"Now, now, my dear! There you go, wanting to be told things which you probably could not understand and which"—

"But I can. I do. Tell me at once. Was it Nicholas Walloway?"

Mr. Hewington waved his glasses most impatiently.

"Most assuredly not. What a strange conception that Nicholas and Mr. Devine should be rivals in love! No, quite a different person. And what does Mr. Devine do when he meets him and learns his identity? Seizes him forcibly, drags him into the nearest building and locks him up without law or license."

"Father, I can't believe such a story. Where did you hear such a preposterous tale?"

"From Mr. Devine himself."

"But how? Where did all this occur?"

"Only this afternoon."

"Since he was here? But you have not been away. Then—then it was here on our grounds. Do you mean to say that Mr. Devine has some one locked up in one of our buildings?"

Mr. Hewington could only take refuge behind his dignity.

"That is quite sufficient, my dear. We will not discuss Mr. Devine and his peculiar doings any further, if you please. The subject is one upon which I do not care to dwell just now. I must go to my desk. Good night."

It is hardly fair, though, to speculate as to the innermost thoughts of the Countess Vecchi at that trying moment. We know that she was rather a nice young woman, very good to look at and more or less entertaining as a companion. Suppose she did narrow her eyelids and bite to a riper redness her gracefully curved underlip. We may even admit that she crushed the meshes of the silver girdle until there were red marks on her white palm. She was no pallid compendium of all the feminine virtues. She was a young person of high spirits and ready passions. And she could not wholly forget those stories about La Belle Savoie and the dinner to chorus girls. Throwing a lace affair over her head and shoulders, she slipped quietly out through the big entrance hall to the wide veranda and down one of the paths leading toward the sound. It was after 8 o'clock and quite dark, as the old moon was now rising late, but she knew exactly where she was going.

She saw something which made her lean forward and strain her eyes with intent interest. From one of the smallest buildings, a low stone structure, which she judged must be the icehouse, issued a cheery beam of light. Some one was standing in the half opened doorway. Only for an instant did this spectacle remain visible. Then the door was shut with a bang, and the yellow ray disappeared. A moment later the countess thought she could distinguish a man making his way across the lawn toward the servants' wing of the house.

Now, all this seemed very singular to the Countess Vecchi. So, keeping the figure of the man in sight, she began to walk parallel with him in order to see where he was going. When she saw he was making directly for the side door of the south wing she grasped her skirts firmly and started to run, and she overtook him.

"Why, Timmins, is it you?"

Obviously it was. On one hand he balanced a tray; in the other he carried a formidable looking club.

"Lor', miss, what a start you gave me!" said he.

"Did I? I'm sure I didn't intend to frighten you, Timmins. But I saw you coming, and there was something I wanted to ask you. What is it you have there, Timmins?"

"Why, miss, I've been a-givin' the puppies their supper."

"Yes, I know. But I thought you usually carried their food in a pail. What have they had tonight?" And before Timmins could protest she had lifted the linen cover which had been thrown over the tray. A variety of dishes stood revealed.

"Why, Timmins, surely the coach puppies do not eat French chops!"

He was ready witted, was Timmins.

Choir Deal Settled

Ald. Hall stated that in 1913 the City loaned to the Tivina Steel Company of this city $1,500 which was to be returned in seven instalments of $150 per year with interest. The Company has not kept the agreement and made no payments since 1914. Up to date the company owes the city $717.50. What is the reason the City cannot get the money?

Mayor Ketcheson—The City Treasurer is looking into the matter. The Company has been a struggling Company and has spent some $20,000 in Belleville. He (the speaker) believes that in the near future everything would be paid the city. He did not think the city would lose any money with this company. The city's indebtedness was secured by mortgage.

Mayor Ketcheson also referred to the fact that two weeks ago at the Council meeting he was viciously attacked and he was not present to defend himself. There would be no debating society at this meeting.

MOTIONS

When this order of business was reached, the debate in earnest commenced and lasted for a considerable time.

Ald. Robinson moved, seconded by Ald. Parks, that tenders having been called in the Belleville newspapers that the tenders for chairs for the City Hall, received unfair treatment; therefore that His Honor Judge Wills therefore that His Honor Judge Wills be requested to investigate the same, under the provisions of section 249, chapter 192 R. S. O., 1914 of the Municipal Act, providing that the cost of said investigation be no more than $100.

Ald. Robinson said many remarks had been made about him (the mover) in reference to this matter. He did not insinuate that the Mayor or any member of the Council had done anything wrong in this transaction, but His desire was to have the matter investigated as there was no need to talk about the chair deal. There is every appearance that this whole thing was an illegal transaction. Mr. Tickell is not asking for any profit but is acting on principle. The firm did not get the order although their price was no higher but less than what the chairs were purchased for. It will be seen that as mentioned no names, but he felt then and now that the matter should be investigated. The resolution asks for a judicial investigation and he would say that the $100. Mr. Tickell offered to put the money up for an investigation and let the council keep its good name if it has one.

Ald. Parks supported the motion. He had been accused of getting some of the graft because the matter was left in abeyance. The speaker then detailed the purchasing of the chairs. A meeting was held at which he (the speaker) was not present when the city messenger was sent around to get tenders and the Messrs Tickell & Sons were the only tenders. Ald. Smith bought the chairs at 90 cents and they cost the city $1.50 a piece or 60 cents a chair. Who got the profit of $30? This Council has been run this way for years. We have been hoodwinked. A man that votes against the motion is voting against the city's interest.

Mr. J. L. Tickell—We have no satisfaction pro-or con in this matter. We have Mr. Mikel to act for the firm, he would like him to be heard in the matter. On motion Mr. Mikel was heard.

Mr. W. C. Mikel, K. C. addressed the Council. He said he was present at the request of Mr. Tickell. The motion made was one all could vote intelligently upon. The request is before the Council. It does not say that any one is wrong, but the investigation will clear everything up.

Mayor Ketcheson.—What is the charge. If Mr. Tickell is prepared to make a charge against any member of the Council or City Official for doing an illegal act I will hold up both hands for an investigation.

Mr. Mikel—The section under which an investigation can be made is broad. It is intended to give a public man or any person a chance to have an investigation. It is not necessary for offence to be charged to come within section referred to. If an investigation is held the public will be in possession of the facts which the public does not know. An investigation will clear everything up and it will be more satisfactory to Mr. Tickell and the members of the City Council. It will be an investigation that can be cleared up in a day and clearly the air. No injustice will be done to any person. If there is any wrong done it will be shown where the wrong is. Mr. Tickell feels he has been unjustly dealt with in this transaction. If the request is turned down the public may draw conclusions that will not be just what they should be.

Ex-Ald. Duckworth—I am convinced that Ald. Parks has persistently follow the market and City property for years. Ald. Parks for two years tried to get a heating plant, and he said it would cost $2,500. It was put in for $1,979 and in addition to that the basement was cemented over. Completion was even charged in the payment of Front street when it was put down. The speaker detailed the repairing of the City Hall and decorating of the City Hall. Tenders for the decorating of the hall were given to Messrs Atkins and Cochrane, and Ald. Parks appeared to be the only man that they would listen to. Ald. Parks says he knew nothing of the meeting when the chairs were bought. He (the speaker) was authorized to see about getting chairs for the City Hall and he did ask the city messenger to get tenders. Ald. Parks was asked to attend a meeting of the Committee to consider the tender. Ald. Parks says he was not present at the meeting and in the next breath says he went away to see what would be done. He served in the Council three years and he didn't tell Ald. Parks or any other person to show that he profitted to the extent of a farthing while in the Council. He had always served the city to the best of his ability. He had made enemies by certain actions he had taken in the Council.

Ald. Parks said that the price he (the speaker) stated the price for the furnace for heating the city buildings was $2,200 not $2,500 as ex-Ald. Duckworth stated.

Ex-Ald. Duckworth.—That is the amount you told me.

Ald. Parks said he objected to the tenders from others being placed in the City Hall, and he considered they were. Ex-Alderman Duckworth never told the speaker that the Market and City Property was going to meet on the evening the tender was going to be considered.

Mayor Ketcheson stated that at the last meeting of the City Council he was not present and he also stated at a Committee Meeting on Thursday evening previous that he would no be present at the Council meeting was the first he knew of it. The meeting and was published in the press. In reference to the chair deal the Committee met and the chair question was discussed. He (the speaker) did not see the tender until this year when he took the tender to his office and made a copy of it. The chairs were ordered by ex-Ald. Duckworth, and the ex-alderman would not knowingly do the city out of a cent. He (the speaker) was of the opinion that ex-Alderman Duckworth thought he was doing right in the matter, by one profitted by the transaction. If any one is prepared to state that he (the speaker) profited he would have an investigation and the city will not be mulcted for one cent. He told Mr. Tickell no one had profited by the transaction. His Worship referred to a conversation he had with Mr. Tickell upon the street in reference to the matter and it was Mr. Tickell who got hot under the collar and made the statement that Ald. Smith and ex-Ald. Duckworth were a pair of crooks and that he (the speaker) was at the head of a bad bunch. Mr. Tickell also charged the Speaker of disloyalty, which is not the case. The Ketcheson family were a loyal family and this was proved when 60 members of the Ketcheson family were at the front. Mr. Tickell had no right to refer to the speaker as a disloyal person. If Mr. Tickell wants to bring an accusation he can have all the investigation he wants. Unless there is a definite charge the matter will not be investigated.

Ald. Robinson.—It has not been cleared up why the Tickell & Sons' tender was not accepted when it was the lowest tender. The matter has caused much comment in this city and the people want the matter investigated for the satisfaction of all concerned.

Mayor Ketcheson.—I am a stockholder in the K.K.K. Company which has been referred to in this matter. Every dollar I can get is investigated in industries in Belleville for the benefit of the City, and I am also a large taxpayer in the city and am interested in the city's welfare. Last year through his efforts and the aldermen the city was saved $15,000 or $20,000. I have tried to clear things up. Ald. Parks and Ald. Robinson did not try to clear things up when they were in the Council. Ald. Robinson tried to have the tax collector not to press for the collection of taxes. Loose methods were condemned. What has Ald. Robinson done in years gone by when he was in the Council. He (the speaker) got a cheque for $1,400 from the Hydro Electric Commission. If it is a crime to invest his money in Belleville industries then he had better get out and put his money somewhere else.

Ald. Robinson. The Mayor should not show dirt at any member of the Council. Put the screws on, and the taxes will be collected. He did say to the tax collector not to be too hard on the poor of the city in the collection of taxes. He (the speaker) had the assessment changed from the old plan and it worked out well. The Mayor is to be congratulated for investing his money in local industries. He could see that city money was safe if he had his will. He was surprised to hear the Mayor speak as he had spoken.

At this stage of the proceedings the time of the Council was extended two hours.

Ald. Smith—Ald. Robinson has acted gentlemanly in this transaction. Ex-Alderman Duckworth instructed the speaker to order the chairs and he did so.

I did not have any profit whatever.

Ald. St. Charles asked Mr. Mikel if the investigation could be made for $100. Ald. Robinson had said that it could not be held for $100. Will Ald. Robinson give a bond for the amount above $100 if its costs more. No answer from Ald. Robinson.

Mr. Mikel in reply to the enquiry stated the investigation, if held, need not be expensive.

Ald. Deacon—There has been much interest displayed in this matter. Mr. Tickell says there has been a profit of $29.50 made in the transaction. Ald. Parks accuses ex-Ald. of graft. That is his idea on every matter. Ald. Smith was ordered by ex-Alderman Duckworth to buy the chairs, and he did so. The chairs were delivered to the Dominion Bedding Company, but were taken over by the K. K. K. Company. The citizens have got value for the money. We have a better chair than were used at $1.50. If, instead of going after one particular man, we would go after industries of the city, it would be of greater benefit to the city. He was interested in the Water Works Department, and last year after all expenses were paid $7,500 was made for the city. It is a shame that the time of the Council is taken up as it has been in this matter. The Council had tried to do their duty and if a mistake was made it only amounted to $22.50. This was only a fishing expedition. It has been stated that $80 was involved, but this is not the fact. Mr. Tickell, in his letter, stated that the matter is overpaid.

Ald. Robinson—It is not the $22.50, but it is a matter of principle we are fighting for. We want to find out the kind of graft carried in purchasing these chairs. Why was not Mr. Tickell's tender accepted when it was the lowest tender. Ald. Deacon has been blowing wind so as to put dust into the eyes of people.

THE RESULT

Ald. Robinson's motion was voted upon and lost upon the following division:

For—Aldermen Robinson, Parks and Platt—3.

PATRIOTIC FUND

Ex-Mayor Ackerman addressed the Council in reference to the Belleville Patriotic Association. We had just recently completed a campaign in the city of the fund. There was a general understanding that the City Council was granting $5000 per month to this fund and the Association would ask the Council to grant $5,000 per month for 1917. The city of Belleville's good name is before the Province in this matter. If the Council gave this grant a citizen had intimated he would double his subscription.

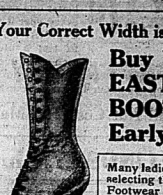
Mr. R. Tannahill spoke in support of the request made by Mr. Ackerman. He hoped the figure mention, namely, $5,000 per month would be passed by the Council.

Mr. Moffatt stated that Mr. E. G. Porter, who was indisposed, had the speaker to tell the Council that he would like that body to make a grant of $4,000 per month.

Mr. M. Sprague said he would supplement what had been said. All citizens want to see that dependents left at home are properly cared for. Some think that the whole amount required should be raised by the city, but as some citizens are not taxpayers, a canvass was made so that those who are not property owners could contribute towards the fund. The taxpayers contributed a certain amount, knowing that they would have to pay more on their taxes for this fund. We are satisfied with the grant asked, but we must help assist some other places, which cannot do so well. The city of Waterloo contributed at the rate of $11 per head per year. We should do our part in this matter.

Mr. L. R. Terwilliger said that he voted with the other members and he stated. Some taxpayers expected to pay more through their taxes.

Mr. Walter Lingham and H. A. Morgan supported the remarks of the previous speaker.



Mayor Ketcheson—Your request will be carefully considered by this Council. We have possibly made a mistake on the side of not giving enough. We have lived here scarcely knowing a war was in progress. Our incomes

GREAT SKATING RECORD.

Fred J. Robson Has Enjoyed Successful Career.

Toronto has produced many champions in various fields of athletic activity, but none who have worn so well and lasted so long at the top of the ladder as Fred J. Robson, the speediest skater of his time. And now, after twenty-two years of competition, he is apparently able to still hold his own, not with mediocre competitors, but with all comers, though he has put away his racing skates for good, so far as open competition is concerned, and is devoting the time he has to spare for his favorite sport to the commendable end of encouraging ambitious youngsters and in the hope that a worthy successor may be developed from among the latest that Toronto surely has.

To mark his retirement from active competition, his many friends and admirers propose to present him with a suitable and enduring reminder that a prophet is not without honor among his own. It takes the form of a diamond-studded medal, with ferry brilliants ornamenting the design, twenty-nine of the sparklers forming the champion's initials in a monogram.

Freddy Robson is of the physical type occasionally described as "little, but oh my!" He began racing in 1895 on a pair of skates that he made himself, and the same year he won the junior championship. From that time on his career was one of unqualified success, and he held the Ontario championship for nine years, in 1900 he won the 220-yard Canadian and American championship, and was able to hold it for five consecutive years. In 1904 he won the Canadian fifteen-mile championship, and the same year skated a dead heat with Morris Wood in a mile race at Pittsburg, the time, 2.41, being a world's record. His record of 1.19 1-5 for 220 yards, made in the same season, stood for seven years, until he beat it himself. In 1906 he was champion of America for a period of twelve years, and after that an active competitor for nineteen years he made three new world's records. There was not an American champion that Robson did not defeat at some time or another, and he shone in other sports, too, being a first-class bicycle rider and long distance as well as a coxswain for the Toronto Rowing Club eight, under the coaching of Jimmy Rice.

For the period of seventeen years he had the advantage of the attention and skill of his friend Billy Rice, who trained him for his great performances. Some of his achievements are best indicated in the following records for the record:

50 yards, 4 4-5 seconds, Toronto, Feb. 17, 1916 (world's record).

220 yards hurdles, indoors, five hurdles, each 24 inches in height, 12 2-5 seconds, Toronto, Feb. 15, 1912.

A total of one Canadian record and four world records for the days of the battle after. Fred also holds the Canadian barrel-jumping record of eleven barrels.

Running high jump on skates, 4 ft. 11 in. (Canadian record). World's record 4 ft. 3 in., held by W. H. Quinn of Boston, Mass.

Movies to Promote Safety.

The first moving picture railway car in Canada is being inaugurated by the Canadian Government system. The safety department, organized in 1914, has done splendid work. The figures for 1916 are not yet available, but in 1914 and 1915 members of the safety committees all over the line reported the correction of over 4,000 unsafe conditions and practices. During these two years also 23 fewer employes were killed, a decrease of 40 per cent; 407 fewer employes were injured, a decrease of 39 per cent.; three fewer passengers were killed, a decrease of 50 per cent., and 1,000 fewer trespassers met death. Hon. Frank Cochrane has now authorized the fitting up of a car for the exhibition of moving pictures dealing with the dangers of taking chances on the railway work. It will spend a week at each of the terminal points.

May Can Grayfish.

The possibility of obtaining grayfish in the Pacific coast in the winter season promises to create a larger supply of this fish, for which at present the demand far exceeds the available stocks, while at the same time it offers the fish packers of the North-West an opportunity to put their canning machinery to profitable use during the period when ordinarily it would be idle after the close of the canning season. The supply of grayfish on the west coast lasts until late in the fall, when the salmon run. They grayfish are not found in the waters on the Atlantic coast, but are present there in the summer. It is thought if arrangements can be had a winter pack can be made upon the Pacific coast and a summer pack upon the Atlantic.

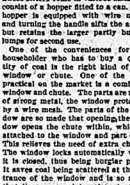
YOUR COAL BIN.

How to Save Your Black Diamonds Just Now.

VARIOUS KINDS OF SIFTERS.



An Expert Tells Us How to Keep One Eye Peeled on the Furnace While the Other Scans the High Cost of Living. It Pays to Have Implements.

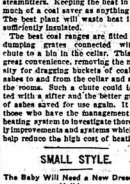
While many women are under the tyranny of the janitor, still others get a taste of its sweets by being a householder and have to do more than theoretically tackle the coal bin. Even if we have a man to feed the furnace and remove the ashes, it might save us some pennies if we become better acquainted with some of the coal savers on the market.

First among these may be called a "heat controller." This may be called the watchdog of the coal bin, as by regulating the heat it prevents unnecessary burning of coal or new building of fire fires because through carelessness it was allowed to die out. It has a clock attachment, which can be set at a desired time. For instance, it can be set an hour earlier than the rising time, with temperature at 70. When you awake instead of finding a chilly, frigid house the house is warm and comfortable, due to the magic of the heat controller.

With coal at its present price a ton it is wise to have the best kind of a sifter. Various "rotary" styles are on the market, which sift the ashes from the wheat, so to speak, and permit the slightly burned coals to be saved, when they can be used again. Then the fire. These sifters come in various sizes and consist of a hopper fitted in a frame. The hopper is equipped with wire mesh, and turning the handle sifts the ashes, the fine ashes falling through and the lumps for second use.

One of the conveniences for the householder who has to buy a quantity of coal is the right kind of coal receptacle or chute. One of the most practical on the market is a combined window and chute. There are two panels of strong metal, the window protected by a wire mesh. The parts of the window are so made that opening the window opens the chute within, which is attached to the window and part of it. This retires the need of extra cellaring. The window locks automatically when it is closed, thus the burglar cannot get in. It saves coal being scattered at the entrance of the window and is so made that it is not injured by coal or the handler when installed.

No Modern Home Complete Without a Chute.



With a new kind of a heating system is used in your home, the boiler must be "jacketed" with some kind of a heat insulator. These jackets can be bought for a regular boiler, such as is frequently attached to a kitchen range. The jacket lines up and can be most easily attached. Special sized boilers can have the jackets made to order, or the boiler covered with asbestos composition material used by steamfitters. Keeping the heat in is as much of a coal saver as anything else. The best plans will waste heat if not sufficiently insulated.

The best coal ranges are fitted with a device for removing the ashes. A chute to a bin in the cellar. This is a labor saver, removing the necessity for dragging buckets of coal and ashes to and from the cellar and about the rooms. Such a chute could be fitted with a sifter and the better grades of ashes saved for re-ashe. It pays those who have the management of the heating system to investigate thoroughly improvements in coal savers, which will help reduce the high cost of heating.

Blondin Resigns To Don Khaki

Sir Edward Kemp Will Ask Blond in to Raise Battalion

OTTAWA, March 21.—Special.—Hon. P. E. Blondin, Postmaster-General, has tendered his resignation for the purpose of enlisting in the overseas forces. He has written a letter to the Minister of Militia and Defence in the following terms:

Ottawa, March 20.

Dear Sir Edward,—I must inform you that I put in my resignation as Postmaster-General. I am expecting premier, in order to offer my services in the present war. I am anxious to put myself at your orders, and consequently I apply for enlistment in the overseas forces of Canada.

Your truly,

(Sigd.) E. E. BLONDIN.

To Recruit Battalion

Sir Edward Kemp said last night he proposed to ask Mr. Blondin to recruit a battalion for service at the front, as a part of the Canadian expeditionary force.

Mr. Blondin's offer to serve overseas, and his resignation have caused a sensation here. His enthusiasm, however, in the cause of the allies since the war began has been very marked, and he has been one of the very best recruiting speakers in the country.

Hon. Mr. Blondin was appointed Postmaster-General of Canada in 1911, to succeed the late Hon. T. C. Casgrain. He is 43 years of age and first entered the House of Commons in 1908 as member for Champlain. He was re-elected in 1911 as a Nationalist-Conservative, and became deputy Speaker. In October, 1914, he was appointed Minister of Inland Revenue.

ORANGE GRAND LODGE IN CONTINUED SESSION

A Large Gathering of Delegates—Civic Welcome Extended by Mayor Ketcheson—The Order in a Prosperous Condition Open Evening Meeting in the City Hall

The forty-eighth annual session of the Loyal Orange Grand Lodge, Province of Ontario East, convened in Belleville yesterday afternoon, and will continue in session two days. The sessions were held in the City Hall, and the spacious auditorium was filled with delegates. The attendance is one of the largest ever held within this jurisdiction. It is presided over by Rt. Wor. Bro. Capt. E. H. McLean of Bowmanville, who is the paymaster of the 235th Battalion at present quartered at Ottawa.

During the opening session by the Royal Scarlet Degree, Rt. Wor. Bro. Sir M. Bowell, representing the Triennial Council of the world, declared the Grand Lodge opened in due form by virtue of his authority.

Owing to illness Rt. Wor. Bro. W. T. Wigmore of Bancroft, Grand Director, was unable to be present, and Rt. Wor. Bro. Wm. Joynt, Past County Master of Carleton County, was appointed auditor of the session.

Rt. Wor. Bros. Burney, Munro, Boyce, Pelyea and A. R. Walker were appointed a special committee to strike the standing committees.

GRAND MASTER'S ADDRESS

Grand Master McLean presented the following address:

To The Officers and Members of the Right Worshipful Grand Orange Lodge, Province of Ontario East: Brethren:—

Through God's good Providence we are allowed to join today in the 58th Annual Meeting of this Grand Lodge.

We meet in the City of Belleville, a City among the oldest of the Orange Fortresses in Canada. One where the faith has been kept pure and unsullied for many, many years, and from whence have come many men who have risen to the highest honors in the Orange Order.

I have had the good fortune in the near past to be an occasional visitor in this City, and I am able to vouch for the patriotism, the generosity and the open hearted hospitality of many of the brethren of Belleville but of all its citizens.

Beautifully situated on the broad reaches of the Bay of Quinte with its splendid harbour, beautiful streets and its numerous people, it presents a picture of prosperity. The Grand Master feels sure that all will join with him in thanking those who have brought these to pass by all they had to cause to be built that this goodly heritage that freedom which only can be found under the broad folds of the British Flag.

PROGRESS OF THE ORDER

The year just past is one of outstanding achievement for the Orange Order. I had expected that under existing conditions there would have been no progress but a retrograde movement. Many thousands of our members have crossed the ocean in response to the call of their King and Country and not a few of them had also made the great sacrifice. People at home were busy, shortage of help to carry on the industries of the country existed and men's minds were fastened on two things—work and war. Therefore, it was to be expected that our order would have done well if it held its own. I am glad to be able to announce, however, that instead of decrease, and instead of remaining stationary, we have made progress. And your Grand Secretary in his report be able to show a substantial increase in our membership to be credited to the year just gone.

Meeting we are in Belleville it is but fitting that in respect of increase in membership the old Orange County of South Hastings should during this year, have taken the lead with a net increase of 90, Victoria being second with an increase of 78.

The reason for this condition was not hard to find. The people and Canada have at last come to understand that the Orange Order stands for exactly what it professes to stand for—Loyalty to the King and Empire and to the Protestant faith.

While the wonderful enlistment of Orangemen has in this way aided us to increase our membership it has made the cause also of many lodges having to carry a very heavy burden.

Nearly all the lodges in this jurisdiction are carrying those of their members who have gone to the war. In many cases, as I have said, the burden is a very heavy one, but I pence generously and willingly, and we should, as far as possible, assist those lodges which are thus weakened, and give to them all help which is in our power.

We are determined that our glorious Order shall continue to make progress, so that, when our Empire arises victorious from this titanic struggle, it may find that the Order is an instrument capable and prepared to take its part in that human liberty is to be had by all within the boundaries of the great brotherhood of nations which has preserved human liberty for the whole world.

GRAND LODGES

I attended the meeting of the Most Worshipful Grand Lodge of British America at, Toronto last year. I was impressed by the proceedings which were of a high character and much good work was done. So much, in fact, that it is impossible for me into it in detail, and reference must be had to the official report for the same. Suffice it to say that the delegates to the front carry with them the best wishes and kindness for which Toronto is proverbial and all united in declaring it one of the finest Grand Lodges ever held in Canada.

While on this subject let me point out that at Winnipeg in 1915, certain changes were made in the ritual by the Most Worshipful Grand Lodge. I am instructed that some of the Lodges in this jurisdiction are not carrying out these changes. This must not be, as to fail to carry out these changes is direct disobedience to the constitution.

On account of urgent military duty I was unable to attend the annual meeting of the Sister Grand Lodge of Ontario West in Stratford last week. However, directed that your Grand Organiser should attend, and on behalf of this Grand Lodge he conveyed to the brethren there assembled such brotherly good wishes for the prosperity of their Grand Lodge and of themselves individually.

OFFICIAL VISITS

During my term of office I have endeavored to visit as many primary lodges as possible. A change of organization has to a certain extent prevented this, but notwithstanding, I have attended a good number. I had the pleasure a few weeks ago of visiting at Kingston a splendid Orange ball commemorating with the noble of that City of fine buildings. The lodge room is the finest I have ever seen anywhere in which work reflects great credit on the brethren of Kingston and of its Deputy District Master who had it in charge.

Also, as your Grand Master, laid the foundation stone of a Catholic Church at Addison in this jurisdiction, and had the pleasure with pride as I related that at least one congregation recognized that Orangeism was the first wall of defence.

THE SCHOOL SITUATION

After, and as a result of the agitation by the Order for a period of eight years, the question of the right of the Province of Ontario to exclude any language but the English and the league from the schools of the province has been finally decided by the Privy Council of appeal, and the decision is favorable to our contention.

This final victory following so many years of steady pressure should be most gratifying to all who believe in the maintainance of Ontario as a British Province.

Now that the law with regard to bilingual schools has been settled we should be looking forward to the total banishment of the French language as a language of instruction and communication in our primary schools.

THE SENTINEL

Throughout the year the Sentinel has continued to be the fearless advocate of all that is right and patriotic generally and of the principles of the Orange Order particularly. Under the watchful eye of the Right Worshipful Brother Hoodless, Grand Master of Ontario West, it has, without fear or favor, taken the position which our belief dictates upon all occasions.

It has, too, been absolutely impartially awarded praise and blame where they were deserved and stands today as an example to the press of what can be attained by a newspaper that expresses with complete honesty the views of the cause it advocates.

I commend the Sentinel to you. Every increase in its circulation means an increase, if not to the order, at least to those who sympathize with it.

German Editors Pleased Over Attack on American Ships

AMSTERDAM, March 21—Count Von Reventlow, writing in the Deutsche Tageszeitung, says with reference to the sinking of the American steamers City of Memphis, Illinois and Vigilance: "It is good that American ships have been obliged to learn that the German prohibition is effective, and that there is no question of distinctive treatment for the United States. In view of such knowledge there is only one policy for the United States, as for the small European maritime Powers, namely, to remain in their own own ports as long as the war lasts."

The Dusseldorfer, General Anzeiger says that the sinking of three American ships is certain to produce special satisfaction.

PETROGRAD, March 22.—The Provincial Government has issued an order for the arrest of the former Emperor and Empress, and they have been put under the charge of General Alexieff until a guard arrives to take them to Tsarsko Selo.

Disastrous Fire At Marmora

The village of Marmora, Hastings County, was this morning visited by a disastrous fire, which completely destroyed the large saw mills, the property of the Pearce Company Limited. It was about 8 o'clock when the fire broke out, and all efforts to check the devouring element proved futile. The mills were situated on the Crow River and had recently been undergoing extensive improvement preparatory to the spring work. The loss will not only be severely felt by the owners of the plant, but the village. The structure was valued at several thousand dollars, and the loss is partially covered by insurance.

Mr. F. S. Pearce, the head of the company, was in Belleville attending the Orange Grand Lodge, when a telegram conveyed to him the intelligence that the mills were on fire. He left immediately for Marmora.

FINE OF $200 IMPOSED

BROCKVILLE, March 21—Yesterday afternoon the spring assizes with jury opened at the court house here before Mr. Justice F. R. Latchford.

The only case down for hearing was that of Ira King vs. James Small, of Prescott, charged with manslaughter as the result of the death last fall of Miss Eva Clarke, who fell down an elevator shaft at the Grenadier Hotel, conducted by the defendant. Mr. Wallace Nesbitt, K.C., and Mr. Lewis Wallace Hall appeared for the defendant.

The charge was reduced to criminal negligence, to which accused pleaded guilty. In view of the large by signed petition presented on behalf of Small, and in which he is widely known and respected in this district. His Lordship imposed a fine of $200.

CANADIANS EXPERIENCE A BUSY WEEK ON FRONT

LONDON, March 22—Special—The following is issued by the Canadian War Records Office as a Canadian communique, under date of March 18—

"The week on the whole, has been an eventful one. There were a few patrol encounters, and the Germans made several ineffectual attempts to enter our trenches, particularly on Tuesday night. Three attacks were made, after what was evidently a most carefully prepared bombardment. Not one of these attempts succeeded. On the contrary, the attackers were driven back to their own lines, and in one instance left two dead in front of our wire.

TROUBLE IN HUN CAPITAL

Reports of Serious Riots Come From Berlin—Revolution May Have Arrived

LONDON, March 22—Special—Reuter's Amsterdam correspondent reports it is rumored that serious riots have broken out in Berlin in connection with the scarcity of food.

"A despatch from Oldenzal, Holland, says persistent rumors are current of great rioting in Berlin," the despatch says. "Frontier regiments are reported to have left for Berlin to maintain order."

An Amsterdam despatch to The Daily Chronicle says:

With revolution in the air it is not surprising that rumors are running around that Germany's turn has come, and that Berlin already is in an uproar. Two or two curious developments tend to support the possibility there. Firstly, these rumors all appear to emanate from German sources. Secondly, I have just spoken to a German Social Democrat who was on his way to a railway station en route for Berlin. He said he regarded the rumors as possibly partly true, and having large interests in Berlin he felt it necessary to return thither immediately in order to see the actual state of affairs and take steps to protect his interests.

Douai-Laon Line of Defence May be Held by Germans—British Steadily Drive Rear-Guards From Their Positions—Withdrawal From Territory North of Arras Probable

LONDON, March 22—Special—The French and British forces encountered the first aggressive opposition to their advance on the hundred-mile line between the Scrape and the Aisne today. While they continued to drive ahead at nearly every point, and made great progress along certain stretches of territory, the resistance of the German rearguards was materially stiffer, and the enemy was found to be occupying some sections in strong force.

While the question as to whether the Germans intend to continue their retirement to their second fortified line of defence near the Franco-Belgian frontier remains unsolved, official reports from the battle-front indicate that Hindenburg is about ready to make his stand along the Douai-Laon line, and that preparations have been completed for the blow which he hopes will be decisive.

CALLED BY DEATH.

JENNIE MAY WHITE

After being ill for some time and enduring much suffering, Mrs. Jennie May White, wife of Mr. Alexander S. White, passed away last evening at the family residence 158 Bridge street East. Deceased, who was 50 years of age, was a daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Vandervoort, of Sidney Township, where she was born and resided until a few years ago when the family removed to Belleville. Mrs. White was a lady who had a large circle of relatives and friends and was highly esteemed for the many womanly qualities she possessed. She was a member of St. Andrews Presbyterian Church. In addition to her husband, one son and two daughters are left to mourn the demise of a kind mother. The son is Percy, of Sidney, and the daughters Mrs. Fred Wilson, John East, residing in the city and Mrs. Spafford residing in Sidney. The funeral will take place from the residence, 158 Bridge street East, on Saturday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock. Service and interment at Carmen.

LITTLE CHILD SEVERELY BURNED

An infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Patterson, residing on Forin street, was severely burned on Tuesday. The little one, aged two years, was in the house with her brother, who is known to be age of four and five years, when he found some matches, and in striking same set fire to his sister's clothing. The screaming of the children attracted the attention of the mother, who discovered the predicament of the child, and extinguished the flames, but not before the little one's hand, face and upper portion of the body had been burned. The condition of the child is such that at present it is not possible to state what the result will be.

ALLEGED THEFT OF COAT

Yesterday afternoon upon the adjournment of the Orange Grand Lodge, Mr. J. H. Gallaty, a delegate from Elorado, was surprised to find his overcoat, a new garment was missing, and no trace of it could be found. The matter was reported to the police with the result that this morning the coat was found in Mr. R. Sopher's second hand store. Having been purchased last night. Later a man who gave his name as Frank Edwards was arrested as the one who took the coat. He admitted he had sold the coat at the second hand store, but alleged he sold it for another man. In the latter's possession was found a pair of gloves, which Mr. Blakley identified as his property. The accused was brought before the Magistrate and after some evidence had been taken the case was adjourned for one week, and Edwards was remanded in custody. Chief Constable Ponton and Detective Sergeant Hollinger conducted the case for the prosecution, and Mr. C. J. Wills appeared for the defence.

GERMANS LOOT BANKS TO THE EXTENT OF 18,000,000 FRANCS

Special to The Intelligencer.

PARIS, March 22.—The German retreat to the Arras St. Quentin la Fere line is now practically complete since the French are now within artillery range of St. Quentin and la Fere. The movement has been carried out according to approved principles, one section holding firm while the next fell back. The Allies are now engaged driving in the last of these sections still resisting which are situated respectively south of Arras, south and east of Peronne, east of Nesle and north of Soissons. As a result of Wednesday's operations the British line is now level with the French line and runs along the Crozat Canal from St. Simon to Tergnier. At the latter point the French positions are but two or two-and-half miles from Laferc. Part of the road from our camp to Noyon paved with granite had been torn up by the Germans, but in less than one day French engineers had repaired the road, rebuilt bridges and put the railroad in working order as far as our camp. Before leaving the Germans made a clean sweep of Noyon banks, sending to Germany securities valued at eighteen million francs.

HOME RULE FOR IRELAND

In my address last year I suggested that before the war was over the people of the British Isles would realize which of the parties there was loyal to the Empire and which was not, and that the result would be favorable to the opponents of Home Rule.

Ireland has been excepted from the Act enforcing conscription although our friends from Ulster were strongly and openly in favor of its inclusion and promised the unqualified support of the people of Ulster.

Armed rebellion has been raised in Dublin and the surrounding territory; only to be put down after many innocent and peaceful citizens and members of loyal soldiers had been ruthlessly murdered. Direct connection between Germany and the promoters of this uprising had been proved.

Only the other day the leader of the Home Rule party had the temerity to raise this question again in the British House of Commons. The Premier, The Right Honorable Lloyd George, lately an ardent Home Ruler, replied stating that no Home Rule would be granted by the Government just by him in which was included those parts of Ireland which were substantially against it. In other words, in case of Home Rule, protestant Ulster is to be excluded. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

THE WAR

The terrible struggle in Europe continues to drag on. Last year we glorified in the exploits of the navy which had swept the seas. This year the situation is changed. At date of writing our armies are uniformly successful in France and Belgium, and in the East we are making substantial headway, but today while the navy is supreme above the water, the submarine peril has so increased, and the nefarious uses to which it has been put by a dastardly enemy have been so extended that the British Isles are in grave danger of food shortage.

If the submarine activities continue for any great length the most serious situation that the Empire has yet had to combat will thus be set up.

There is only one way to prevent this and that is to end the war as quickly as possible by pouring into the land attack such a multitude of soldiers as shall render our forces irresistible. In order that those soldiers that are now in reserve may be freed from the attack, reinforcements must take their places at the base and for this purpose many thousands of fresh troops must be raised.

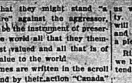
We are justly proud of the manner in which our Order has borne its part in the raising of our Canadian Army. It can be safely stated that no organization of any kind whether church, fraternal or political, has and not even the sacrifice of auto-war time, has forfished an high a proportion of men to fight for their King and Country as has the Orange Order.

We glorify in this because it means that Orangeism principles are right and that Orangemen are true to their principles, and that the thing nearest to the heart of every Orangeman is the inviolate honor of that great and glorious band of nations which forms the British Empire.

But while we pride ourselves that so many of our brethren have not shunk in this hour of testing, let not this be considered an excuse by any brother of military age and fitness—the duty is cast upon him more strongly than ever before, and instead of cheltering himself behind those who have answered the call, it is imperatively his duty to take their course for his bright example and speedily and cheerfully do likewise.

Canada has promised half a million men. One hundred thousand are yet lacking, and our honor will never be unsullied until that promise has been implemented.

For those that are not fit to join the fighting forces many lines of useful activity are open. Let every man be employed in some way or other in aiding the production of the country both of food and of munitions.



Let us not fail to economize as far as possible so as to be able to assist to the utmost the various splendid patriotic and benevolent works that are being carried on.

Let us assist in every way those of our country's heroes who are now returning, a few at a time, wounded and maimed. Let our help bear no air of patronage, but be bestowed spontaneously to those who by their deeds have earned the right to demand it.

In short let every one of us as he is fitted do his bit to the end that civilization may be sustained, and that as the sun shines in turn on all the quarters of the globe he may continue in the future, as in the past, to shed his radiance from minute to minute and from hour to hour always upon the broad folds of the glorious old Union Jack saturated in the free air of heaven and defiant of every foe of freedom.

OUR HONORED DEAD

During the past year the grim reaper has been busy among us, and the stealthy perhaps are the losses of Right Worshipful Bro. Alfred Bradley and John Delamere, both Past Grand Masters of this County Province. They here well known to and respected by all the members of this Grand Lodge. The both held honorable and useful lives and died amid the respect and sorrow of all who knew them. Both of friends join in sympathy with those loved ones left behind, and truly their works live after them. But what shall I say of the glorious company who have cheerfully laid down their lives for, Liberty, blood soaked field across the broad Atlantic? Our hearts are very sad as we think of the sacrifices of our best and bravest, when we think of those who loved them so dearly, who now are madmens, but the comfort comes to us that an all wise Creator had so made them brave, strong and self sacrificing and had so incentated into their hearts the true Orangeman's love of freedom and the achieved and added to the sum of human good.

CONCLUSION

My brethren, through the fact that Right Worshipful Bro. Ford, P. G. M. had to follow the path of duty down to the Maritime Provinces, and was therefore unable to be present with you at the last annual meeting of his Grand Lodge. During that time I have received always kindness from the members over whom I presided. You have strewn my path with roses and my whole experience has been a happy one.

It may be that my fortune shall guide me to other and distant lands in the near future. I wish from the bottom of my heart to thank you one and all for the many kindnesses you have heaped upon me.

I on my part have tried so far as in me lay to do my duty by you. You one and all have never failed to do your duty by me as your Grand Master. May we all meet again in happier times, and when we do may we be able to grasp hands and look each other square in the eyes conscious of duty well done and with a conscience unafraid.

May God's gracious mercy keep you and protect you now and evermore.

CIVIC WELCOME

At the outset • We now lay upon Bro. Mayor Ketcheson and Aldermen Bowen, as a deputation representative of the City, an invitation upon the Orange Grand Lodge for the privilege of entertaining the civic welcome to the Province of Ontario Grand Lodge. The Mayor and Aldermen were formally introduced to Grand Lodge. Mayor Ketcheson, the members of Bro. W. C. Mikel, K.C., the City Clerk, and they were most cordially received. After being escorted to the platform Bro. Ketcheson delivered the following address of welcome:

ADDRESS OF WELCOME

Belleville, Ont., March 21, 1917.

To The Right Worshipful Grand Master, Officers and Members of the Grand Orange Lodge Of Ontario Gentlemen:—

It affords us great pleasure as representatives of this City, and on behalf of our citizens to welcome so distinguished a gathering as we have assembled here. When we knew that you had chosen our City for your annual meeting we felt that you had displayed good judgment in the selection, and at the same time felt that you had bestowed an honor upon us of which we are justly proud. It is many years since your Grand Lodge met in this City and many changes have taken place since then, all of which we believe have been for the betterment of our City and Country. Our City has grown in population and importance and your splendid order has largely increased its membership since your previous visit here.

Orangeism occupies a large place in the esteem of this community. This is based upon the manner in which your lodges and your individual members who compose them, carry out the principles and tenets of your order.

We were pleased to observe, that when the Empire of which this Canada of ours forms no unimportant part was plunged into the great war in which we are still engaged, how loyally and nobly the members of your association responded to the call of King and Empire.

It must be a source of pride to your membership that there are lodges almost out of existence owing to their members being on active service doing their bit for the principles of truth, justice and righteousness, and to defend the forces of autocracy and oppression.

We feel that your coming amongst us will further stimulate our loyalty. We hope that your deliberations will be profitable to your association and that your delegation will spend a pleasant time in our City.

Right Worshipful Sir and Gentlemen we bid you a hearty welcome and extend to you the Freedom of the City.

H. F. KETCHERSON, Mayor.
W. A. WOODLEY, Alderman.
W. B. DEACON, Alderman.
O. A. MARSHALL, Alderman.

Mayor Ketcheson was requested to say a few words, and he spoke briefly, referring to the fact that he was a brother among them. The aims and objects for which the Order stood for, he also stood for. His Worship, in referring to the war, stated he had sent three sons to the front—one of whom had been invalided home, and another had been severely wounded in France. He would, however, rather have a son buried in France, than have a shirker at home. In concluion he hoped the Grand Lodge every success, and the members enjoyment in Belleville would be pleasant and profitable. (Applause.)

Ald. Deacon said he was present to uplift the hand of the Mayor in extending a welcome to the Orange Grand Lodge. All citizens extended a hearty welcome to the visitors, and would do all in their power to make their sojourn in the city both pleasant and profitable.

Grand Master Capt. McLean in responding stated he knew something about the hospitality of the citizens of Belleville when the 235th Battalion, with which he was connected, was quartered in this city. Belleville had many fine streets, fine churches, and all the citizens were friendly. He thanked the Mayor for the address which had been presented, and he also so sympathized with His Worship at this, his hour of trial. The love of a father was as great as was also the love of Empire. We all hope and pray that our loved ones who are dear to all, may be spared to return home, and receive the award due them. We are going to see that there is in Canada no place for the slacker. The Government should see that the young men who have gone to the Republics to the south of us, should see, if they returned, that they did not darken our doors here outside of Canada. He would also the Grand Master again thanked the civic deputation for their welcome.

Rt. Wor. Bro. Bernie of Kingston, was called upon, and made a very appropriate remarks. He said that Belleville was to be congratulated that it had a Mayor who was a member of the Orange Order, but Belleville was not the only city whose chief magistrate belonged to the Order. The Mayor of Kingston was an Orangeman. In referring to Mayor Ketcheson, the speaker said the Grand Lodge appreciated what he had done for King and country, and all sympathized with him in the hour of trial. We are proud of the Orangemen who are true to the colors and British connection. We, as a body, are the backbone and substance of the country among the members of the Orange Society. In all parts of the country many prominent citizens are becoming identified with the Order.

Cheers were then given for Mayor Ketcheson and Ald. Deacon, after which the Grand Lodge resumed its duties.

TRUE BLUE'S ADDRESS

Mr. Thos. D. Rueton, District Deputy Grand Master of the True Blue Society, presented the following address, which was appropriately acknowledged:

On behalf of the Loyal True Blue Lodges of Belleville, I affirm it is much pleasure to extend to you a cordial welcome to this beautiful city. We regret very much that the session will not permit you to see the beauties of our City, which has a good claim to the title we give it "The Beautiful City of the Bay."

Since last you met here what changes have taken place and is taking place, even now, in the midst of a world struggle. Right against Wrong. Freedom and liberty against bondage and Militarism.

We welcome you because your order has done noble in this great war, given of your best and we pray that those of your noble Order, who have suffered loss will be sustained by God. We welcome you because we recognize that we are all one family and as brothers we desire to manifest that spirit of brotherly feeling which you know we all feel. We are working for the same great glorious cause, PROTESTANTISM.

It is with pleasure we note the unity that exists between your noble order and the Loyal True Blue Association and we trust the most harmonious feeling may ever exist and that our Orange Brethren will as ably assist us in the future as in the past in the good work of reacuing the Protestant populace from the Church of Rome.

In conclusion we earnestly hope that the officers and delegates may be guided of God in their deliberations and that they work in harmony in the advancement of your noble order. We trust the delegates will all enjoy themselves thoroughly so that they will look back with pleasure to the time spent in Belleville, so that in the near future we shall have the pleasure of again welcoming your Grand Lodge.

Fraternally yours,
THOS. D. RUSTON, D.D.G.M.
Loyal True Blue Association
South Hastings District.

EVENING MEETING

The public meeting of the Orange Society held in the City Hall last evening, was a success, the hall being well-filled with a representative audience. Mayor Ketcheson fulfilled the duties of chairman during the evening, and in his opening address stated he was pleased to have the Grand Orange Lodge hold its conference in Belleville at the present time, and he felt that when looking into the faces of so many before him at the meeting he was looking into the faces of stalwarts of the very best kind in this Eastern Ontario District and who are the backbone in the making of the Empire. He, the speaker, welcomed such men to Belleville, and would want them to be as citizens while they are in the city. In closing, Mayor Ketcheson, speaking of the war, stated he was sure the Empire would carry the conflict to a successful issue.

The first number on the program for the evening, was a selection by the 25th Orchestra, after which Rt. H. B. Morphy, K.C., M.P., and D. G. M. of the British American Chapter was called upon to address the audience. The speaker stated he brought greetings to the meeting from the Grand Master of the Black Chapter of British America. He felt great pride in the Orange Order, which stretches from Newfoundland to British Columbia. It is truly a great confederation. The speaker referred to the presence of Sir Mackenzie Bowell on the platform, who in his 93rd year, was hale and hearty, with a heart beating as true and loyal today as it ever did for Orangeism. He was also pleased to see Capt. E. H. McLean, Grand Master of Ontario East, in khaki; there are eleven of twelve relatives of Capt. McLean's who are now at the front. More men will be needed in this death struggle with the Hun, stated Mr. Morphy, in reference to the war. In this epoch, the Orange Society has set an example to other societies, by the many thousands it has sent to the front. The work of Orangemen is cut out for many hard days in the future, by caring for the members who come back from the front, to care for the disabled, and to provide for the widows of soldiers killed as the front. We have said we, the Orange Order, are a loyal body, but we are patriotic as well, as our records will show. Loyalty is a sentiment to which we adhere but doing something is what constitutes patriotism. A man may be loyal, but not patriotic if they do not do something in this war. In continuation the speaker appealed to the Orangemen to make a record in this war, which through all years to come, Canada will be proud.

At the conclusion of Mr. Morphy's address Col. Preston, O.C. the 39th Battalion, was announced on the platform, having just returned from overseas. The gallant colonel was given a great reception by the audience.

A reading by Miss Bateman was the next number on the program.

Dr. Edwards, M.P. of Frontenac, being called upon, opened his address by marks by briefly referring to the war. This great struggle, he stated, is a final struggle between two principles. First, the Democracy of England and her Allies, or the Militarism of Germany and Austria. The world is too small to exist where these two are side by side. In England, the cause of democracy is one that reaches far back in history. Democracy is a triumph throughout the English speaking world. Germany, on the other hand has taught the people in her schools and colleges, that might is right or militarism.

To defeat Germany, her army must not only be conquered, but her ideals must be smashed and crushed out of existence.

Referring to recent statements made on the 17th of March, by well-known men, Mr. Edwards stated he wished to repudiate them. These men were Hon. Charles Murphy and Mr. Bourrassa of London. Dealing with recruiting in Quebec, the speaker stated that this province has contributed 30 per cent of its allotment, while other provinces have been doing more than their share. Eighty per cent. of the recruits in Quebec were English speaking citizens. Why is this? stated Mr. Edwards, should be the question that we, as citizens of Canada, should ask and have answered. There are two reasons, continued the speaker. The first, the written and spoken utterred of everything English by some men in this province, one of whom, Bourrasa by name, should be sent to an internment camp; and second, the cures and priests in that province tell them not to go, which is contrary to the express wishe of Bishops and Arch-Bishops in Montreal.

The chairman, Mayor Ketcheson, at the conclusion of Dr. Edward's speech, read to the audience the contents of a telegram from Gen. Sir Sam Hughes, who was unable to be present at the meeting, owing to his train being stalled.

The following number on the program was a solo by Mrs. Wilmot, which was well received by the audience. A selection by the 254th Battalion orchestra then followed, after which Mr. Duncan Munro, P.G.M., gave a brief adress. The speaker stated that the Orange Association is a fifth column in any political party, as had been alleged. The Orange Association is a Protestant Association, he declared, and one which will never cease to support the party, if that party does not recognize them.

The two next numbers on the program were solos that were greatly appreciated. Miss Rae Farrell gave very good recitations, and Mrs. Wilmot rendered a solo, "Up From Somerset."

Grand Master Hogben of Western Ontario Grand Lodge, was the next speaker, and he received a hearty welcome. He stated he came to Belleville to carry a fraternal greeting from the Orangemen from the west to the Orangemen of Eastern Ontario. The Orange institution stands for free speech, and it is tolerant in this direction. We will not submit to have our mouths closed. The Grand Master referred to the colleges of Toronto, and that the attendance has decreased considerably, because of the young men who have enlisted. One college has, however, increased in numbers this year, and that is St. Michael's College. It is estimated by Sir Sam Hughes that 80,000 men have come from the front from the Orange Society and Orange home. This was a grand record. The Orange Society has ever been loyal to the King and the Motherland. There are some who wants Canada a Republic, but he wanted Canada to be one of the overseas dominions. Fifty years from now he expected that Canada would have a population of one hundred million of strong men, physically and intellegently. We are all here to the Almighty for the grand land we possess. We have it in our power to make Canada one of the greatest nations of the world. Let us develop all our resources, and the best resources to be developed are those of heart and manhood. If this country is to be a great country it is up to us to see that we put in our little mite liberties handed down to us, are held. There is only one thing worse than ecclastical tyranny, and that is liberty. The Orange Association stands for the upholding of all true principles. We ask that the Allied nations of this country make laws that are for the betterment of the country irrespective of party politics. The Orange Society does not deny to others the freedom which it enjoys. There are certain conditions in the Province of Quebec which should certainly be remedied.

There is no organization in Canada to-day that has more public identified with than the Orange Society. The members cannot be bought with anything. The body of men, wh prove tthe at they have proved to be the salt of the earth, and the members of the Orange Order are men of honor.

Grand Master McLean of Eastern Ontario, thanked the citizens of Belleville for the hospitality of its citizens and the kind reception to the 235th Battalion, who had furnished such beautiful music, also the ladies who contributed by song and recitation to the program. He never was prouder in his life than at present, and to be the Grand Master of the Orange Order of Ontario East. The speaker referred to the British flag and the protection we enjoy under the flag. The Grand Master in speaking of the war, stated that in Ontario conscription has been asked for, but in the Province of Quebec conscription is not wanted. He was proud that he had enlisted to fight, and take part in the great battle that is raging for liberty. If there is any Orangemen of military age, he would ask them to enlist and fight.

The meeting was brought to a close by the singing of "God Save the King," and the benediction.

Movies to Promote Safety.

The first motion picture railway film in Canada is being prepared for the Canadian Government railways' safety department, organized in 1914, has done excellent work. The films of 1915 and 1916 are not available, but in 1914 and 1915 members of the safety committees all over the line reported the correction of over 4,500 unsafe conditions and practices. During these two years also 23 fewer employees were killed, a decrease of 6 per cent.; 407 fewer employees were injured, a decrease of 9 per cent.; three fewer passengers were killed, a decrease of 50 per cent.; and 14 fewer passengers were met death. Hon. Frank Cochrane has now authority for fitting up of a car for the exhibition of moving pictures dealing with the dangers of taking chances on the railway lines. It will spend a week at each of the terminal points.

COBOURG HEAVY BATTERY

The appointment of Lieut. Chas. A Payne as officer-in-charge of the 8th Overseas Draft from the Cobourg Heavy Battery has been approved. Lieut. Payne has been a member of the local bat fam of Porter and Carnew. Lieut. Harry H. Pontan is in charge of the 7th Draft which is also complete and in training for overseas.

A cable has been received by Major McKinnon, O.C. Cobourg Heavy Battery, announcing the safe arrival in England of the Sixth Draft, which included several Belleville men.

Nine more men signed up with the Battery during the past week, including two from Picton, G. F. Worrell and W. McCue. The strength of the overseas drafts is now 2 officers and 67 other ranks.

Dandruff Surely Destroys The Hair
Girls—if you wans plenty of thick, beautiful, glossy, silky hair, dry all dandruff, first of all. Forget you don't.
It doesn't do much good to try to brush or wash it out. The only sure way to get rid of dandruff is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, get about four ounces of ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.
By morning, most if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it.
You will find too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop, and your hair will look and feel a hundred times better. You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive and four ounces is all you will need, no matter how much dandruff you have. This simple remedy never fails.

WELL AND TRUTHFULLY PUT.

A correspondent in The Toronto Daily News deals trenchantly and truthfully with his fellow Liberals who, like himself, were of opinion that there was no fear of a war with Germany. He says:

"I belong to a group which before the war made light of the German menace, which mocked at any fear of war with Germany, ridiculed the idea that we should have a navy, called the militia the soldiers and thought that the drill-sheds disfigured the landscape. They called me a jingo and an ass because I did not believe that the millennium had come.

"Now I find these same people demanding conscription, cursing the Government because we were not prepared for war, and defaming Canadians because we have "not done enough."

"Three years ago those comrades of mine argued that we should never send a man to fight for the Empire in Europe. Now they pretend that we have done nothing when we have created an army of 400,000 men. Are these people lost politicians, or have they mean nothing? Have they no real convictions?

"I can understand revolutionary changes in men's opinions over the war, but usually these people, who thought we should not spend a dollar on war or preparation for war, are not honest when they pretend that we have done nothing.

"I do not now what to make of it when I find not only that my associates have adopted all my opinions but that they have gone farther and almost charge me with treason because I doubt if conscription is advisable in Canada.

"No doubt when the war is over these people will return to their old opinions. Again they will be ascribed as "jingoes" and denouncing those of my views as mere agents of the men who make cannon.

"The situation would be amusing if it were not sometimes exasperating. Before the war I tried to be a patriot but I was not a conscriptionist, a conscriptionist, nor even a prohibitionist. I set no great value on consistency, but I cannot feel that my course before the war requires me to turn myself inside out since the war began."

Toronto, March 20th, 1917. A. B.

A WORTHY EXAMPLE.

The action of Hon. P. E. Blondin in tendering his resignation as Postmaster-General in order that he may serve his country with our overseas forces, is a clean-cut answer to the scandalous statements made concerning his attitude relative to the war and its needs, and should forever close the mouths of those given to criticism. That his example is praiseworthy will be accepted by the country at large—one that should be followed by every eligible male within our fair Dominion. No man in Quebec possesses more influence over his compatriots than does Mr. Blondin, avers the Montreal Star, which says:

"His recruiting speeches have always been inspiring and effective. It is intimated that he will now undertake to recruit a battalion and take it with him overseas. It is easy to predict success for him, and to see in that success an answer to the libelious attacks which have been made from time to time on that Province.

"His action will be an inspiration to French Canadian—and a promise to the Allied world. One such personal sacrifice will offset months of mischievous mouthing, and flame as a beacon-fire lighting the path to glory and honor. It comes just at the moment when the obscene Hun is being hurled from the soil of France, and every French soul is singing the Te Deum at the long-delayed liberation. This gesture of practical sympathy from French Canadians will touch the heart of Old France as nothing yet has; and again will they see that "blood will flow" that the separated sons of Normandy are, Norman still. Mr. Blondin has grasped the fiery cross in the hour of greatest crisis, and he will set Quebec righteously aflame from the Ottawa to the Gulf."

THE IRISH MUDDLE.

It was very kind indeed of Mr. Asquith to suggest that the settlement of the Irish question be handed over to a Committee of Dominion as well as Imperial statesmen, and resolutions are being passed in Canada calling upon Sir Robert Borden to take a hand in it.

We have a situation in Canada not unlike that in Ireland. Perhaps Mr. Asquith would like to come over and settle it for us while our Prime Minister is attending to the Irish question?

Perhaps, however, it would be better for overseas statesmen to keep but of the Irish difficulty. When we Canadians can compose the differences between the French and English sections of Canada we may be able to harmonize the north and south of Ireland. But until we do that we should not aspire to the position of peacemaker for Ireland.

MACHINE GUNS

Another attempt of the Opposition to make capital out of machine guns, has been defeated in the Legislature. Mr. Charles Bowman, the Liberal Whip, had questions on the order paper asking if the guns purchased with the $200,000 contributed by the Province, had been inspected on behalf of the Government at the Savage Arms Company Utica, or elsewhere before they were sent across the sea. He also asked if such inspections had been made by the Dominion Government which purchased the guns for the Province. In both cases, he desired the names of the officials making the inspections. The Provincial Treasurer replied emphatically that such inspections had been made and submitted a list of the inspectors.

A contemporary remarks that a man caught in the attempt to get $5 for a bag of potatoes ought not to be released in less than 30 days. Something should be done also to the person who eats expensive potatoes. The quickest way to bring down the price would be for potatoes to be taken off the menu altogether.

From a party viewpoint the Brewster Government has decided to give the Vancouver courthouse site to the City of Vancouver. From the people's viewpoint it would be sounder business and better patronage as well if the Government for $700,000 and devote the proceeds to the relief of returned soldiers.—Nelson (B.C.) News.

The Japanese do not sleep on European beds, but on many thick, soft pads piled one on top of each other. For bed covering they use one of the same kind of pads. It is said that the Japanese emperor has twenty such pads. One of these which he uses him is made in the shape of a kimono and has a velvet collar. Probably he creeps inside of this, if he feels cold in the night.

The tales which come from Russia of British and French artillery destined for the Roumanians, being side-tracked to the Ural Mountains, of vast quantities of ammunition blown up in Russian warehouses, and of general, deliberate treachery to the army by the pro-German Ministers are beyond belief. The wonder is the revolution was so bloodless—that vengeance was not taken on every one of the traitors. But the calm and order are proofs to the reactionaries more than wholesale executions would have been.

CANADA AND THE WAR.

A Letter That Has Been Much Discussed in England.

Under the heading "Canada and the War," a writer signing himself "Maple Leaf," has contributed a column to The London Evening Standard, which should help to clear up some present misconceptions in the Old Land as to Canada's record in the war. Replying to "The Londoner," a writer who stated in the press that some fifty per cent. of the people in Canada have given their all, but the remainder appear to take only a lukewarm interest in the war, "Maple Leaf" says in substance that Canada stands in a very different po- [illegible] These population is almost entirely of British extraction, citing the large American and European population in the west, where thinking imperially is not a modern conversion, like Bellman-Hollweg's new submarine policy; also there are a million and a half French Canadians whose nerves have been ragged to supersensitiveness by demagogues on the language question, and are practically exempt from recruiting possibilities. In the last eighteen months or so, from Canada's residue of British population and those of extraction totalling five millions, the contribution has been about one in twelve of the total population of men, women and children. He declares the climate, situation, and close influence of the United States have developed a system of life less in accord with that of the Motherland than that of the other Dominions, and says that thousands of ardent young Canadians have been prevented from enlisting by parents on account of the opportunity to obtain liquor near camps in England, and the presence of undesirable women about the camps. He concludes that Canadians became impatient at Asquith's dilatory tactics and the blunders as regards Antwerp, the Dardanelles, Mesopotamia, Roumania, and Greece, and finally expressed their disapproval by a falling off in recruiting, but he concludes that Canada will, after all, prove herself true.

In recognition of the overseas Dominions prohibition policy the opening ceremony of the British Empire non-alcoholic public house, Pobjoy, was performed by Prince Maurice of New Zealand and Colonel Richard Reid, Agent-General of Ontario, lately. The speakers had something to say on the subject of empire schemes after the war. Premier Massey considered nothing more important for the future of the Empire than some well considered scheme evolved by Imperial and Dominion Governments. Colonel Reid corrected the fallacy that the Dominions were solely future [illegible] in agriculture. Cherub Devine

Copyright, 1916, by Sewell Ford

"Lor', no, miss, 'bot as a general thing. But this is a special occasion, you know, a very particular occasion, miss."

"Indeed! And what very particular special occasion might this be to call for French chops?"

"Why, don't you remember—four months ago tonight! Course it's a bit of foolishness, but Mrs. Timmins would have it that way. 'Popples 'as birthdays,' says she, 'just the same'—"

"But popples don't eat baked potatoes, even on birthday anniversaries, do they, Timmins?"

"Baked potatoes! Lor' bless you, no, miss, they just loves 'em, so what I 'ears 'miss joined genteelly.

She had heard and seen enough to convince her that at least part of what she had gathered from her father's intimations was correct. Some one was being kept as a prisoner about the place. That much one was shut up in the icehouse. It was useless to ask questions. Her father would refuse to answer, and the replies of Timmins were too inventive to be convincing.

So early the next morning, before any one else on Hewington Acres had even roused and turned over for a sunshine nap, the Countess Vecchi stole quietly downstairs, let herself out of the front windows and walked determinedly in the direction of the icehouse.

Meanwhile Cherub Devine had hurried back to town and sought out that distinguished champion of the rights and privileges of such corporations as can afford to pay liberal fees, Mr. Siebert Dixon Driscoll.

Your average client would not have attempted to find Mr. Driscoll at that annual season to any THEIR office or his private secretary and I sat around and looked at each other until inches, Bah! I didn't show up again. No, no! Bob! It may be highly respectable and all that, but I've got to be where there's something doing. I want to get back into the street."

"Nothing to prevent you from resigning."

"Except getting in some one that'll work things the way I want 'em worked. What do you say to old Himmler?"

"Himmler of Chicago?"

"Sh! Not so one we can nipped on short holdings. Now, be hates me as the devil hates holy water, but he's a business man that knows the riffles, gets me like a book. He's down and out now. Let him get a bit shifty up for the purpose of interviewing his principal."

The Countess Vecchi was beginning to wish that she hadn't come, after all. Whether or not she was a real prisoner she might be on the point of rousing? A man who was Cherub De-

hour in the evening or, having found him, would hardly have expected him to give legal advice out of business hours. But Cherub Devine never stopped to consider whether or not he was violating professional ethics or intruding on personal privacy. He knew that Bob Driscoll would be likely be found either at his club or at home. Five minutes in a telephone booth settled the question. Mr. Driscoll was at home. He would be glad to see Cherub.

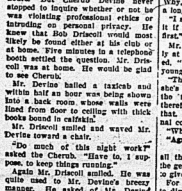
Mr. Devine hailed a taxicab and within half an hour was being shown into a back room whose walls were lined from floor to ceiling with thick books bound in calfskin.

Mr. Driscoll smiled and waved Mr. Devine toward a chair.

"Do much of this sight work?" asked the Cherub. "Have to, I suppose, to keep things running."

Again Mr. Driscoll smiled. He was quite used to Mr. Devine's breezy manner. He asked of him, in the same way.

"All kinds of things," responded the Cherub, dropping into a red leather chair and extracting one of his black cigars from a patent-leather case.



"Firstly," began the Cherub, "you're the chief attorney for that blasted railroad. I've just loaded up with, aren't you?"

Mr. Driscoll nodded.

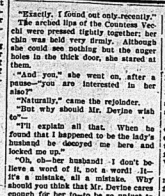
"Good! Now, as my private counsel I'd like to have you tell me if I can safely get rid of being president of—within the next twenty-four hours."

"Not even if it so soon, my boy."

"Tired! Why, say, Bob, there isn't work enough about a job of that kind to keep a man awake. I put in all one day trying to find things to do. By 10 o'clock I'd 'a' knocked off for several orders that I didn't know anything about, fired three duly hatted stenographers, and turned a dozen

When walking on the street on a windy day, keep your mouth closed and your eyes open. Then all manner of fog germs will blow into your eyes and ignominiously drown.

It's tough to have to tell a small and confiding person that on account of the seven eyes due to the wars the rabbits may have to lay perfectly plain eggs this Easter.



I'll cable him (delight to look up this count of mine and wire back full details, Bah! Old boy, too. Must get him at your office about noon tomorrow."

At midnight, from a downtown detective agency, four men started out to guard the estate to Hewington Acres, with orders to stop and hold a slim young man wearing a frock coat and a silk hat should he attempt to leave the grounds.

CHAPTER XIII.

WHAT would have been the sensations of Cherub Devine could he have known that the Countess Vecchi had risen before the dawn that was fairly up for the purpose of interviewing his prisoner?

The Countess Vecchi was beginning to wish that she hadn't come, after all. Whether or not she was a real prisoner she might be on the point of rousing? A man who was Cherub Devine's rival for some woman's affections, so her father had as good as said, but she could not believe that now. Perhaps the man was a criminal or a dangerous lunatic. She counted shrank away from the padlocked door and glanced anxiously about. It might have been wiser to have waited until later and then insisted upon Timmins coming with her.

"HELLO, HELLO!" CALLED THE COUNTESS.

But, no, she felt that she wanted no witnesses to this interview. Suppose her father's version should be correct? The countess lifted a determined chin and stepped briskly up to the heavy door. She doubled up one fist and tried to make a noise by hammering the wood. This was a failure. Then she looked around for a small stone, found it, wrapped her handkerchief about one end and proceeded to evoke a series of loud thumps. This proved effective, for an instant later she heard a creaking as of wire springs, and a deep hollow voice murmured some indistinct reply.

"Hello, hello!" called the countess, rapping again with the stone.

"Go away. I don't want my breakfast now. I—I—. Then came a prolonged yawn.

"I haven't brought you breakfast," said the countess a little impatiently. "I just want to know why you are in our icehouse."

This was sufficient to bring the unknown to his feet.

"Eh!—what—why—well, I like that! What am I doing in your icehouse, eh? Do you suppose I—I—a-a-choo-oo-ol Excuse me, countess. See here, just fit Do you imagine I would lock myself in such a room from choice? Why, when the deuce are you out there anyway?"

"Never mind who I am," retorted the countess, "but please tell me who you are?"

"Oh, bo! So that's it, eh? Well, you wait a minute, will you, until I—I—. But another sneezing fit interrupted the utterance. When it was over the countess heard him moving something against the door and was soon conscious that some one was pushing at her through the agper holes. She thought she could distinguish a smothered exclamation of surprise.

"Well," she observed, "can you see me now?"

"Oh, yes; quite well, thank you!"

"But you don't know any more about who I am than before, do you?"

"Don't I, though?" And the unknown chuckled. "You're the Countess Vecchi."

"Humph!" said the countess. "That's more guess."

"Is it? Then I dare you to deny that you aren't. Come, am I not right, my dear Adele?"

The countess started and tossed her head angrily.

"It doesn't matter in the least about my name. Perhaps you will tell me why you are in there."

"A stout, pink-faced person who is widely known, I believe, as Cherub Devine locked me in."

"Ah!" The countess did not mean this to sound like exclamation to be audible, but it was.

"So he hasn't told you about it yet, eh?" commented the unseen prisoner. "Stupid of me, wasn't it, to allow him to trick me so easily? You wait! Dear Mr. Devine is going to regret that he was so clever."

"But why did he do it?"

"You might have guessed anyway. There's a lady in the case."

"A lady!" gasped the countess. "Some one that—that Mr. Devine"—

Fascinating (?) niece.

"Oh!" The countess caught her breath sharply. "Then she is fascinating? Is she a blond?"

"Nod, a bit-lorely dark hair, big dark eyes. Her eyes are her strong point."

"Oh, I see!" commented the countess, then to herself: "It's because I look something like her. And she's young and fascinating. Humph!"

"Glad I could tell you about her," observed the prisoner, "but if you don't mind I think I'll climb down off this ice. It's rather cramping, and I feel another sneezing fit coming on. Was there anything more?"

"Oh, I wouldn't bother," she said carelessly. "Listen. You must go away from here at once."

"Nothing would please me better, but I can't crawl through these holes."

"I know, and I haven't a key to the padlock. But I shall get one. If I can't get one I shall demand that you be set at liberty. I'll go to my father, to Mr. Devine, and"—

"Oh, I wouldn't bother them about it. Just you say nothing at all, but find the key, undo the lock and then slip away. I'll promise I shall wait until afternoon."

"But it was a shame, keeping you shut up here like a criminal."

"That's so. I told them it was an outrage. And I've caught a frightful cold too. Think you can find the key, don't you?"

"I'm sure I can. I'll send Timmins on an errand and look in his desk."

"Timmins! Splendid! Good-by. You're a trump. It's mighty good of you."

"It isn't at all. I couldn't do less, and if I ever speak to Mr. Devine again it will be only to tell him what I think of such cruel treatment. Good-by. I'm going now."

"Goodby and good luck," came faintly through the ice, as the countess left.

Perhaps it was best that the countess could not see the grimace of satisfaction which accompanied the words as she departed to get the key to that padlock and open the prison door.

Thus it happened something after this fashion: The time was late afternoon. Between 4 and 5 o'clock, for the golden autumn day was about to end in a blaze of glory, the countess let herself into a room at the end of the corridor on the ground floor of the icehouse. It had become well understood in the servants' hall that this was a time of disturbing reign of that Devine person was over. Twice he had impudently offered his hand and fortune to the Countess Vecchi, and twice he had been scornfully refused. The parlor maid knew all the details.

Just now Timmins appeared up the front carriage drive. He was on foot and leading a half grown Jersey calf. He had been sent to purchase the calf from the Wilbur-Treman's dairyman.

Suddenly the icehouse door swung gently outward on its hinges, while a man, wearing a wrinkled frock coat and a silk hat somewhat rumpled and somewhat dimmed by a drapery of cobwebs, stepped cautiously out. Next he glanced in the direction of the house.

Above the shrubbery he could see only the roof and the dormer windows of the servants' story, but apparently he was satisfied. He turned and again looked toward the stables. No one was in sight there, but from the rear of the silk hat shook his fist at the sunset reddened windows.

Had he cast a glance directly behind him he would have seen Timmins and the calf just coming into view over the crest of a little rise in the rolling drive way. But he cast no such glance. Evidently he knew of only one road out of Hewington Acres, the right gateway, by which he had arrived, and he at once struck a businesslike gait in that ing for it.

The discreet Timmins was both startled and puzzled. He did not wish to intrude and alarm the folks in the house, for that would prevent the ac cret of the prisoner. Neither did he wish to lose sight of the calf, which in a two by four house, would be a bluffing.

FELT LIKE A NEW PERSON

EAST END HARBOUR, N. S.

"It is with great pleasure that I write to tell you of the wonderful benefits I have received from taking "Fruit-a-tives". For years, I was a victim of a severe form of Constipation and Headaches, and I was miserable in every way. Nothing in the way of medicines seemed to help me. Then I finally tried "Fruit-a-tives" and the effect was splendid. After taking one box, I felt like a new person, to have relief from those sickening Headaches".

would Cherub, in case any Timmins' sharp little eyes narrowed meaningly. With the free ends of the rope he gave the calf a turn around a smooth one the ribs, rudely rousing it from its peaceful promenade. The calf jumped sideways. Timmins, still kicking and whacking, running and leaping, the pair of them careered impetuously across the privet hedge, crashing through shrubbery, dodging between trees and making a straight course for the right hand driveway.

We have all we can manage to pity the countenance of the unfortunate prisoner when he saw himself headed off by this incongruous tandem. No doubt he instantly recognized in Timmins as his jailer, for after a moment's astonished hesitation he doubled on his tracks.

When a man talks about being confined all day in a stuffy office and a woman tells of being cooped all day in a two by four house, there's a

WAR LOAN

DOMINION OF CANADA

Issue of $150,000,000 5% Bonds Maturing 1st March, 1937

Payable at par at Ottawa, Halifax, St. John, Charlottetown, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Regina, Calgary, Victoria, and at the Agency of the Bank of Montreal, New York City.

INTEREST PAYABLE HALF-YEARLY, 1st MARCH, 1st SEPTEMBER.

PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST PAYABLE IN GOLD.

ISSUE PRICE 96.

A FULL HALF-YEAR'S INTEREST WILL BE PAID ON 1st SEPTEMBER, 1917.

THE PROCEEDS OF THE LOAN WILL BE USED FOR WAR PURPOSES ONLY.

10	per cent on application;
30	"	16th April, 1917;
20	"	15th May, 1917;
26	"	15th June, 1917.

The total allotment of bonds of this issue will be limited to one hundred and fifty million dollars, exclusive of that amount (if any) paid for by the surrender of bonds as the equivalent of cash under the terms of the War Loan prospectus of 22nd November, 1915.

The instalments may be paid in full on the 16th day of April, 1917, or on any instalment due date thereafter, under discount at the rate of four per cent per annum. All payments are to be made to a chartered bank for the credit of the Minister of Finance. Failure to pay any instalment when due will render previous payments liable to forfeiture and the allotment to cancellation.

Subscriptions, accompanied by a deposit of ten per cent of the amount subscribed, must be forwarded through the medium of a chartered bank. Any branch in Canada of any chartered bank will receive subscriptions and issue provisional receipts.

This loan is authorized under Act of the Parliament of Canada, and both principal and interest will be a charge upon the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Forms of application may be obtained from any branch in Canada of any chartered bank and at the office of any Assistant Receiver General in Canada.

Subscriptions must be for even hundreds of dollars.

In case of partial allotments the surplus deposit will be applied towards payment of the amount due on the April instalment.

Scrip certificates, non-negotiable or payable to bearer in accordance with the choice of the applicant, for registered or bearer bonds, will be issued, after allotment, in exchange for the provisional receipts.

When the scrip certificates have been paid in full and payment endorsed thereon by the bank receiving the money, they may be exchanged for bonds, when prepared, with coupons attached, payable to bearer or registered as to principal, or for fully registered bonds, when prepared, without coupons, in accordance with the application.

Delivery of scrip certificates and of bonds will be made through the chartered banks.

The issue will be exempt from taxes—including any income tax—imposed in pursuance of legislation enacted by the Parliament of Canada.

The bonds with coupons will be issued in denominations of $1000, $500, $1,000. Fully registered bonds without coupons will be issued in denominations of $1,000, $5,000 or any authorized multiple of $5,000.

The bonds will be paid at maturity at par at the office of the Minister of Finance and Receiver General at Ottawa, or at the offices of the Assistant Receiver General at Halifax, St. John, Charlottetown, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Regina, Calgary or Victoria, or at the Agency of the Bank of Montreal, New York City, at holder's option.

The interest on the fully registered bonds will be paid by cheque, which will be remitted by post to the holders on bonds with coupons will be paid on surrender of coupons. Both cheques and coupons, at the option of the holder, will be payable free of exchange at any branch in Canada of any chartered bank, or at the Agency of the Bank of Montreal, New York City.

Subject to the payment of twenty-five cents for each new bond issued, holders of fully registered bonds without coupons will have the right to convert into bonds of the denominations of $1,000 each, and holders of bonds with coupons will have the right to convert into fully registered bonds of authorized denominations without coupons at any time on application to the Minister of Finance.

The books of the loan will be kept at the Department of Finance, Ottawa.

Application will be made in due course for the listing of the loan on the Montreal and Toronto Stock Exchanges.

Recognized bond and stock brokers having offices and carrying on business in Canada will be allowed a commission of three-eighths of one per cent on allotments made in respect of applications bearing their stamp, provided, however, that no commission will be allowed in respect of the amount of any allotment paid for by the surrender of bonds issued under the War Loan prospectus of 22nd November, 1915, or in respect of the amount of any allotment paid for by surrender of five per cent debenture stock maturing 1st October, 1919. No commission will be allowed in respect of applications on forms which have not been printed by the King's Printer.

SUBSCRIPTION LISTS WILL CLOSE ON OR BEFORE THE 23rd OF MARCH, 1917.

SIDNEY CROSSING

March 14—The sleighing is going fast and in some places the roads are in a dangerous condition.

Miss Jennie Moon is attending the O. B. C. at Belleville.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Burroll and Mr. Wm. Chisholm, Belleville, were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Kelly during the last week.

Mr. Horace Denyes of Odessa, was visiting friends here during the week.

Mrs. Webster Hyde, of Trenton, was the guest of Mrs. Judson Kelley on Wednesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Eggleton have moved into their new home.

The drama, "The Village Doctor" put on by the Bayside Red Cross Society at White's Church last Thursday evening was a decided success. Each one acted their part splendidly. The play donated by the Society, was won by Mr. Acker of Trenton. Proceeds exceeded $90. Rev. Smith of the Baptists Church, Belleville ably acted the part of chairman for the evening.

The relatives of Col. Hendrie and wife, one of the U.S. Consuls in Germany, have received word that they are on the Atlantic en route for home. Mrs. Hendrie, nee Miss Jennie Yates, is one of our Sidney girls and her many friends anxiously await their arrival.

About forty of the members of White's Church invaded the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Powell on Friday night. Mr. J. Kelley was elected chairman and after speeches from Messrs Geo. Heagle, J. Donaldson, S. Ketcheson and others, Mr. Wm. Bonisteel and Misses Mabel Jeffers and Stella Wilson presented the newly wedded couple with a pair of oak rockers. Mr. and Mrs. Powell were quite surprized and in a few words thanked the donors for their useful gifts.Cake and coffee were served and games were indulged in. All having a good time.

Messrs George Gray and Fred Wilson of Redrsville have been sawing wood in this section during the past week.

The funeral services of the late Mr. John Loveless were conducted at Wesley Church, Bayside, by Dr. Marvin on Friday. Deceased was ill only a few days with pneumonia and his wife lies in a critical condition with the same disease. Much sympathy is felt for the bereaved widow.

Mr. Ryerson Vandervoort, who underwent an operation for appendicitis at Belleville hospital is improving very slowly.

Mrs. George Chisholm, who has been staying for the past month with her daughters, Misses Rena and Winnie, has returned home.

THIS OINTMENT POSSESSES POWER TO HEAL THE SKIN

Two Cases Which Prove the Extraordinary Healing Power of Dr. Chase's Ointment

Peterboro, Ont., March 22—The use of Dr. Chase's Ointment is wonderfully satisfactory because you can actually see the results accomplished. It is surprising what change can be brought about in a single night by this great healing ointment.

Mr. George Davis, 119 James street, Peterboro, Ont., writes: "As a healing ointment, I consider Dr. Chase's the best obtainable. I had a large running sore on my leg, and although I had tried all the prescriptions of two doctors I was unable to get any relief from the pain or to get the sore healed. One day my druggist handed me a sample box of Dr. Chase's Ointment, and I used it with such good results that I decided to give the ointment a fair trial. Altogether I used four boxes, and am glad to be able to say that the sore on my leg is entirely healed up. Since this experience with Dr. Chase's Ointment I have recommended it to many people."

Mrs. W. W. Oliver, Port George, Annapolis Co., N.S., writes: "I am going to tell you my experience with Dr. Chase's Ointment. There was a spot came on my face something like a mole, but it kept getting worse, and several doctors whom I consulted said it was a skin cancer, and that it would have to be cut or burned out. I intended having this done, but changed my mind when my brother recommended Dr. Chase's Ointment. Before I had finished one box of the ointment this skin trouble had gone, and has not bothered me since. I cannot praise Dr. Chase's Ointment too much, and you are at liberty to publish this letter."

If you have never used Dr. Chase's Ointment send a two-cent stamp for a sample box, and mention this paper. Price sixty cents a box, all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

YOUR COAL BIN.

How to Save Your Black Diamonds Just Now.

VARIOUS KINDS OF SIFTERS.

An Expert Tells Us How to Keep One Eye Pealed on the Furnace While the Other Scans the High Cost of Living. It Pays to Have Implements.

While many women are under the tyranny of the janitor, still others glory in our shame of being a householder and have to do more than theoretically tackle the coal bin. Even if we have a man to feed the furnace and remove the ashes, it might save us some pennies to become better acquainted with some of the coal savers on the market.

First among these may be cited a "best controller." This may be called the watchdog of the coal bin, as by regulating the heat it prevents unnecessary burning of coal or any building of the fire because through carelessness it was allowed to die out. It has a clock attachment, which can be set at a desired time. For instance, it can be set an hour earlier than the rising time, with the temperature set for 70. When you awake instead of finding a chilly, frigid home the house is warm and comfortable, due to the magic of the heat controller.

With coal at its present price a ton it is wise to have the best kind of a sifter. Various "rotary" styles are on the market, which sift the chaff from the wheat, so to speak, and permit the slightly burned coals to be saved, when they can be used again to bank the fire. These sifters come in various sizes and consist of a hopper fitted to a can. The hopper is equipped with wire mesh, and turning the handle sifts the ashes, but retains the larger partly burned lumps for second use.

One of the conveniences for the housekeeper who has to buy a quantity of coal is the right kind of coal window or chute. One of the most practical on the market is a combined window and chute. The parts are made of strong metal, the window protected by a wire mesh. The parts of the window are so made that opening the window opens the chute within, which is attached to the window and part of it. This relieves the need of extra chutes. The window locks automatically when it is closed, thus being burglar proof. It saves coal being scattered at the entrance of the window and is so made that it seems an integral part of the house and cellar when installed.

No matter what kind of a heating system is used in your home, the boiler must be "jacketed" with some kind of asbestos material. These jackets can be bought for a regular boiler, such as is frequently attached to a kitchen range. The jacket laces up and can be most easily attached. Special sized boilers can have the jackets made to order, or the boiler covered with asbestos composition material used by steamfitters. Keeping the heat in is as much of a coal saver as anything else. The best plant will waste heat if not sufficiently insulated.

The best coal ranges are fitted with dumping grates connected with a chute to a bin in the cellar. This is a great convenience, removing the necessity for dragging buckets of coal and ashes to and from the cellar and above the rooms. Such a chute could be fitted with a sifter and the better grades of ashes saved for use again. It pays those who have the management of a heating system to investigate the modern improvements and systems which will help reduce the high cost of heating.

"Find My Hand There."

Just because a man wears civilian clothing is not sufficient reason to take it for granted that he is a shirker or is dodging it to be wearing the king's uniform. A minister's daughter, disdaining to have anything to do with a creature still in mufti, learned this to her regret when she entered a street car in Toronto recently.

The car was, as usual, crowded. A young man rose and offered his seat to the young lady who entered.

"No," she said, with a toss of her head and a scornful look at the young man. "I wouldn't accept a

COOKING VEGETABLES.

Be Sparing in the Use of Water and Adding Seasoning.

In the cooking of vegetables there are a few things to remember—first to retain all the mineral matter and nutriment possible, to soften the cellulose and to develop the flavor, making them more palatable.

Spinach cooked properly should be well washed and cooked without the addition of water or very little. This vegetable, being rich in iron, which is soluble in water, by being cooked in a large amount of water may be rendered nearly valueless as a food. This is true of green peas and beans or, in fact, any of the delicately flavored vegetables. The seasoning is another important item. The flavoring never should be dispelled by seasoning. Usually butter, pepper and salt, not too much, are best because the plainest.

To accomplish these results one may use several methods—cook the vegetable whole or in large pieces, cook with the skin on, use as little water as a small an amount of water as possible without burning, serve the water in a sauce with the vegetable wherever possible, and season after the vegetable has started cooking, so that the salt does not draw out the flavor.

FOR BEGINNERS.

Hints to Help Mrs. Newlywed Over Hard Spots.

In making soups always put the meat in cold water. Corned beef and ham should be put in boiling water. A tablespoonful of vinegar put in the pot will make tough meat or chicken tender.

To roast beef allow twenty minutes to a pound.

All vegetables should be put in boiling water.

Put hot brown bread by putting a string around the loaf the right thickness for a slice and draw quite tight.

In making tea allow one teaspoonful for each person and one for the pot. Allow one tablespoonful of coffee for each person and one for pot.

Always pare fruit with a silver knife. Always scrape carpets the way the nap runs.

If new tinware is rubbed over with fresh lard and then thoroughly heated in the oven before it is used it will never rust afterward, no matter how much water is used in it.

Record Piling Contract.

The largest piling contract ever given on the Pacific coast, according to the Vancouver Sun, has just been awarded by the Canadian Pacific Railway to a Vancouver creosoting company. The contract amounts to $150,000. A large number of the piles to be delivered will be 120 feet long. This gives an idea of the size and permanency of the dock extension that is being made by the railway.

Temperance Prospects As Seen in Quebec

Mr. E. Tennyson Assists Materially in Swinging Several Towns Into the "Dry" Column

Apropos of the results accomplished by the temperance campaign in behalf of Belleville during the past week, through Mr. E. Tennyson Smith, the following sketch of a similar work in Hull and other Quebec towns, which has been handed to The Intelligencer for publication, is most timely. During his sojourn in our city Mr. Smith, as well as his talented wife, made many friends, his cordial personality natural diplomacy and thorough conviction of the needs of the hour making a decided impression in his favor. As a platform worker he is tireless, yet free from undue personalities; humorous, yet keeping within a pleasing limit; always advanced in his methods yet allowing even his opponents the privilege of their convictions. That he has done our people good is generally accepted, and the high regard of all who have heard and conversed with him will accompany his labors in other fields. We gladly give the article space in our columns.

WHAT HAS BEEN DONE FOR TEMPERANCE

One of the most important fights for prohibition is at the present time going on in Hull, Que., and there is widespread interest in temperance circles in the struggle and much speculation as to the probable result, as the strategic importance is great and it is believed that if Hull votes "dry" it will greatly influence other large centres in the Province and encourage them to make a similar fight.

A month ago there was not the slightest intention on the part of the temperance party to attempt a contest to secure prohibition in the near future, as efforts previously made together with a view to getting a poll under the Canada Temperance Act which could not be brought on until the fall.

An effort had been made by the County Union of the W. C. T. U. to get the local temperance workers to have a campaign conducted by Mr. Tennyson Smith in Hull, but the local people were not willing to accept the responsibility. Mrs. Tennyson Smith, realizing the need of the work determined to undertake it and made all arrangements personally for his campaign. From the first his meetings aroused the temperance people to enthusiasm and he so stirred and encouraged them for an immediate fight that he was able to form a strong committee to try to secure a poll under the Quebec Provincial Law prior to May 1st so as to prevent the issue of licenses for that date. In two days this committee had secured about one hundred names to the requisition, many being leading people including Mr. J. R. Booth; Mr. Tennyson Smith, personally secured the signatures of the seven Catholic Priests. He then asked the committee to authorize him to lodge the requisition with the authorities and in the same week accompanied by a lawyer and the secretary of the committee he personally attended at the office of the City Clerk, saw the requisition handed in and duly dated, and the necessary local steps which compelled the authorities to hold a poll were thus concluded, and the election is to take place on April 16th and following days. Mr. Tennyson Smith's next move was to get an united meeting of the two committees and get them to work in harmony for the same end, and this he achieved. The whole temperance people, English and French, Protestant and Catholic, are working unitedly and energetically, and they feel assured of victory at the polls.

Mr. Tennyson Smith was encouraged to press the question of taking a vote in Hull, owing to his success in this work in other places. He was invited in January to Buckingham, Que., to conduct a campaign under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., but there was not the remotest intention on the part of the temperance people of the town to have a vote taken, but the lecturer aroused so much enthusiasm that he was able to form a strong men's committee to undertake the necessary arrangements and as a result a poll was held on March 5th when Buckingham and Masson both went "dry." He afterwards went to Alymer, and did a similar work, forming a very influential men's committee to take the necessary steps to secure a poll and the town is to vote on April 2nd.

Mr. Tennyson Smith has had a very long and varied experience in local option fights in various countries, so that his work is most helpful to the cause in Province of Quebec, where these contests have still to take place, but even more valuable than his experience is his remarkable power to stir the people to enthusiasm and thus lead them to take action. The result of the contests in Hull and Aylmer will be awaited with much interest and not a little anxiety by the temperance party as the effect will be far reaching.

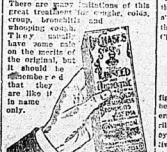
GRAND TRUNK NEWS

RAILWAYS MUST PAY HUNDRED PER CENT MORE FOR COAL THIS YEAR

Montreal March 8—The coal bill of the Canadian Railways will show an increase of more than eight million dollars this year. This figure was declared to be a conservative one by railway experts interviewed here today. The railway coal contracts are made to cover a twelve month period from April 1st each year, and the railroad purchasing officers are now engaged in making their agreements with the mines.

"Just what the actual increase will be cannot be determined for a few weeks" said one purchasing agent today, "but indications are that the increase in the price of railway coal will range from seventy-five to one hundred and fifty per cent over last year's prices. The fuel bill of the railways is already an enormous one and the strain on the revenues of the roads. The Grand Trunk, for instance uses about three and a half million tons of coal each year. The Canadian lines carry an added burden in the form of a 7½ per cent duty on the coal imported. This tax was part of the War Revenue Act of 1915 and is computed on the value of the coal. With the doubling up in the price of fuel during the next twelve months, this taxation will also be increased to a very large figure."



"A very large proportion of the coal used on the Canadian Railways must be bought from the United States. The cause of the increased price lies in the abnormal demand for all classes of steam coal due to the great industrial activity prevailing. Plants which previously ran twelve hours a day are now operating for the full twenty-four hours and the fuel demands have increased proportionately. Just what the future holds in the way of ever increasing costs of operation for railroads cannot be accurately guaged, but the increase in the price of coal finds a parallel in nearly all other staples used by the lines. That the situation is very serious, railway executives fully realize, especially as they are selling transportation service at rates fixed long before these increases were thought probable or possible.

"Aye."

"And that one with the very large horns is a moose."

"A what?"

"A moose."

"Awa' man; if that's a moose, then what are your rats like?"

RALPH CONNER ON CHURCH OF ENGLAND

Rev C. W. Gordon (Ralph Connor), pastor of one of the largest Presbyterian churches in Winnipeg, has been preaching a series of sermons on "The Creeds of Christendom." His first subject was "The Treasure and Inheritance of the Anglican Church." In the course of an eloquent address, as reported in the Winnipeg Free Press, Mr. Gordon stated that of all the churches the Church of England was easily the oldest. He said that the Church of England had existed from the beginning of the Christian era, and is older than the state and Empire, and for nearly 1,000 years has shown a steady growth. He reiterated the historic fact that the bishops of the church held their office by the laying on of hands in an unbroken succession from the apostles, who received their commission from Jesus Christ. The preacher remarked that it was a popular idea that this church is in outgrowth of the "Church of Rome. "This is not so," said Mr. Gordon. "The church has been for a period under the influence of Rome, but had always been composed of men who fought against papal authority." He said all must conformity sprang from the Church of England, while the finest and most inspiring music in the world came from members of this communion. The greatest scholarship was seen here; to this church, said the preacher, we owe the Bible as well as the prayer book, which was worthy of being placed on a par with the Bible. He spoke of the simple faith of the members, and the beautiful prayers, the beautiful vestments and service and beyond, remarking in passing, that the Anglicans laid a marvellous emphasis on prayer, and the non-use formula may well stir for the extemporee of a prayer book when they hear their extemporaneous prayers jumbled and poorly phrased. In recapitulating he emphasized the beauty and dignity of the service of the Anglican church, stating that in the non-conformist churches, much depended on the minister in the pulpit, but in the Anglican church the people take a large part, and all in all present the world with the truly beautiful Christ.

LITERARY NOTES

THE WIDE WORLD MAGAZINE

A thrilling story of a brave woman's fight to rescue her husband, who has been condemned by the Mexican Government to be shot, appears in the April Wide World Magazine. It is told by the heroine herself and the narrative casts a lurid sidelight upon the state of affairs prevailing today in Mexico. Mrs. Yaro Galvon, the author, was before her marriage, Miss Laura Holland, of Cleveland, Ohio. Under the title of "An Unknown Switzerland," Mabel Durham gives a vivid description—magnificently illustrated—of Canada's "Alpine Wonderland." Edward Whymper, the great climber, once described part of the Dominion Rockies as "fifty Switzerlands rolled into one," but he died before the most wonderful Alpine regions of the Dominion were discovered. In Western Canada, writes the author, there are countless virgin peaks, scores of them still unmapped and unnamed, and many which the white man has not yet seen. A vast region of mountain and glacier, two hundred and fifty thousand square miles in extent, awaits the advent of the climber and explorer. Other articles and stories include "Across the Atlantic in a Tug," "Round Labrador and Hudson Bay," "The Saving of Paris" and "A Flying Man in South America."

CANNED BOYHOOD

"Doin' The Chores." Has Passed Into the Discard.

The city schoolmaster let chores and lost belonging to appear, writes Uncle Dudley" in the Boston Globe. A father was listening to the chatter of three 11-year-old boys on his way, and one of them his son. They talked of gymnasiums, school teams, municipal playgrounds and basket ball. As he thought of the contrast between their leisurely, organized play, and the precious morsels of boyhood snatched from the chores of his own youth, he exclaimed of these modern youngsters: "Canned boyhood!"

From the city and suburb the chore is well nigh gone, and gone for good. Stables are a useful substitute. Boy scouting has been a Godsend. Scoutcraft, as applied to the cities, does in fact make the Boy Scouts the churchboys of the great community, but athletics and scoutcraft, when all is said and done, are not work. And of the wholesome part about chores is that they teach children the elementary lesson that life is a little holiday entirely surrounded by work, instead of a little work entirely surrounded by holiday.

The eternal routine of cleaning horses, feeding pigs, milking cows, splitting kindling, lugging coal, washing dishes, cutting grass, cleaning stables, emptying ashes, hoeing the kitchen-piece we hated it then, and we thank our stars for it now!

For that routine of petty tasks built into the fibre of our lives a useful habit of viewing work as the normal state of man.

Which it is.

KILLED.

March 20—Mrs. Jamed Palmer received the following letters from her son, James C. Palmer, who went overseas with the first contingent, and has spent all this time serving in France:

My Dear Mother—Just a few lines to let you know I am all O.K. again, and hope this finds you the same. I received your parcel of socks this the ladies of Allanville sent me, and I want you to give them my thanks for their kindness to me. I received the parcel in hospital, and gave the other boys who were wounded a pair, so you see the ladies have made some poor wounded boys comfortable, and I want them to accept my thanks for their kindness, and also for the other boys who are wounded in the arms, and cannot write and thank them. I suppose you have received word that I have been wounded, but I am all right again and will soon be returning to my unit, so do not send any mail to the hospital.

How is father and all; I hope he is in the best of health. We have had a lot of snow over here. There is enough for sleighing, and the weather is nice and bright, just like it is at home in the spring. Well, this is all for now. Good-bye. Give my love to Stella.

Your loving son,

TUFTSVILLE.

March 22—Bertie Andrews of the G. T. R., Petersboro, has been home for a week on account of the illness of his mother.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Bennett visited a day at Sine with Mr. and Mrs. P. Burgess.

Mr. and Mrs. Neil Davis, of Foxboro, visited a day with his mother, Mrs. Davis, here recently.

Mr. John Juby fell off a sleigh on Tuesday last and received a shaking up.

We wish to convey to Mr. and Mrs. E. Parliament, of Consecon, our deepest sympathy for them in their bereavement for their only son, Earl, who was killed in France recently.

Mr. and Mrs. Robt. Tufts, near Tweed, visited at Mr. S. Stapley's and with them received word of their son, Arthur, who is in France, being slightly wounded in the thumb.

Mr. Wm. Wills, who has been from home for a few months has returned home again.

Mr. and Mrs. Harmsdowe (nee Rina Bird), of Madoc, are visiting her father before going to Sask.

POTATOES CHEAPER NOW

People Who Stocked up at High Price are Vexed

Two weeks ago potatoes sold in Toronto in large quantities to Toronto restaurant keepers at $4.50 per bag, one week later at $3.50, and Saturday last at $2.25, while today they can be had for about $3.00.

The manager of a large eating house in the city states that to his personal knowledge a certain wholesaler was selling potatoes recently at $4.50, which he had purchased three weeks previously at $3. The warehouse of the dealer in question was stocked both on the main floor, and in the cellar, when the restaurateur made a purchase at $4.50 per bag, securing more than his immediate need in order to prevent cancellation of the wholesaler that the prices would continue to rise.

The high prices caused the hotel and restaurant managers to cut down their potato orders, and in some cases to substitute rice for potatoes. This fact, together with the partial relief in the railway freight situation, has had the effect of materially reducing the price.

One case is cited where a York County farmer with two or three loads of potatoes stored in his cellar entered a Toronto wholesale house during the alleged "potato boom." When offered $4.50 by the wholesaler who was willing to bag the crop, and transport it into the city, the farmer demanded $4.10 for his "spuds" on the ground.

WHAT HE DID WITH THIRTY PIECES OF SILVER

After his vote against the Armed Ship Bill, $31 prominent residents of Jonesboro, Ark., send thirty pieces of silver to Senator W. F. Kirby, of Arkansas, as a rebuke for his stand on the armed neutrality resolution. Then the senator sent the following message to a local paper:—"Editor Times: Your readers may be curious to know what was done with the money the thirty pieces of silver patriots from Jonesboro sent me in derision of my position in the Senate. I am using the money sent in derision of my standing by our country, to inform you by wire, thirty thousand enlisted men, now at the recruiting stations and camps and marching like four thousand officers, small-like, another 1 million will be required within the next ninety days. The list of your names is kept so that they may be checked if any of you enlist, but I expect my young son will be gray with age before 2 per cent of you will go to the front unless conscripted.

Music And Drama

The interest in the coming to this city of the Gus Hill attraction "The Girl Who Smiles" is not confined to the fact that it is a musical comedy construction as well as treatment, from the average run of entertainments of this very desirable character, is greatly accentuated owing to the fact that it has enjoyed a more than popular run at the Longacre Theatre in New York of two hundred performances, and was distinguished praise by all the metropolitan critics.

Besides having the merit of more than the usually tuneful novelty, "The Girl Who Smiles" may be reported in the light of a theatrical rarity, a musical comedy with a story that pursues delineation, with scenes in gripping pathos. Briefly, the story deals with Monsieur Paul Pabre, a wealthy and grouchy old father, who has long forgotten his own childhood and cannot abide sounds of youthful mirth in his household, and his daughter Marie, who has never been known to smile until she meets Francois Dechanelle, a young artist of the happy-go-lucky Latin Quarter, who teaches her the meaning of love.

Forced by her father into an unhappy engagement, Marie runs away to Dechanelle's little studio. Here they are wounded by creditors, artists, musicians, and other carefree, happy Bohemians, she learns the gentle art of smiling, and after a year or so returns her artists husband to her home to find that the old father, enraged over the unfortunate match made by good-for-nothing son Paul, and still unrelenting towards his daughter, has disinherited them more than ever, but Marie brings with her an infant whose nose and eyes resemble his grandfather's, and in a long struggle of emotion before Paul Pabre finally yields to parental affection and allows the young couple to enter his house. This scene with the baby is a most unusual departure in the musical comedy.

There are twenty musical numbers in the score, every one of which have become among the most popular songs of the day, and the elaborate musical production and an all star cast are being especially featured.

THE SECRET KINGDOM OPENS WITH INTEREST

This splendid dramatic production by high society, produced its first episode before a full house at Griffin's last night. From this initial presentation the deeply interested audience were held within the circles of royalty, where intrigue was rampant, especially in the love affairs of King and Queen, and an effort to do away with the heir to the throne, Prince Hamlet, a boy of about the premier of the country. The escape of the heir's young boy, his transportation to the country, his mysterious ness of a trusted attache to the king, brought out many thrilling scenes. The aerial is unlike any yet presented here, as it has to do with a social element, which is supposed to lead in things honorable, yet teems with intrigue. It was tremendously applauded and popular. The five real Japanese play,

"The Soul of Kura San" featuring Jessie Haywood, the noted actress, and a shorter story made up a splendid programme, all of which will be repeated this evening.

Many a poker player has the blues because, oddly enough, he hasn't.

RECIPES FOR BABY FOOD, ETC.

Lime Water.

A TEASPOONFUL of unslaked lime in a quart of boiled water. Shake in a large bottle such as a gem jar and let stand for twenty-four hours. The clear fluid standing on top may then be run off. This is Lime Water.

Barley Water.

Two level teaspoonfuls of Robinson's or Brock's barley-flour. Mix with water to make a paste. Add two pints of boiling water. Boil for twenty minutes in double boiler. Strain through two thicknesses of cheese cloth. Add boiled water to make up that boiled away so as to have one pint.

Gruel.

Oatmeal or Barley. Use either Robinson's or Brock's barley flour or Robinson's oatmeal (groats). To three teaspoonfuls of the flour add sufficient cold water to form a paste and add enough water to make a pint. Cook for twenty minutes in a double-boiler. Add a pinch of salt. Strain through two thicknesses of cheese cloth. The gruel should be thick enough to jelly when cold. If too thin, cook longer.

Whey.

To one quart of skimmed milk, heated to 105 Deg. F. add four teaspoonfuls of liquid rennet. Let stand in a cool place till the curd forms. Break up the curd with a fork and strain through four layers of cheesecloth or muslin. Heat the liquid (whey) to 155 Deg. F. and allow to cool gradually. Keep on ice. One quart of milk makes 24 ounces of whey.

Albumen Water.

To four ounces of water, heated to 164 Deg. F. add the white of one egg, stir with a knife until dissolved. Do not beat or shake. Strain through cheesecloth.

Broth.

Put a pound of meat in one pint of cold water. Add a pinch of salt. Cook slowly for one hour. Strain through two thicknesses of cheesecloth and cool. Remove all fat.

Beef Juice.

Partially broil over coals the sides of a half pound of the top of a round of beef. Cut in small pieces and squeeze out the juice. Add a pinch of salt and season to taste. Add a pinch of salt. Half a pound of beef makes two ounces of beef juice.

Scraped Beef.

Scrape a piece of round steak with a knife and then very slightly broil. Scraped beef is free from fibre and tendon. Scraped beef.

Junket.

To one quart of whole milk heated to 105 Deg. F. add four teaspoonfuls of liquid rennet. Add a pinch of salt and a teaspoonful of unsatisfied sugar. Let stand in a cool place till the curd forms. Strain off the liquid. The balance is Junket.

Coddled Egg.

Put the egg in boiling water and immediately remove from the fire. Cover and let stand for seven or eight minutes. The white of the egg should be soft and not liquid.

Prune Juice.

Take half a pound of good prunes. Wash and soak in water over night. Cover with water and add half a teaspoonful of sugar. Cook slowly until the prunes are perfectly tender. Strain through cheesecloth. The remaining liquid is the juice.

Soap Suppository.

Take a piece of castile or common brown soap and cut out a portion one or two inches long, pointed at one end and about as thick as a lead pencil. This will make a very good suppository. Slightly wet when about to use it.

Boracic Acid Solution (3 per cent.)

Put one tablespoonful of boracic acid crystals in a clean eight-ounce bottle filled with boiled water. Shake the bottle. Not all the crystals will be dissolved, but the water will be saturated, (4 per cent.) solution. Some of this diluted, with equal parts of boiled water will be a 2 per cent. solution. The 4 per cent. solution should be so labelled and used as a stock solution.

ORANGE GRAND LODGE CONCLUDES ITS BUSINESS

Many Important Measures Discussed—A Memorable Gathering in a General Sense—Officers Elected For Ensuing Year—Resolutions Adopted—Kingston Next Place of Meeting

At the three sessions held yesterday of the Orange Grand Lodge of Eastern Ontario, much business was disposed of. The business of the Grand Convocation was completed at an early hour this morning, the election of officers for the ensuing year being the concluding business. It has been one of the most successful gatherings of the Grand body.

At the morning session, Sir Mackenzie Bowell, Past Grand President of the Triennial Council of British North America, gave an address which was much appreciated. At the conclusion three cheers were given for the former Premier of Canada.

A telegram of greetings was read from the Grand Lodge of Newfoundland, now in session at Grand Falls, Newfoundland, from the Hon. R. A. Squires, Grand Master and Attorney General of that colony.

Mr. William Banks, of Toronto, secretary of the joint committee on Legislation of British America and Grand Master H. C. Hockin of Ontario West gave an address.

Other business this morning was the reports of the committee on credentials, petitions, and appeals, returns.

There is a net gain of about 300 in membership in this jurisdiction this year and a very large increase of about $150,000 in the value of property owned by the order.

ADDRESSES OF WELCOME

The addresses were as follows:

Belleville, Ont., March. 19th, 1917.
To the Right Worshipful Grand Master and Representatives of the Grand Lodge of Ontario East, of the Loyal Orange Association.
Right Worshipful Sirs:—

The Officers and members of Maiden City Lodge No. 13, of the Protestant Association of 'Prentice Boys bid you a most hearty and hospitable fraternal welcome upon this your fifty-eight annual session in this fair Province, and trust your deliberations may be harmonious, the legislation you may enact beneficial, your sojourn in our midst pleasant, and that in the future you will often recall with kindly remembrance's Belleville and the good citizens of our fair City.

We regret that you are this year meeting for the third time under a cloud of war, the worst the world has ever witnessed, Great Britain's Navy has well maintained her true title to supremacy of the sea, and "The flag that braved a thousand years the battle and the breeze" is still to the front everywhere in the interest of liberty, freedom and justice.

The sea-grit Isle with her Overseas Dominions and her worthy Allies are maintaining solemn and binding obligations, not treating them as scraps of paper, but assisting and helping the smaller and weaker nations put up the most wonderfully plucky and creditable defence against unjust attack, insisting on the putting down of aggression, piracy and tyranny, and staying with the gallant game of war until right shall triumph.

We learn with a great deal of pride and satisfaction that over forty thousand of your members have nobly responded to the call and taken up arms in defence of the British Empire, Canada and Freedom, which shows to the world that Orangism is "doing its bit."

May and all-wise Providence grant us victory in this dire world struggle, and restore order and a universal, honorable and lasting peace out of the present chaos caused by the hatred and brutality of our enemy and permit the safe return to their homes of most all our noble soldiers.

In conclusion we hope this session may prove one of the best ever held and will be of lasting benefit to your fraternity.

Signed on behalf of the Lodge,
R. H. Ketcheson, P. G. M.
C. O. Brickman, Rec. Sec'y.

To The Right Worshipful Grand Master, Officers and Members of the Loyal Orange Grand Lodge, Province of Ontario East.
Right Worshipful Sir and Brethren:—

On behalf of the Officers and members of the Loyal Orange Lodges No. 274 and No. 2519, we extend to you a most hearty welcome to the 58th Annual Session of the Orange Grand Lodge, now being held in our beautiful City, which has long been noted for its genuine and kindly hospitality.

We feel and know that we belong to a society that has for its object the well being and uplift of humanity.

Our Empire at present is engaged in one of the greatest conflicts the world has ever known and we feel assured that the Allies will emerge from the great struggle victorious and that the world will enjoy a lasting peace, free from all the curses of Prussian-Militarism.

Our Society has been true to the high traditions of the Order, and many thousands of our members have gladly and voluntarily offered their services in this great struggle for the protection of the weak and the freedom of mankind. Many from our own lodges in Belleville have gone and we sincerely regret to say that at least two have paid the supreme sacrifice.

Again we welcome you to Belleville and trust that your deliberations will prove instructive and useful to us all as well as a pleasure to yourselves.

C. JOHNSON.
Signed on behalf of L.O.L. 2519.
J. W. KINNEAR, W. M.

APPRECIATIVE LETTER

Bro. E. G. Porter, K. C., M. P., of Belleville, who was unable to be present at Grand Lodge, owing to indisposition sent the following communication:

Most Worshipful Grand Master, Officers and Brethren, Grand Orange Lodge, Ontario East.
Gentlemen:

I have been looking with anticipated pleasure to your meeting at this time in our City and County in the hope that I would have the opportunity of extending to you personally the brotherly hand in friendly and welcome greeting. But it is willed otherwise and I find myself through physical affliction unable to be with you, and am thus compelled in this manner to convey to you my sentiments of great appreciation of your visit and to express the hope that it will prove both pleasant and profitable.

It is most gratifying at this time of peril, not only to our Empire but to civilized humanity throughout the world, to realize that no other single Order in our Dominion has responded to the call of duty and contributed so many worthy sons to go battle in the cause of liberty and justice and uphold the honorable traditions of our flag as our own beloved Orange Order of which you are representatives for Eastern Ontario. While this is a fact of which we have no desire to boast over our fellow citizens, yet it is an object lesson to all as to the loyalty and sincerity of our brethren in upholding the Protestant religion and maintaining the integrity and honor of the British Empire and its people, and should, as I believe it will, be an inspiration to the nation in realizing wherein and whereby its safety lies and may be secured. Let us hope and pray that our noble brethren who have already and are now making the effort to preserve the liberties of our people and the rights of humanity may be spared the supreme sacrifice and be safely returned to their homes.

If I may be permitted at this time to make a suggestion, which in my judgment has not received the attention it should, and in this respect I admit I am perhaps as great a sinner as any, it would be that more attention should be given to the younger element in every community to incline their minds and direct their actions to the principles of our Order. It has truly been said "As the twig is bent the tree inclines;" so in the case of our children when taken very young and receiving the principles of our Order implanted in the soil that in them is most receptive and productive, and the weeds are kept carefully trimmed while they are growing up, the plant will become so rooted that neither time nor evil influence will destroy it but it will grow firmer and stronger as it grows older. The greatest rival and most deadly enemy to our Order has most assiduously cultivated this idea and I not say with what success; but I venture the assertion that if we hope to meet and overcome the evil influences abroad in our land we must give greater attention to the children and younger people who are in our keeping.

Another suggestion occurs to me and I cannot refrain from mentioning it in connection with the most recent agitation in Ireland following so closely on the heels of armed rebellion in some of the misguided portions of that much disturbed portion of the Empire. Our friends in Ulster have long maintained a courageous and worthy battle for their rights and are entitled to all the support and sympathy we can give them, and to this end we should use every lawful means to impress upon the governing bodies, both in our Dominion and the British Isles, the futility of endeavoring to coerce the people of Ulster or impose upon them a Parliament in which, in the light of the past and also recent events, they could have no confidence nor hope.

Apologizing for taking your time and again expressing my regrets for not being able to be with you, and wish every good wish for your happiness and the success of our Order, I am,

Yours sincerely and fraternally,
E. GUSS PORTER

These and other addresses were suitably acknowledged by the committee on correspondence.

RESOLUTIONS

The following resolutions were introduced and passed unanimously, after being spoken to:

It was resolved that the Right Worshipful Grand Lodge of Ontario East approve of the firm stand taken by the Rt. Hon. David Lloyd George, as Premier of Great Britain and Ireland, in refusing to coerce the Protestant counties of Ulster at the dictation of the Nationalist party of Ireland, and that a cablegram expressing this approval be sent to the Rt. Hon. David Lloyd George.

Moved by Bro. Dr. J. W. Edwards, M.P., seconded by Bro. Charles R. Webster, County Master, South Renfrew,

"That this Right Worshipful Orange Grand Lodge of Ontario East requests the Rt. Hon. Sir Robert Borden, Premier of the Dominion of Canada, to use his influence with the Government of Great Britain and Ireland to prevent any laws being passed during the time of war which would tend to create further dissension, or lead to the oppression of any portion of the population of Ireland."

Wor. Bro. W. F. Garland, P.C.M., of Carleton, presented the following resolution:

"That this Grand Lodge desires to place itself on record in favor of this Order, taking an active part in the Government of this country relative to members who have enlisted in defence of our Empire. So that on their return their interests will be safeguarded in proposition to enlistment and instruct the Legislative Committee to act in conjunction with the Soldiers' Aid Commission or other bodies to obtain best results."

A resolution was adopted congratulating the Provincial Government on the stand it had taken in regard to temperance.

HONORS CONFERRED

Rt. Wor. Bro. Crawford Ross of Ottawa, was made an honorary member of the Grand Lodge, and will be presented with a signet ring, appreciative of his services. He has attended every Grand Lodge meeting in Eastern Ontario, since 1883. He has been a valued member of the Organization Committee for many years, and for 45 years has been a member of the Order. At present he is Secretary of the Public School Board of Ottawa, and a gentleman who is highly respected in the capital city.

SERVICES APPRECIATED

The Committee on Correspondence in reporting on the annual address of P.G.M. Capt. E. H. McLean, referred to the address of embodying many matters of importance effecting the order. They also referred to the personal sacrifice he was making in the interest of the Order, by enlisting. This was a sacrifice all members were grateful of, and it will ever be remembered. For the first time in the history of the Grand Lodge, we had the Grand Master presiding over us clad in khaki; thus representing a true object lesson of the patriotism of our Order. His inspiring example will, we are sure, fill every brother's heart with pride and thankfulness. He faithfully represents the true embodiment of the sentiments of Orangeism.

Thanks to the Mayor and Council for the address of welcome, to the press for reports, and citizens generally, for their hospitality, were unanimously adopted.

WAR LOAN

The Finance Committee was authorized to invest $2,700 of the lodge funds in the Government war bonds.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS

The concluding business of the Grand Lodge was the election of officers for the ensuing year, which resulted as follows:

Grand Master—O. W. Landon, Lansdowne.

Past Grand Masters—Si. M. Bowell, Belleville; Major T. A. Kidd, Burrett's Rapids; Duncan Monroe, Cornwall; Major W. J. Wright, Winnipeg; George Boyce, Merivale; James Berney, Kingston; Fred W. Forde, Ottawa; Capt. Evan H. McLean Bowmanville.

Deputy Grand Master—W. E. Tummon, Crookston.

Junior Deputy Grand Master—Dr. J. W. Edwards, M.P., Cataraqui.

Grand Chaplain—Rev. R. W. Spencer, Camden East.

HAVE ENEMY ON THE RUN

First Stage of Retreat Nearing End Germans Becoming Desperate

LONDON, March 23—Special—The Germans, according to the latest official communications, apparently are ending their retreat along the front in France, and are preparing to give battle everywhere to their oncoming foes. From the south of Arras to the west of St. Quentin along the entire British front, the Germans are stiffening their resistence increasingly.

The London Times' correspondent writes his paper: "It is a wonderful feeling to stand at Chauny or Ham and know that the French and British cavalry out there is still driving the Germans back in the first stage of their retreat. That stage may be nearing the end. It is likely the moment is coming when he will make another desperate stand as he did after the retreat from the Marne, but what will make no difference in the final result.

Offered $5,000 a Week to Appear in Movie Feature

NEW YORK, March 22—An offer of $5,000 week was cabled to Nicholas Romanoff of Russia today by Louis J. Sesnick, movie producer, to come to America and appear in a film called "Behind the Throne."

Selsnick once a penniless Russian exile, is now a millionaire.

NINE MILLION HUNS IN UNITED STATES

WASHINGTON, March 22— There are about nine million persons of German stock in the United States, according to information obtained today form the census bureau of the Department of Commerce.

The 1910 census shows that there were in the United States at that time 8,232,615 persons of German extraction distributed as follows:

Born in Germany, 2,501,182; born in America, of German parentage, 3,911,847; born in American and having one parent born in America and the other in Germany, 1,869,590.

TERROR ON THE HIGH SEAS

Aim of Six German Bomb Plotters on Trial in New York City

NEW YORK, March 22—An alleged admission that money for the establishment of a bomb factory in Hoboken, N.J., was furnished direct from officials of the German Embassy at Washington was disclosed today when trials were begun here of six men charged with having attempted to create a reign of terror on the high seas by destroying vessels sailing from American ports with cargoes for the Entente Allies.

TWENTY U. S. MEN DROWNED

Steamer Healdton, Loaded With Petroleum, Torpedoed Without Warning

WASHINGTON, March 23—Special—American Consul Mahin at Amsterdam cabled the State Department last night that the American steamer Healdton, sunk by a submarine off Terscelling, Holland, was torpedoed without warning and that twenty of the crew were drowned.

The steamer Healdton, of 4,4800 tons, sailed from Chester, Pa., on January 26th for Rotterdam with 2,137,71[illegible] gallons of refined petroleum.

Murderer Visited By His Brother

Pathetic Scene at Meeting in Windsor Jail—Condemned Man From Prominent Family

WINDSOR, March 22—John Hogue, alias James Stewart, condemned to hang on May 10 next, for the murder of Immigration Officer Jackson, was visited in his cell today at Sandwich jail by his brother, Andrew Hogue, a wealthy mining engineer of Charleston, W. Va.

Andrew Hogue is here to make a final effort to save his brother from the gallows.

The meeting was exceedingly pathetic, the brothers seeing each other for the first time in years. To gain admission to the condemned man, Andrew Hogue brought credentials from Governor Cornwall, of West Virginia, and from the Secretary of State. The papers disclose the fact that the Hogues are of a prominent Virginia family.

CHINESE CHARGED WITH CONSPIRACY

A Large Percentage of Them Lived in Berlin and Munich

LONDON, March 22—According to reports received in Amsterdaf from Cologne, says the Exchange Telegraph correspondent in Amsterdam, fifty Chinese residing in Germany and especially in Berlin and Munich, were arrested yesterday charged with conspiracy.

They were preparing to leave Germany with the Chinese legislation.

Most of the Chinese were students.

CLUB TO OUST KAISER

Atlantic Yachtsmen Will Drop Germans From Rolls

NEW YORK, March 22—The Atlantic Yacht Club, after much discussion, has found a way to oust Emperor William of Germany and Prince Henry of Prussia, both of whom have been honorary members for several years. The clubs constitution provides that before a member may be dismissed he must be given an opportunity to defend himself against charges.

OTTAWA, March 23—The War loan subscription lists close today, and although the total will not be available for several days, it is known that $150,000,000 called for has been largely over subscribed.

ICE BREAKS, SOLDIERS DUCKED

KINGSTON, March 22—Thirty members of the R.C.H.A. here while drilling on the ice near Tete du Pont Barracks, fell into the water yesterday when the ice broke under them. For a time there was a wild scramble. Other members of the class and artillerymen from the barracks rushed to their assistance, and with ropes succeeded in bringing all to safety.

DEPOSED RUSSIAN CZAR TAKEN TO ALEXANDROVSKY BY GUARDS

Special to The Intelligencer.

TSARSKOE March 23.—On his arrived here to-day in the custody of four members of the Duma Nicholas Romanoff deposed Emperor was turned over immediately to the Tsarskre Selo commander and taken to Alexandrovsky Palace where former Empress Alexandra was interned. A special train carrying the former ruler arrived at one-thirty.

GERMAN FORCES ARE RESISTING AS BEASTS HELD AT BAY

Special to The Intelligencer.

PARIS, March 23.—Reports from the front show the Germans are offering a most strenuous resistance and enduring heavy losses in efforts to hold the main point on the Lille Laon line. Their energies are particularly directed toward defending approaches to Campral on the right flank, and stopping the dangerous French advance to the left and north of Soissons in the direction of Anizy. Here the French threaten to outflank the German main position at St. Goban. Von Hindenburg is also exerting his greatest strength to prevent the Allies from closing in on St. Quentin and La Fer, but so far without success. There is every indication of most severe fighting in the immediate future.

More Meatless and Potatoeless Days Ahead of British People Food Question Serious

LONDON, March 23—Special—The food question is pressing daily with increasing stringency on the British public, and, according to authoritative reports, a few days will see new and drastic steps on the part of the food Controller, Lord Davenport, to meet the situation and prevent exploitation of the public by traders.

How The Saw Mill Fire Started

Men Were Engaged in Burning a Hole Through a Big Piece of Timber

(Marmora Herald)

The Pearce Company's saw mill was completely destroyed by fire this morning. A gang of men had been busy all winter overhauling the mill and getting it ready for the season's cut. The work was just about completed and the mill was in better shape than for several years. The men were engaged in burning a hole through a big piece of timber, when the fire started. Ordinarily there would be no danger connected with the operation, but the timber was soaked with oil which ignited and the blaze spread with alarming rapidity.

An alarm was sounded, but the fire made such headway there was no possibility of saving the mill. However a couple of lines of hose were quickly attached to the village pump and by means of these the surrounding buildings were saved. The electric light plant had a narrow escape and in saving it the new system of fire protection went a long way towards paying for itself. The loss will probably exceed $25,000 with no insurance. Nearly $2,000 was spent on repairs this winter.

RUSSIANS PUSHING AHEAD

Special to The Intelligencer.

PETROGRAD, March 23—The War Office announces the trenches taken yesterday by Germans on the River Beresina have been re-gained through with the bayonet. Russian troops successive Russian counter attacks pushing west from Kermanshah in Persia have reached a point less than forty miles from the Mesopotamian border. A successions of battles have been proceeding in the vicinity of Kerind, the Turks retreating after making stands at successive points.

TRIES TO KILL MINISTER

Petrograd Plotter Turns Weapon on Self and Commits Suicide

LONDON, March 22—A Reuter despatch from Petrograd says that a cavalry captain tried to gain access to the new minister of justice, A. E. Kerensky, on the pretext that he had a letter to deliver. The attendant's suspicions were aroused; the man was searched and instead of a letter a loaded revolver was found. The revolver was taken from him, whereupon he snatched it back and committed suicide.

CLOSE FIGHTING ON THE SOMME

Special to The Intelligencer.

PARIS, March 23—Official statement.—North of St. Simon the enemy made a violent attack last night on our positions near the village of Artemps. Our troops were thrown back slightly at first, but immediately counter-attacked with vigor and succeeded in driving the enemy as far as Serancourt Le Grand.

There was heavy artillery fighting between the Somme and Oise, south of the Oise further detachments crossed the Ailette. There was intermittant cannonading in the hill region.

North of Soissons we made new progress. It is now learned that the attack made by the enemy against the Vregny Chivres Frony was extremely violent. The Germans hurled an entire regiment at a single point. Two of our companies of chasseurs, momentarily isolated, succeeded after violent fighting in disengaging themselves and returning with prisoners. The losses inflicted on the enemy in the course of these fruitless attacks were very heavy.

Several surprise attacks of the enemy northwest of Rheims, near Maisons de Champagne in Avocourt wood and in the region of Stimhiel, were repulsed by our fire. German pursuit airplane, an albatross, was brought down yesterday in our lines in the region of Vezelese.

NO MATCH FOR THE CANADIANS

Special to The Intelligencer.

CANADIAN HEADQUARTERS IN FRANCE, March 23.—By Stewart Lyon.—German guns which have been returning spasmodic fire to the increasing volume of our fire, suddenly opened up with great vigor Wednesday, showing that retreat had not extended to that part of their line. A railing attack was then made on Canadians, who had successfully raided German lines on the previous night. The Germans sustained heavy losses under heavy fire with which our men received them, and did not penetrate the line anywhere. Prisoners taken recently profess ignorance of any intention to retire. Great events transpiring south of Arras have made more people optimistic and once more the cry is "Christmas in Canada."

KAISER TO TAKE CURE

Special to The Intelligencer.

LONDON, March 23—Private messages reached the Hague that Emperor William is suffering from a severe nervous breakdown. An exchange Telegraph despatch from the Hague, says the Emperor's physicians are said to have ordered him to take the cure at Hambourg.

ARRANGING FOR 100 MERCHANTMEN

LONDON, March 23—Special—The Government has arranged for the construction of 100 standard mercantile ships in three sizes of 18,000, 5,000 and 3,000 tons respectively, according to a statement made in the House of Commons yesterday.

LETTERS FROM OVERSEAS

FROM STANLEY J. PRICE

Brumshott Camp, March 1st.

Dear Mrs. Howatson:—I am writing you a few lines in answer to your letter received with the box, which I was very pleased to receive from you, and to thank you very much for the socks you sent me; they are very nice ones, and fit like a glove. The box was quite a long time reaching me, but everything was in perfect condition. A few special friends and myself enjoyed everything. I was very disappointed when I could not go over with the other boys belonging to the 80th. I am grown now to a staff officer belonging to headquarters. I have just two chargers to take care of, my own, and my officer's. As I had always been with horses before I went to Canada, I feel quite at home. I expect I shall be able to go over to France with him when the 4th Division goes over, which will probable be next month, as I shall be there at the finish I hope. We had a lovely summer here last summer, but we have had a very short winter for this country; the hardest winter known for 25 years, but this last week we have been having some lovely weather, nice and mild, and lots of sunshine. The farmers are working on the land already. Brumshott is situated about 45 miles from London, S.W., between London and Portsmouth. Our camp is on the top of a flat hill. I will try to get some views to send Mrs. Huff. It is an old historical district, where Dick Turpin and Robin Hood used to roam. There is also the old cheating tree at Liphook, two miles from here, where the Village Blacksmith poem was written. So I will be able to tell you lots if I get through all right. We have a large hospital here; I guess it will hold six or seven hundred patients, and four are still encamping it, so we see lots of wounded, some very bad cases too. After a big engagement in France we see nothing but a continuous stream of ambulances with wounded. We had a big bunch in camp from convalescent homes that have recovered from wounds. All of them will be going back with the 5th Division. I get a letter nearly every week from Grace Bedford. I had one on Monday. It was well then; I would like to see him.

Well I must close. Hoping you and all are well as I feel fine myself. I remain,

Yours sincerely,
STANLEY J. PRICE.

BETH GROVES YOUNG, WHO APPEARS IN THE TUNEFUL MUSICAL COMEDY "THE GIRL WHO SMILES" AT GRIFFIN'S TONIGHT.

Music And Drama

"The Girl Who Smiles," which comes to Griffin's to-night, direct from 200 nights at the Longacre Theatre, New York. The original cast will be seen in the production and nothing has been left undone to make "The Girl Who Smiles" a success.

Adolph Phillips, the American representative of Paul Herve and Jean Briquet, author and composer of "The Girl Who Smiles" has just received a letter from Monsieur Briquet, stating that he is recovering from a wound in his left leg, received at the battle of Soissons. Jean Briquet, although the composer of five successful light operettas, has, himself, never witnessed an English presentation of any of his plays. Mr. Briquet is only thirty-four years of age.

DUSTIN FARNUM AT GRIFFIN'S SATURDAY MATINEE AND NIGHT

The many admirers of Dustin Farnum will be pleased to hear that he is to appear at Griffin's Saturday matinee and night, in a splendid five part Lasky photodrama entitled, "The Call of the Sutherlands. Besides this five part offering, the first chapter of "The Shielding Shadow" series will be presented, along with a new and amusing comedy.

ORRIN JOHNSON HERO OF ADVENTURE PLAY

Matinee Idol a Reckless Star in Pictorial "D'Artagnan" of Dumas

For action and excitement the new Ince-Triangle play, "D'Artagnan," is unsurpassed. It will be shown at the Palace Saturday and Saturday matinee and night. The striking young hero, D'Artagnan (Orrin Johnson), gets in hot water right at the start. He's on his way to Paris to become a member of the King's musketeers. De Rochfort, who is employed by the sinister Cardinal Richelieu, laughs at the youth's boasting mount, and D'Artagnan takes it as an insult to himself. The enmity that is aroused in him on account of the loss of a duel to the captain of the musketeers, which he suspects De Rochfort of selling, is kept up more or less openly throughout the rest of the drama.

Accompanied by three staunch friends, all members of the King's musketeers, D'Artagnan begins a hazardous trip to England. Each of the friends is either captured or disabled and D'Artagnan has to depend entirely upon himself.

On the same program with the above offering is a pathe Keystone comedy entitled, "Crooked to the End," starring Fred Mace, will be presented. "The Shielding Shadow" series will be shown at the Palace to-night and at Griffin's Saturday matinee and night.

PEG O' MY HEART AT GRIFFIN'S WEDNESDAY

The attraction at Griffin's Opera House next Wednesday night will be an engagement of J. Hartley's Manners's melodic comedy success, "Peg O' My Heart." The action of the play takes place in Scarborough, England, and has for a central figure a wild, mischievous girl, who has been reared amid poverty in New York, and who, nevertheless, has preserved a flower-like fragrance of nature born to the wildwood.

Loyalty to her father's and mother's county (Ireland), and the memory of an aristocratic mother are the watchwords of her aristocratic nature. The play has an abundance of humorous situations and heart interest. The United Producing Company who are producing the production, has given us a splendid setting and supplied an excellent cast, including Morosca Star, Marion Dentler, who will again be seen in the role of Peg, while others in the cast will be William Sauter, as "Jerry," Vern Dushayne as "Aggie," R. Nelson Dickson as "Mr. Hawkes," Miss Kathrine Sheldon as "Mrs Crichester," Miss Mabel Barring as "Ethel," and Harrison Warner as "Brent."

Alkali In Shampoos Bad For the Hair

If you want to keep your hair looking its best, be careful what you wash it with. Don't use prepared shampoos or anything else, that contains too much alkali. This dries the scalp makes the hair brittle, and ruins it.

The best thing for steady use is just ordinary multified cocoanut oil (which you can get at any drug store), and better than the most expensive soap or anything else you can use.

One of two teaspoonfuls will cleanse the hair and scalp thoroughly. Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, which rinses out easily, removing every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and leaves the scalp soft, and the hair fine and silky, bright, lustrous, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get multified cocoanut oil at any pharmacy, it's very cheap, and a few ounces will supply every member of the family for months.

Had Terrible Pains in Kidneys and Back

Dear Mr. Editor,—I want to write you about "Anuric." I was very sick, could hardly be up; I was in bed most of the time. Had terrible pains in my kidneys and back, so much so that I had to scream sometimes when I was sitting down and wanted to get up, the pain was so great. I had tried a well-known kidney medicine but it didn't help me. I heard about Dr. Pierce's Anuric Tablets so I thought I would try them. I took only one box of the Tablets, and my back is now free from pain and I can work and take care of my family. I feel I cannot say enough for this medicine. Sincerely, Mrs. Wm. Kellar.

Note: This "Anuric" is adapted especially for kidney complaints and diseases arising from disorders of the kidneys and bladder, such as backache, weak back, rheumatism, dropsy, congestion of the kidneys, inflammation of the bladder, scalding urine and urinary trouble. The physicians and specialists at Dr. Pierce's great institution, at Buffalo, N. Y., have thoroughly tested this prescription and have been with one accord successful in eradicating these troubles, and in most cases absolutely curing the diseased kidneys.

Patients having once used "Anuric" at Dr. Pierce's Invalid's Hotel, have repeatedly sent back for more. Such a demand has been created that Dr. Pierce has decided to put "Anuric" in the drug stores of this country, in ready-to-use form. If not obtainable send one dime by mail to Dr. Pierce for trial package or 50 cents for full treatment.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is a blood cleanser and alternative that stirs the liver and stomach into vigorous action. It thus assists the body to make rich, red blood, which feeds the heart, nerves, brain and organs of the body. You feel clean, strong and strenuous.

MADE SUPREME SACRIFICE

Word has reached this week that Pte. Vivian Lemoine, formerly of Frankford, has killed in action. Pte. Lemoine enlisted some years ago with the Hasting Highlanders, went overseas with the 39th Battalion, and was subsequently transferred to the 21st Battalion, in France since November last. His parents live in Colebrooke, Scotland.

POPULAR OFFICER GETS APPOINTMENT

It is reported from London, England, under date of March 16th, that Lt.-Col. M. E. Adams, who went overseas in command of the 155th Battalion, has been appointed Commandant of the Eastern Ontario regimental depot at Shorncliffe, England. This is a well-deserved promotion, as Col. Adams is not only a first class officer and knows his work thoroughly, but is also always most popular with the men under his command.

About time to look up the length, breadth, thickness and extent of the Prussian strategetic retreat.

Military News

The Medical Board of the 254th Battalion left today to inspect the recruits of the battalion at Picton and Wellington.

The 254th Battalion will hold a Patriotic meeting in Shannonville this toorrow evening.

Major D. R. Green of Stirling, who left this city with the 39th Battalion is expected to return home tomorrow when he will be given a royal welcome.

A. O. U. W. GRAND LODGE ELECTS ITS OFFICERS

Winds Up Annual Convention Which Will be Held Biennially

The annual convention of the Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. of Ontario was concluded in Victoria Hall, Toronto, yesterday afternoon, when the following officers were elected for the years 1917-1919: W. C. Mikel, past G. M. W., Belleville; J. Lockie Wilson Grand Master, Toronto; C. F. Drake, Grand Foreman, Ottawa; James Robertson, Grand Overseer, Toronto; F. G. Inwood, Grand Recorder, Toronto; A. G. F. Lawrence, Grand Solicitor, Toronto; Henry Fisher, Grand Guide, Concord; H. E. Wells, G. I. Watchman, Dresden; W. J. Fairbairn, G. O. Watchman, Ottawa; J. M. Cotton, M.D., Grand Medical Examiner, Toronto; Executive Board: J. R. Nixon, Toronto; C. R. Cameron, Iroquois; Robert G. Graham, Gananoque; T. A. Hastings, Toronto; and Judge D. F. McWatt, Sarnia.

It was decided to abolish the office of grand treasurer, which will in future be merged with that of grand recorder. The greater part of the morning session was taken up in drafting the new constitution, when a number of important changes were made. A resolution was adopted approving of the A.O.U.W. Act for 1916, re constructing the certificates, and asking the legislature not to interfere with it. It was also decided that in future the grand lodge convention be held biennially instead of every year as in the past, and the next one will be held in Toronto in March of 1919.

AEROPLANE CAMP NEAR DESERONTO

The Imperial Munitions Board intends to establish at Deseronto an aeroplane motor and training camp which will be practically the exact duplicate of the works at Camp Borden.

Negotiations are now under way for a tract of land known as the flats. Accommodation will be provided for five squadrons of one hundred machines. The contracts will be placed in a few weeks, and the camp will be operated together with Camp Borden flights from one to another being planned.

WALKED A MILE TO SAVE OTHER TRAIN

Presence of Mind of Injured Brakeman at Norwood Wreck

TORONTO, March 22—How Mr. A. G. Benstead, a Toronto tradesman, walked a mile to flag Kemble, eastbound train from the wreck of the westbound Montreal-Toronto flyer at Norwood Tuesday, and although badly bruised and wrenched by his journey, walked a mile up the track to flag another train, which he knew was coming, by reason of his presence of mind and devotion to duty that even to-day is inspiring.

Mr. Benstead was badly cut by flying glass when the car shot down the embankment, and another Toronto man, W. V. T. Bastian, the owner of an contractor, who has offices in the Bank of Toronto building and resides at 99 Dowdale road, has been subjected to constant medical attendance since his return to his home. A third Torontonian, an unknown elderly man, who was on the International a few days ago is also known to have been injured.

"That was my duty," is the simple reply that Brakeman Benstead, an employee of the C.P.R. for the past twenty years, makes on being asked how he managed to get out and flag the oncoming train.

WHY YOU SHOULD USE M.S.C. SHAMPOO

It maintains healthy hair, corrects unnatural scalp conditions, and assists nature in restoring normal beauty conditions, by stimulating and renewing the hair-growing processes.
HEALTHY HAIR NEEDS ATTENTION, and any disorder of the scalp or falling hair will grow worse by neglect.
M. S. C. SHAMPOO contains pure Cocoanut Oil and other hair health ingredients, which by constant use will keep the scalp and hair in perfect condition.
Being in LIQUID form, it is easy to apply: You simply wet the head thoroughly in Hot water, then apply about two tablespoonful, which will instantly work up oceans of lather that will thoroughly cleanse the scalp, and after thorough rinsing will leave the hair beautifully soft.
Buy a bottle from your dealer and follow directions carefully, and you, like thousands of others will be convinced of our claims.

MUST BRING BOYS BACK

Employment Agent Sent Youngsters to Farm

TORONTO, March 22—For contributing to the delinquency of two boys under 14 years of age, by sending them to work on his farm, William Britt, and costs in the Juvenile Court by and costs in the Juvenile Court by Commissioner Starr, Britt was also ordered to bring the boys back to Toronto at his own expense. Truant Officer Carlisle of the Morality Department laid the information against Britt.

The many admirers The many dim "We can do double your teacher so, William" asked his mother, "I don't exactly dislike her mother," replied Willie, "but it's perfectly plain to me she's never got married."

Bimbler—The fact is I married because I was bored with single life as for any other reason. I married for sympathy. Boyle—Well, you have mine.

SENATOR CORBY

Cables from Honolulu, state that the Hon. Henry Corby who had had an operation some little time ago, and who was reported as progressing satisfactory towards recovery, has had, all will regret to learn, to undergo a second operation, it is said for appendicitis. He has the prayer of his numerous friends for a speedy recovery.

POTATOES

When the Minister of Agriculture for Canada made investigations which showed that we had a surplus of two million bushels in Canada, a newspaper friendly to the Government said that the high prices were due to "apathy at Ottawa." What would this newspaper cry out have the Government do? He does not suggest any action. He merely complains, and places the blame upon apathy at Ottawa.

Other critics have called for an embargo on potatoes shipped to the United States. The answer to that is that the embargo is a thing that two can play with. We might place an embargo on potatoes going to the United States in the same way that the United States may place an embargo on coal coming into Canada. One might very easily be the result of the other in which event the Central provinces of Canada would have double cause to complain because the potatoes surplus and the coal deposits are at the eastern and western ends of Canada.

A more reasonable critic would place the difficulty in lack of transportation facilities which would carry the products of the east and west more freely to the centre. But that cannot be due to apathy at Ottawa because the same difficulty exists everywhere, particularly in the United States.

The writer of an article in the Issue of March 10th of the Saturday Evening Post on "Cabbages as a Luxury," says:—

"Goods shipped from the west months ago are standing on sidewalks at way stations while trainloads of more pressing nature, pass, day after day."

Or March 9th the New York Herald commences an editorial on the food situation with this sentence:

"There never has been a famine of foodstuffs in this country but always has been a lack of adequate distributing agencies that frequently has resulted in what approached famine prices."

That is in the United States outside the area of "apathy at Ottawa."

But a Government can do anything in war time and why not then fix a maximum price on potatoes? That is the next, and only other suggestion the critic could make. But why should the Government do this? It has been done in the case of paper, a commodity controlled by a few which the many need. Nothing else can take its place. But every man can grow potatoes, and the Government is calling upon the people to do so. "High prices furnish a better argument and incentive than all the appeals the Government can make. We cannot recall that any one seriously suggested a fixed rate of a dollar a bushel when farmers were losing money by selling potatoes at forty cents.

In the meantime the inquiring and unthinking and, therefore, uninformed criticism of a friendly newspaper is gleefully going the rounds of liberal papers glad to circulate any sort of criticism against the Government no matter how unthinking and uninformed and gladder still because it comes from a Conservative newspaper.

NATIONAL PROHIBITION

The activity of certain gentlemen who are advocating national prohibition indicates their view that it would injure the Federal Government if they passed such legislation. They probably have in mind the reverses sustained by the Conservatives in several provinces because of their espousal of Prohibition and they think similar results can be induced to pass a federal law. We venture no opinion as to this but we desire to point out that legislation was passed last year by the Federal Government which, if accepted, will give probably all the Prohibition the people will stand. Under this statute any province which legislates against the possession and use of intoxicating liquors within the province brings automatically into effect this federal law which penalizes anyone who sends liquor into the province, but no province has yet availed itself of these provisions. A convention is now gathering to ask the Federal Government for further legislation. Let them make use of the law already at hand before reaching for more. Why ask that the whole dominion be covered by a prohibitive law which the most advanced province—speaking from a temperance standpoint—has not got.

CANADIAN FINANCING

Presiding at the annual meeting of the Bank of British North America in London recently, Mr. E. A. Hoare, one of the directors, said that

"the financial history of the war will contain nothing more astonishing than the part played by Canada."

Mr. Hoare went on to say that Sir Thomas White "had shown extreme sagacity in the manner of his borrowing." It was a tribute which no one who has followed the Dominion's financial record in this struggle will deny. Conversion of Canada from a country that was borrowing abroad before the war at the rate of a million dollars a day into a country financing its own war expenditure to the extent of more than a million a day, and loaning Britain money besides, is an achievement not least among the Empire's notable accomplishments in this war. It reflects credit alike upon the people of Canada and their leaders.

The Poet's Corner

THE MOTHER OF A BOY

(Baltimore Sun.)

I didn't raise my boy to be a coward;
I want my boy to go if there is war.
I want to stand and watch him proudly marching,
I want to gaze upon him from the door.
I do not want to lose him or to keep him,
I only long and long to have him be
A man whenever his country comes to sweep him
Into her surging legions of the free.

I do not want my boy to be a craven;
I love him, and I'd hate to see him go;
And yet I'd rather lose him, sadly lose him
Than have him hide in fear to face the foe.
I've prayed with all the spirit of a woman
For peace, and that our struggle might not come;
But if it does, I want him brave and human,
My boy must march away with flag and drum.
I'd give him, yes, a thousand times I'd give him,
With all he means to me of love and joy;
Because I would not love him if he
My ideal of a woman's kind of boy,
Or not harbor hate or yearn for vengeance,
I would not crush a violet with my hand—
But if it comes to fighting, then I want him
To be a man, and struggle for his land.

I want my boy to go if we must enter
This mad world conflict raging in its might;
With all it means to me to have him leave me,
I'd rather have his country help him fight.

Current Comment

While Mr. Dewart was speaking in Kingston on Nickel the lights said to themselves "We've had about enough of this," and then went out.

For some unexplained reason the Ontario Opposition has failed to round the number of lead-pencils used by the Lieutenant-Governor. Somebody has been remiss.

Construction immediately at the New York navy yards of sixty submarine chasers, deliveries to begin in from sixty to eighty days has been ordered by Secretary Daniels. The Yankee SAUCE touch.

King Constantine, the "slim" craven, must be made to feel that whatever advantages, services in Greece in the coming national clearing-house settlement, is to be recognized in history as the reward of the work of Venizelos and his patriots, and not of his kingcraft or his disingenuousness. Toronto Globe.

The Liberals are exceedingly active at the present time, particularly in Quebec, where word has gone around there will be an election in June. There is not the slightest doubt the Liberals intend to oppose an extension of Parliament and force an election. A red hot session is looked for when Parliament reassembles.

"The Borden Government is the tool of the trusts," shriek the Liberal press from day to day. Yet the Borden Government has just had occasion to compel the Paper Trust to reduce its price of newsprint to two and a half cents to these very newspapers. Of all the manufactured nonsense that has been recklessly used by the Liberal party to discredit the Borden Government, "trust" is the most ridiculous.

Cherub Devine

By SEWELL FORD

Copyright, 1909, by the McClure Publications.

"If Bobby got his lack of knowledge of the geography of the grounds, the duck pond proposition was not to be caught easy. He had designs on one of the garden paths. So the placid meditations of Mr. Hewington, who was in the garden, were interrupted by the noise of rapidly-approaching footsteps. The next moment he had a glimpse of an individual in a frock coat who was sprinting toward him at top speed.

Involuntarily Mr. Hewington raised his arms and stepped directly into the middle of the path. That was quite sufficient. The runner dug his heels into the gravel, checked his flight long enough for one startled look and promptly dashed into a clump of golden glow, reappearing to the view of Timmins a second later headed toward the house. Evidently the man was bewildered or else he had not lost sight entirely of observe the by no means inconspicuous figure of Mr. Timmins looming large in the garden door.

"Stop 'im, Maggie! Stop 'im!" shouted Timmins, abandoning all secrecy now.

Mrs. Timmins was not one to wait for explanations at such a time. Timmins wanted somebody stopped, and stopped he should be. With surprising agility she got her long skirts well in motion and moved impetuously and at right angles upon the refugee. As she did this Timmins dragged the calf and followed by Mr. Hewington, closed in on the other side. The odds beside was tired of the game or else he was winded, for he no longer bounded merrily upon his wabbly legs, but ahead, now just behind Timmins. He stuck his forehead straight out and sawed balkily at the lead rope.

This left a gap of some ten yards in the line of advance, and through it the hunted man bolted heavily, the tails of his frock coat fluttering and his coattails as he spurted toward freedom. The astute Eppings was just in time to view the chance with one nimble and staring eye.

"Ha, after 'im, you blooming chumps!" screeched the disgusted Timmins. "Why don't you lyke after 'im?"

Then exporting the butler did break into a stiff trot, which was patently unexciting that Timmins might have laughed had the occasion been less serious. It was, he saw, going to prove a circumvention or disapproval, there the calf's lead rope to Mr. Hewington, with the command, "There, you 'old 'im, governor," and darted after his prisoner.

So you wonder, then, at the amazement of the Countess Vecchi when into the view of the sunny front bowling this animated procession—first, a man who plainly had in his right hand and planting as he ran; next, Timmins, his elbows close to his sides and his feet thrust out in approved Marathon style; third, Mrs. Timmins, very red of face and her ample skirts billowing up and down like a stormy sea, but getting over the ground quite rapidly; fourth, Eppings, his solemn eyes almost popping out of his head, and at the rear Mr. Hewington, waving to urge the reluctant calf into a livelier gait?

The race between Timmins and his elusive prisoner was progressing very swiftly. They were keeping to the main driveway now, and the smooth surface soon offered fine footing. At once there came to the ears of all concerned a sharp, superior-book-book of an automobile horn.

The bolt instant a big red car whirled on through the gates and at sight of the astounding procession in the roadway was brought to a sudden stop. From the back seat of the touring car stepped forth Cherub Devine. It was the most dramatic and opportune entrance he had ever made in all his career.

The panting fugitive halted, stared apprehensively at the Cherub, then cast a hurried look over his shoulder at Timmins. Quickly he made his choice. Turning like a flash, he dodged Timmins neatly. Another moment and he had circled around the Cherub Timmins.

Perhaps he would have been doubling and dodging yet had there not occurred a diversion. The calf in its excitement had begun running in a circle and had wound Mr. Hewington up with the rope so that he could more neither run nor dodge. Mr. Hewington was loudly calling for Eppings.

Just then, however, it was Eppings' turn to try stopping the prisoner. He was already dashing from one side of the road to the other in order to confuse the enemy when his eye caught Mrs. Cris for assistance distracted his attention from the game. Years of training showed through. Eppings abandoned his post and started for his master. A yell of rage from Timmins reached his ears. Eppings saw the fugitive about to speed past him. For a second he hesitated. Then, unlike being his long legs and throwing discretion to the winds, he leaped in a self-bradleog across the road, wrapped his long arms midway about the frock coat, and said a word of which the captor and captive came desperately to earth.

As such things go it was rather a stirring finish for it was all over "All right, Eppings, as I were say made," declared the Cherub. "Eppings, you're a winner. Tell how did it all happen? How did he get out?"

The Countess Vecchi, who, with the help of Mrs. Timmins, had separated Mr. Hewington from the calf, came up just in time to hear this question asked.

"I think I can best answer Mr. Devine," said she, with just a suspicion of sarcasm in her tone. "It was I who released Mr. Hewington from the house. Timmins, will you please step aside?"

"But, miss, 'e's such a—"

"Timmins!" reproved the countess.

"You may go let him go, do you countess?" queried the Cherub.

"I do."

"Then scoot," said Cherub Devine pointed a chubby thumb over his shoulder.

"Thanks," said the ex-prisoner, and, with a faint grimace in the very direction of the baffled Timmins, he started off.

Not until he had disappeared around the first curve of the driveway was a word spoken. Then Cherub Devine, who had been regarding the averted face of the countess with a whimsical look in his blue eyes, broke the spell.

"Countess," said he, "I wonder why we had him shut up in—"

"I understand perfectly," said the countess. "He told me all about it himself."

"Oh, then you had a talk with him, eh?"

"Did." The countess met his gaze steadily at him, and she pensed on it to invite criticism of her action.

The Cherub shrugged his shoulders. He was beginning to realize that something more than the mere escape of Mr. Hewington had occurred.

Could there have been a reconciliation? The Cherub could not credit that.

If I expect he didn't tell you, though, I just as well say I understand. What did he?" and Mr. Devine favored the countess with one of his most insinuating bonus winks of his by which he was wont to express mirthful audacity.

"He made everything quite clear, Mr. Devine," said the countess, with significant emphasis. "And, while I can hardly approve of your motives, I can wish you every success in your new enterprise. Only please do not use Gus Jackson as a prison again," and she walked away.

"Whew! Now I ought to be good, I guess!" exclaimed the bewildered Cherub.

It can be guessed about the little group of mystified persons he saw Mr. Hewington, still somewhat dazed and a good deal rumpled as to appearance from his recent experience with the calf. The Cherub led Mr. Hewington over the driveway toward the waiting car and observed casually.

"Well, our errand is loose again."

"Our count, sir! Why, what do you mean?"

"Now, see here, Hewington, don't you go to being mysterious. I'm trying to enough as it is. You saw Count Vecchi walk off just now, didn't you?"

"Count Vecchi! Where? When?"

"Oh, come!" said the Cherub. "Can you help chase him all over the lot?"

"Why, sir, that person was not Count Vecchi."

"Wha-a-at! Say, let's have that again, will you? What is the count, did you say?"

"Most certainly not, sir. I will admit that at first I supposed it was the count, but no sooner had he been capitated than I perceived that some one had made a most unusual mistake."

"But he said he was the count—told me so himself. Satisfied the Countess Vecchi that he was the count."

"My dear Mr. Devine," and Mr. Hewington assumed his most dignified attitude, "I have known the count well enough to recognize the man who—"

"There, there! I'll take your word for it. You say he isn't the count, do you?"

"Positively, sir, he is not the count."

"Then who the devil is he?" exploded the Cherub.

"That, sir, is a matter in which I am not deeply interested."

"Well, I'll be hanged!" was the Cherub's only comment as he watched Mr. Hewington walk stiffly away.

CHAPTER XIV.

IT was nearly 8 o'clock when the Cherub was finally able to get into boots and 9-before he had finished breakfast.

He had just ordered his second demitasse when he heard his name being paged" through the house and Cherub, giving up a forebrewer to admit his identity, he was handed a telegram of four sheets with toll charges marked "collect." The ever ready McQuade had lived up to his reputation. In one day he had ascertained all that was to be learned of the history of Count Luigi Salvatore y Vecchi.

On pages 1 was recorded the facts concerning the birth, parentage and early childhood of the count. Page 2 took him on to youth, when he began to have escapades which had become matters of public record. Page 3 was largely devoted to accounts of his rumored engagements and brief mention was made concerning a love in which he had been concerned. It was while hastily skimming the last sheet that Mr. Devine was moved to exclaim, with explosive eagerness, "Ah, ha!" Mr. McQuade's report closed in this manner:

Count Vecchi entered sanitarium in Loops, Switzerland, Aug. 15, 10—. Died there Nov. 23, same year. Funeral private. Handled by undertaking firm of—

Nearly two years ago," commented the Cherub, "I believe he's good and dead by this time. But why shouldn't the Hewingtons have title?"

Full of speculations were interrupted by the announcement that a person by the name of Mr. Blinks was there at the desk asking to communicate with Mr. Devine. He mentioned that he was connected with some agency or other.

"Oh, Blinks, a bristly haired man with an undershot jaw and narrow eyes," plotted apologetically in among the tables.

"Excuse me," he whispered hoarsely, "but I thought I'd interest you. He was walking out as cool as you like, too, when we nabbed him."

"The deuce he was! But what have you done with him?"

"Put what was bothering us, sir. Generally we has papers and takes 'em to the nearest station house. But in this case, I says to the clerk, 'Clerk,' says I, 'this is the peculiarest'—"

"Yes, yes! But where is he now?"

"Outside, sir, 'cuffed to Mr. Coogan, sir. Thought you'd like to interview him before we took him up."

"Cuffed to Mr. Coogan! Why, you—you—you—" Words failed the Cherub. "But where's your man now?"

"Outside, sir, 'cuffed to Mr. Coogan, sir. Thought you'd like to interview him before we took him up."

"And there ain't no charge?"

"None at all, Mr. Blinks. All I want is his company for a few minutes."

"Well, I'm jiggered, I am!"

The bogus count seemed rather meek and subdued. His clothes were wrinkled and dusty, his shirt bosom rumpled, and he was in need of a shave. With some hesitation he slid into the chair opposite Mr. Devine.

"Whatever your little game was, it's queered," said Mr. Devine. "You fooled me at night, but of course you couldn't fool Mr. Hewington or the countess. What was the idea, anyway?"

"I was just loking. I'm going to make you smart for your share in this, Mr. Cherub Devine."

"Of course you are. That's only natural. You'll bring suit for damages and all that sort of thing, and I'll have to have my attorney in charge of attempted blackmail, and between us we'll keep the courts busy for a year. I have that all figured out. But what do you say to a good dinner first?"

An involuntary rolling of the eyes toward the menu card betrayed the fact that the suggestion was a pleasing one.

"How would a nice thick sirloin, with mushrooms and baked potatoes, strike you? And a few trifles to help start on, eh? Good! Here, waiter!"

Suddenly, however, Mr. Devine asked abruptly:

"Well, got me all sized up? Then let's get down to facts. Which one was your real boss side name, anyway?"

The man flushed a little.

"Suppose"—and a pair of piercing dark eyes watched for the effect shrewdly—"suppose I came on from Count Vecchi as his personal representative."

"Won't do," interrupted Mr. Devine, "unless you can show your pass from the 'old boy.' You see, I haven't just how long the count's been dead."

"If you had taken the trouble to ask Mr. Hewington he would have told you how visitation you were."

"Yes, but I've better posted than Mr. Hewington. There are the latest returns," and the Cherub tossed over the last sheet of McQuade messages.

Seeing that further pretense along that line was useless, the enemy shrugged his shoulders indifferently.

"I might have known you would find out. But what of it?"

"Why, not much," answered the Cherub slowly, "only—only this: Some one's been holding up the old gentleman for remittances ever since the count died, using the count's name. Of course I'm not sure who that somebody was, but the arrow points to you. Now what is, eh?"

The man across the table began to fidget. His air of nonchalance vanished. He fumbled nervously with the table silver. Inside of two minutes he had broken his three cigarettes and was making a full confession, to which Cherub Devine listened with placid satisfaction and indulged now and of encouragement.

The interview ended amicably. By the time it was over the ex-prisoner had recovered his composure and developed an appetite for sirloin steak; also he had accepted Mr. Devine's offer to become his guest for the night.

And early next morning there arrived at Hewington Acres cook more cheerfully audacious than Cherub Devine, who seemed quite unaffected by the forbidding austerity with which Eppings chose to regard him as he inquired for the contents.

After some moments during which he faced up and down the receptive hall, Mr. Devine was shown into the library with as much formality as if this was his first visit. Nor was the attitude of Mr. Hewington as he received the Cherub at all reassuring.

"I've been looking up that count of yours," remarked the Cherub. "He's been dead for nearly two years. I had a man investigate the records, and it's all O. K."

"Impossible, Mr. Devine! Why—why I have been in communication with him."

"That was your mistake. You've been in communication with a smooth young chap who couldn't resist the chance to play a new bunko game for all it was worth. How were the letters signed which came from the count after he was sent to that sanitarium?"

"By my secretary, I believe. Prof. G. That was it."

"Sure! And the G. C. stood for Francois Gaston. I've had a hunch in my heart talk with Francois and got his whole story. As you might guess by his name, he's half French and half Italian, which is not a bad combination. There was good blood on both sides, but no money on either, so that's why he didn't finish the medical course that he came over here to take. When his funds ran out he rose back to Italy, drifts up into Switzerland and gets a job as assistant physician in this sanitarium where they were trying to cure Count Vecchi of seeing pink whiskered tadpoles and other variegated fauna."

"Really, Mr. Devine!" protested Mr. Hewington.

"Why shy so at the facts?" asked the Cherub. "Count or no count, that was his complaint. Why, his nerves were in such shape he couldn't even sign his name to a letter. And that's where young Dr. Candito was let in. While the count's remittance from you was overdue he dictates a letter to Francois. He gets him to cash your check, too, and Francois learns the whole story about the runaway count and her rich father. Then the count dies. A delayed check comes in, and the doctor is tempted to see that the money isn't wasted; also he observes that the passing of the count is kept quiet. It occurs to him that you hadn't been notified of the sad event. That being the case, he sees no reason why the remittances shouldn't continue, so he keeps you posted on the count when they're alive, and then he's all set."

"Why, the scoundrel!" exclaimed Mr. Hewington. "I've been swindled! I shall write to him at once and"—

"No need to write. He's over here. He's coming to call on you this afternoon."

"The impudent rascal! Why, I—I shall have him apprehended!"

"I hope not," said the Cherub mildly. "That would complicate things. We didn't treat him very well the last time he was here."

"The last time!" echoed Mr. Hewington.

"Yes. He was the chap we had shut up in the icehouse, you know. He was scrooching around to see what style you lived in before he played his cards."

"The unprincipled wretch!"

"He isn't as honest as he might be, you know, considering his race," came in against him."

"I shall refuse to hear a word from him, sir!" declared Mr. Hewington.

"Now, that's too bad. He's coming to refund the money and square you out of. You see, I've taken him on my private staff and advanced him six months' pay so he could start square. Isn't that better than getting into a legal mess with the law eh?"

"But I fail to understand, Mr. Devine. What is your motive in doing this?"

"It has something to do with the countess," he confessed.

"The countess! Pray, Mr. Devine, kindly leave my daughter out of this discussion."

"Not much!" declared the Cherub. "Say, you might just as well get used to it now as later. I think a whole lot of your daughter, Mr. Hewington."

"Indeed, sir!" Hewington was confounding. I trust they you are not so presumptuous as to suppose that your daughter regard is in the least returned?"

"I must just describes the case, Mr. Hewington. At least I did have some such idea until this fool Francois mixed things up for me. Do you know what he told the countess?"

"I am not interested, sir."

"Maybe not, but I want you to listen. Just the same, and I want you to let him tell the countess. It's up to you now."

Why, see here, she thinks I locked that chap up because I was interested in his wife. Says he didn't seem to tell any other reason. That he was posing as the count, and she couldn't see him, and if he came he'd slipped out. Nice position to put me in, wasn't it?"

"Why, Mr. Devine, I—I—" declared Mr. Hewington. "I've been swindled! I shall write to him at once and"—

HOW TO KEEP WELL

IF THE DIAPER is fastened to the band or shirt do not pull it up too tight. It is useful to use a small cloth inside the diaper to protect the latter against soiling from the bowel movements. These cloths should be burned. Soft, clean, old cotton may be used for this purpose. The diapers should be washed when they become wet. It is not sufficient that they be dried and re-used. Wash them every time. Do not use rubber diapers or protectors. They keep in all the moisture, which is bad for the baby's skin.

The Short Clothes.

The baby often goes into short clothes as early in life that the same shirts, band, and nightgowns can be used. In this case petticoats and white dresses are the only new garments needed.

Flannel Petticoat

The flannel petticoat may be the gertrude cut short or a flannel skirt made on a thin muslin waist. Be careful that buttons and pins do not hurt the baby.

Creeping and Walking Clothes.

These comprise—

Bands	Garters
Shirts	Drawers
Underdrawers	Rompers
Waists	Dresses

Flannels.

If now flannels have been provided for the short clothes set, they may last through the next period. Knitted underdrawers may be worn, especially in winter. Rompers are useful. One pattern with bottoms at the bottom as well as at the waist line, allows of changing the diaper without removing the rompers.

Shoes.

As soon as the baby begins to walk no should wear a soft leather shoe or moccasin which allows plenty of room for his toes. Don't have them with stiff, slippery soles, and take care of any kind of shoes the baby sleeps.

Stockings.

The baby in long clothes does not need stockings except when he lies on the bed to play. The first stockings should be of cotton and wool. Too thick stockings cause the feet to perspire. They should be kept warm.

Underwaists.

In choosing underwaists care should be taken that there is no pull on the top of the shoulders forcing them forward. The weight of the waist, etc, should come at the back and close to the neck so as to help keep the body upright.

Bounets.

The baby does not need a bonnet for sleeping outdoors except in cold weather. Don't have it so thick as to make the head perspire and avoid elaborate silk-trimmed bonnets unless when you wheel him out to show off his fine clothes.

HABITS AND TRAINING.

Regularity.

Train the baby in regular habits and he will soon become easy to manage.

Going Out.

In warm weather a normal healthy baby will be better out of doors after he is a few days old. No baby should be put out of doors when the temperature is below 20 degrees above zero, or if the weather is not clear when the temperature is below freezing. On windy dusty days he is better indoors.

Sleeping Out.

For sleeping out, the same rules should be followed. A baby should not sleep out of doors in the winter. When sleeping out of doors there should be a hood to the basket or carriage to protect him against wind and strong sun.

Wheeling and Rocking.

The baby does not need to be wheeled or rocked. He is just as well left to sleep quietly in his bed out of doors. Wheeling and rocking make him demand attention. When he gets a bit older he may be taken out in his carriage by nurse or mother and shown off to an admiring public.

Sleeping Bags.

A good sleeping bag can easily be made by the mother out of a clean old woollen blanket.

A MODERN PYGMALION

By BARBARA PHIPPS

Trimmingham got into the work of writing for the screen by becoming infatuated with moving pictures of Miss Jennnette Meadowcroft, the heroine of various plays. He followed her—or, rather, her photographs—about, attending every production, all the while sinking deeper and deeper into a love entanglement.

Pygmalion fell in love with a statue which he himself created and which the goddess Venus endowed with life. Trimmingham fell in love with pictures of a living being.

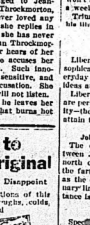
Jeannette Meadowcroft's specialty was virtuosity. She could personate a child of nature to perfection. Endowed with the gift of poetry of motion, her smile marvelously winning, her face a mirror of her emotions, she seemed elfish rather than heroic.

Trimmingham had written fiction, but had never created a character that he dared even to think a real being. It occurred to him that if he were to write a picture play for Jeannette Meadowcroft he would be inspired. He fancied that he possessed just the faculties calculated to depict her personality and her gifts. He determined to undertake the work.

He had no acquaintance with the real Jeannette. He had never seen her. Before sitting down to construct the play he considered whether he had better come in contact with her or leave his impressions as they were—from her pictures. After much thought he decided to defer meeting her until after his play had been finished.

He chose a plan with very little plot for fearing that a plot would circumscribe him in inventing situations that would best illustrate her peculiar capabilities. He decided to have her personate a girl in that sphere of life from which he chose her associates.

She was a born coquette, but perfectly innocent. A number of young men were in love with her, but she loved none of them. Nevertheless through coquetry she tried to love one man and consented to become engaged to him. The effort lasted a week, at the end of which she found she could get up no feeling for him that should be called love, and since such a union was impulsive to her she broke the engagement. Since it was so brief and without love on her part and she preferred to be able to tell the man she eventually married that she had never loved before she asked her discarded lover to keep their trial engagement a secret. To this he consented.



Then comes a man Jeannette really loves. Trimmingham tries hard to form in his mind's eye a picture of another man than himself, but finds it impossible. Once engaged to Jeannette, his leading man, Throckmorton, tells her that he has never loved any other woman. To this she replies in a half hearted way that she has never loved any other man than Throckmorton. Throckmorton later hears of her former engagement. He accuses her of having deceived him. Small conscience as hers is highly sensitive, and she is crushed at the accusation. She tries to explain, but he will not listen.

Going away from her, he leaves her a prey to a conscience that burns but

TO CORRESPONDENTS

The Intelligencer is constantly receiving news items from parties throughout the district who fail to attach their names to the manuscript. While items of interest, from all sections of the county are solicited, The Intelligencer positively declines to publish news that does not bear the name of the writer—not necessarily for publication, but that articles may be received in good faith.—The Editor.

WALLBRIDGE.

Our pulpit was occupied on Sunday by Mr. Pope of Albert College, who gave a discourse on thought as the motive power of life.

A number of new autos are reported ordered in this locality for the coming season.

The hum of the circular saw is heard in our midst.

Mr. Jno. Phillips has returned home from Toronto where he has spent the winter.

Mr. Jas. Sine has moved into our neighborhood on the farm, which he purchased from J. E. Ketcheson.

We regret to hear of the death of Harry Price, who was killed in action while doing his duty in defence of his country.

Our Ladies' Aid and Red Cross meeting was held at the home of Mrs. John Hinchcliffe last Wednesday. Some spent the time knitting while others were quilting. We are all working and trying to do our "bit."

Miss Clara Sine is spending the week with friends in Verona.

4TH CONCESSION SIDNEY

March 23—Regular service was held in our church on Sunday evening by Mr. Page of Albert College.

Mrs. W. Phillips and daughter Maud have returned home after spending a couple of months with relatives at Gallingerton, Ont.

Miss Evelyn Phillips of Madoc is visiting her uncle, Mr. W. Holmes.

The "Drama" which was held at Foxboro in the Methodist Church Sunday School room on March 15th by the Pleasant View Knitting Circle in aid of the Red Cross Fund was well attended. A splendid programme was rendered by the 254th Band in attendance. The proceeds of this evening was $65.00.

MASSASAGA.

Two little girls, Gladys and Hazel Collins, aged seven and nine years, made a pair of pillow shams, for which they got twelve dollars for the Red Cross. Mrs. James Howatson held the lucky number. The Massasaga Red Cross on Monday shipped overseas, through Miss M. B. Falkner, eighty pairs of hand knit socks.

Asa Broad is suffering from a severe attack of pneumonia.

Jim Broad is confined to the house with a heavy cold. Mr. and Mrs. B. Tripp visited Tuesday at the home of Jay Anderson.

The W.M.S. met at the home of Mrs. W. Osborne. A goodly number were present.

A number from the Massasaga Red Cross visited the work room of Miss M. B. Falkner, of West Bridge Street, Belleville, and had a very pleasant as well as instructive afternoon.

Frohman's Little Safe.

When Charles Frohman was treasurer with Haverly's minstrels he conceived a novel stunt of amassing coin only in small towns. He bought a small iron safe, about three feet high and on it had painted in big letters, "Treasurer, Haverly's Mastodon Minstrels." Now actually there was little need for this safe, but it was always carried on the first load of baggage that went to a hotel. It would be placed in a conspicuous place, and then Frohman, waiting until the proper moment, would insist up to it with an air of great importance, open it, put in two or three $100 bills, close it and go away. When the crowd had gone he would slip back and get the money out again. It proved a good advertising stunt.—Charles Frohman, Manager and Man."

Many a Doctor's Bill will be Saved by Wearing Rubbers this Spring

SPRINGTIME in Canada means wet feet to all who try to get around without rubbers—and to most people wet feet mean colds, coughs or more serious sickness, besides the damage to shoes that cost so much these days. This last item alone will more than pay for the rubbers, while the protection from sickness and doctors' bills is many times what they cost.

AS in the case of everything else, when you buy rubbers it pays to buy them right. Our Trade Marks illustrated here are recognized the Dominion over as a sure guide to rubbers of highest quality and longest service. Look on the sole for one of these Brands:

BELLEVILLE BOY HONORED

The numerous friends of Sergt. L. M. Frederick in Belleville, also in Ameliasburg, where he was born, will be pleased to learn that his name has been forwarded to the Secretary of State for War, in recognition of valuable services rendered in connection with overseas action. Sergt. Frederick is a son of Mr. and Mrs. B. O. Frederick of this city, and a brother of Mr. C. I. Frederick, Assistant Principle of Queen Mary School. He enlisted at Swift Current, Sask., in the 9th C.M.R., in June, 1915.

IMPORTANT LEGISLATION

Ontario Government Advances Money For Farm Loans

The Ontario Government is to place its Treasury at the disposal of the rural municipalities of the province to enable them to finance farm loans for the extention of the agricultural industry. The necessary legislation has been brought down in the House by Hon. I. B. Lucas.

The bill, although of far-reaching consequences, is comparatively simple in form. It practically adopts the system used in connection with municipal drainage loans. The municipality will accept responsibility for the sum and character of the loan and the nature of the security for it. The money will come out of the Provincial Treasury, the Government taking in return for each amount paid out a covering debenture of the municipality.

The Attorney-General explained to the House that the intent of the legislation was to have the loans apply only to permanent farm improvements, the definition of matters under this heading being covered by regulation. It was not, he said, intended to make loans for purposes of a temporary character.

No limitation is placed in the bill upon the amount the Government will make available for loans, owing to the lack of any data upon which to base an estimate of the probable demands of farmers for financial assistance.

A. McKIM LIMITED ADVERTISING AGENCY NEW EXECUTIVE

The new Executive of A. McKim, Limited, Advertising Agency of Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg and London, Engr., has been announced.

During the last few years, the late Mr. Ansom McKim had gathered around him an executive staff capable of relieving him of all but a general oversight of the rapidly growing business of the advertising agency which he founded nearly thirty years ago, and which now comprises four offices in different cities and over 140 employees.

Since his death, these experienced men have been carrying on the work in the same efficient way that has characterized "McKim's" for so many years. The personnel of the executive as now organized, is: J. N. McKim, President and Treasurer; Mrs. Anson McKim, Vice-President; W. B. Somerset, General Manager; H. E. Stephenson, Secretary; C. T. Pearce, Manager at Toronto; Thos. Bell, Manager at Winnipeg; W. Keeble, Manager at London, Eng.

B ONDIN MAY RAISE UNIT IN SIXTY DAYS

Postmaster-General to Raise Battalion at Montreal and Three Rivers

The news that Mr. Blondin had tendered his resignation of his place in the Cabinet, has been exhibited to Sir Robert Borden by Sir George Foster, the Acting Premier. It is suggested that Mr. Blondin's resignation may be accepted, but that an arrangement may be made whereby, until his period of active service is completed, his duties of Postmaster-General will be performed by one of his colleagues in the Cabinet. Final action in this regard will however not be taken until the Prime Minister is heard from.

Hon. P. E. Blondin will at once make preparations for handing over the administration of the Post Office Department to the acting Minister. He has since the war began taken much interest in the progress of recruiting for overseas service, has addressed a number of recruiting meetings, and has for more than a year been contemplating joining the army. He has now definitely decided to become a member of the expeditionary force and will, it is stated, accept the task of raising a battalion with recruiting headquarters at Montreal and Three Rivers. He has already received applications from a number of men who are anxious to serve in his battalion either as officers or in the ranks. It is predicted that he will be able to complete the establishment of the unit in sixty days.

Soldiers On Active Service

Say Belleville Ladies are Helping Them Most Generously

With the desire to help and inspire with confidence those who have doubt as to the ability and trustworthiness of Belleville Ladies engaged in the work of supplying our soldiers at the front with articles which contribute to their comfort and efficiency. I wish to state that in every case in which our Ladies have undertaken to render needful assistance in connection with the defence of the Empire they have been most successful, and the value of the good results of their labors of love can not be computed in dollars and cents. The hearts of hundreds of our boys at the front have been made glad and their spirits have been uplifted with renewed and stronger courage to stand firm against our enemies by the overpresent assurance that the Belleville ladies were mindful of them and were doing all in their power to lessen their discomforts. In work of this kind our ladies are sincere and know exactly what to do. As proof of this statement I shall submit one of many personal experiences. I handed to Miss Kate Lazier a small sum to help the boys at the front to give to Miss M. B. Falkiner, 62 West Bridge St. Since I have received several letters of thanks from the soldiers on active service. All these letters show that the writers are gentlemen and scholars, and that our ladies have been and are helpful and true to the cause in which they are interested.

A copy of one of the letters received is as follows:—

Dear Sir:—

Please accept my sincere thanks for the parcel of good things which you so kindly sent. I may say it was the best selected parcel I have yet seen. Every article was so useful to a soldier. May God bless you for your mindfulness.

PTE. JAMES MacGREGOR

I would respectfully suggest that especially the very wealthy men of our City place ample means at the disposal of the Ladies who are engaged in this noble, self-sacrificing work. A few hundred thousand dollars could be used to wonderful advantage.

WAS ON THE VERGE OF NERVOUS PROSTRATION

Had Not a Good Night's Rest in Two Years—Now Strong and Healthy, Thanks to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food

Belleville, Ont., Mar. 23—If anyone needs sympathy it is the person whose nervous system is exhausted and who feels the helplessness which accompanies this condition.

The writer of this letter could not rest or sleep, was easily tired and discouraged and felt that collapse of the nervous system was imminent. Fortunately she learned about Dr. Chase's Nerve Food in time, and, though much run down, was soon restored to health and strength, and finds pleasure in recommending a medicine which has proved of such great value to her.

This is a home cure which you can investigate and learn at first hand the details of the case.

Mrs. Geo. Williams, 8 Centre street, Belleville, Ont., writes: "About ten years ago I was on the verge of nervous prostration and had not had a good night's rest for two years. From reading some of the advertising in your pamphlets I was induced to try Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. I was very much run down, but after taking several boxes I found I could sleep well and had my nerves under control. Although I am now strong and healthy, I always keep a box of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food in the house, and take great pleasure in recommending it to all my friends."

In its advanced stages nervous prostration is most difficult to overcome. The gain of a day or two is followed by collapse and further depression and discouragement.

It is wisdom to be warned by such symptoms as restlessness, sleeplessness, irritability and headaches, and prevent the more serious condition by the timely use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50 cents a box, a full treatment of 6 boxes for $2.50, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto. Do not be talked into accepting a substitute. Imitations only disappoint.

GIVES IRELAND SECOND CHANCE

Bonar Law Announces Fresh Efforts to Bring Peace—Commission Likely

LONDON, March 22—In the course of a debate in the House of Commons last night on a resolution offered by Sir James Henry Dalziel, Liberal, urging the Government to make another attempt to settle the Irish question, Andrew Bonar Law, Chancellor of the Exchequer, announced that the Government already had decided to make such an attempt, The Dalziel motion accordingly was voted down.

The Folly Of Taking Digestive Pills

A Warning to Dyspeptics

The habit of taking digestive pills after meals makes chronic dyspeptics of many thousands of men and women because artificial digestants, drugs and medicines have practically no influence upon the excessively acid condition of the stomach contents which is the cause of most forms of indigestion and dyspepsia.

The after dinner pill merely lessens the sensitiveness of the stomach nerves and thus gives a false sense of freedom from pain. If those who are subject to indigestion, gas, flatulence, etc. after eating would get about an ounce of pure bisurated magnesia from their druggist and take a teaspoonful in a little water after meals there would be no further necessity for drugs or medicines because bisurated magnesia instantly neutralizes stomach acidity, stops food fermentation and thus insures normal, painless digestion by enabling the stomach to do its work without hindrance.

READING HISTORY.

The One Way to Acquire a Real Knowledge of the World.

Henry James once told me that the only reading of which he never tired was history. "The least significant footnote of history," he said, "stirs me more than the most thrilling and passionate fiction. Nothing that has ever happened to the world finds me indifferent."

I used to think that ignorance or history meant only a lack of information and a loss of pleasure. Now I am sure that such ignorance impairs our judgment by impairing our understanding; by depriving us of standards, of the power to contrast and the right to evaluate. We can know nothing of anything unless we know its history, and we can know nothing of the history of any nation unless we know something of the history of all nations.

The book of the world is full of knowledge we need to acquire, of lessons we need to learn, of wisdom we need to assimilate. Consider only this brief sentence of Polybius, quoted by Plutarch, "In Carthage no one is blamed however he may have gained his wealth." A pleasant place, no doubt, for business enterprise, a place where young men were taught how to get on and extravagance kept pace with shrewd finance; a self satisfied, self confident, money getting, money spending people, honoring success and hugging its fancied security, until in farof Rome Cato pronounced its doom.—Agnes Repplier in Atlantic Monthly.

THE SCARLET TANAGER.

He Wears His Gaudy Fireman's Suit Only in the Summer.

The country folk call the scarlet tanager the firebird. His feathers are the woods on fire. Reversing the figure, the firebird puts out the torch of the sunset and flies off with the plumage of the oriole that has come to fly "in triple splendor through our northern skies."

This tanager of ours is not much of a songster. He does not have to be. All he has to do is to "strut his stuff" a bit in order to share applause with the gold crowned wood thrush and the mellow noted meadow lark. Seemingly the tanager thinks that his call is to be preferred to his song, for he calls for encores where he sings once. The tip of a tree gives him the best stage setting for his beauty, and there he struts and looks the sun in the eye and chip-chirrs by the hour. His mate is a modestly garbed female, who is willing to tend to home duties while Beau Brummel gallivants abroad.

It is only for a season that the tanager wears his gaudy fireman's suit. The rule that he must change his clothes with the September sun spent may seem foolish to him, but he clings to the feather. In dun and drab he goes south, where he tells an unenlivening and brilliantly plumaged company of tropic birds of the wonder of his summer dress.

His Suspicion Confirmed.

How interesting the financial columns in the morning papers can be to the average reader! For instance, here's a market report that says "bonds are strong." This confirms an impression formed at a boarding house recently.—London Ideas.

Feminine Intuition.

"I thought you were going to send that hat back, Maude. What induced you to keep it?"

"Why, Ethel dear! I knew was careful to get it as soon as saw it was going to be unbecoming it was."—Baltimore American.

INTRIGUING OF THE FOE DEFIED BY FREE RUSSIA

New Cabinet Calls on People to Organize For Greater Effort on Land and Sea—Liberty Loan at 85 to be Issued Soon

It Has Been Decided to Abolish Flogging

PETROGRAD, March 24.—Special.—"In your hands," says a Cabinet manifesto, "lies the fate of national liberty. The enemy is straining to profit by any disorganization of the accumulated great Russian forces on the Russian fronts of the Russian front. With the advent of spring-he will release his numerous fleets, and consequently increase the capital. His victory would be a victory over free Russia. A Prussian victory would deprive the Russians of all their liberties and restore to power the Emperor of the enslaved people."

The new liberty loan will be for three billiah roubles at 5 per cent. The loan will be issued at 85.

It has been decided to abolish the flogging and chaining of inmates of prison.

The Petrograd nobility has adhered to the new Government.

A picture of the arrival of Nicholas Romanoff, the former Emperor, at Tsarskoe-Selo is drawn by the Russkai Volia, which is the only newspaper editorial staff arrest, and declares that the event puts an end to Russia's shame. The country, the newspaper asserts, will breathe freely only when the former Emperor has disappeared forever from the horizon of Russian life. The editorial follows, in part:—

"This arrest was made by the order of the Government created by the revolution—bivilians and soldiers . . .

"All this cries loudly that there can never be a return to the old days! All that is dead, and its death is personified in the person of the former Emperor, a prisoner waiting for his fate to be decided by a revolted people. Let this close the dark book of Nicholas Romanoff's work and life. Let the book, the shame of Russia, pass into the hands of historians. We must forget the poor, unworthy Emperor. Breathe freely only when he has disappeared forever from the horizon of Russian life."

The wife of Rasputin was disinterred at Tsarskoe-Selo yesterday, and is lying on a truck there, pending its removal elsewhere for burial.

Prince Peter Fredericks, former Minister of the Imperial House, has been brought before the Duma. He received a hostile reception on his arrival at the railway station in Petrograd.

Thick Book Saved His Life

Thug Attacked Laval Instructor With Dagger—Weapon Penetrates Book

MONTREAL, March 23.—A thick volume saved the life of Dr. Adrien Plouffe, professor of Laval University, when he was attacked last night on St. Mark St., by a would-be assassin. The professor's assailant plunged a dagger into his breast and the blade penetrated through the book, but only made a slight incision in the neighborhood of the heart.

As he was stabbed the professor heard his assailant say:

"Will you cease writing, Judas?"

Professor Plouffe struggled with his assailant, and tried to get a revolver he (the professor) carried. He was wounded about the forehead. He then lost consciousness, and when he came to he found his gun in the snow nearby the scene of the struggle. Apparently his assailant had grown alarmed when he had found that the professor was armed, and made off.

Professor Plouffe stated that he recently wrote several letters to French papers criticising a book in which Nationalism in politics was advocated. He said that he had received several anonymous letters recently warning him that he might be attacked. The professor thinks his opposition to the Nationalism was the reason for the attack.

Former Czar's Children Ill

Are Suffering From Scarlet Fever Father Had Rejoined His Family

PETROGRAD, March 23—The condition of the children of the former Czar took a turn for the worse today. Four of his daughters, are reported suffering from scarlet fever and the eldest of these, Grand Duchess Olga, was said today to be delirious. The Czarevitch is also very ill.

When the train bearing the former Czar arrived at the imperial pavilion at Tsarkoe Selo, he stepped out calmly. He looked haggard and tired and wore a cossack uniform of purple, the only decoration being the order of St. George. He has now rejoined his family.

The Ambassador of England, France and Italy today followed the example of American Ambassador Francis and formally entered to Foreign Minister Lvoff the recognition by their respective nations of the new Russian Government.

FRENCH GAIN IN MACEDONIA

Take Total of 1,794 Prisoners North of Monastir and Many Guns

PARIS, March 24—Special—An official statement issued last night reads:

"Orient—Violent engagements have taken place to the north of Monastir (Serbia), for the possessing of Hill 1,248, which ultimately remained in our hands, despite repeated attacks by the Germans and Bulgarians."

"As a whole, including the figures given in the preceding communication, we had captured in this region up to March 21 eleven machine guns, two trench guns, twenty-four officers and 1,770 men. During the same period three enemy airplanes were brought down by the British, whose very active airplanes also have bombarded railway stations and enemy artillery parks.

"Policying operations, made necessary by the exactions of Greek insurgent bands in the neutral zone, have enabled us to scatter several bands in the region of Kipurgos and to seize a great number of rifles and cartridges which had been concealed."

Would Have Lost The War

Old Russian Government Would Have Suffered Defeat—Declaration of the Grand Duke

PETROGRAD, March 23—"We would have lost the war under the old Government," declared the former Grand Duke Cyril of Russia—now simple Admiral Romanoff, under the democratic regime.

"Just now," he said, "my house porter and myself se alike . . .

"It was useless," he continued, declaring it was to ameliorate conditions of the old autocratic regime, "to discuss the matter with the Czar. We simply could not break down the wall interposed by Protopopoff, Stcheglovitoff and others."

It was learned that the Grand Duke Cyril, forseeing an uprising, had dispatched his wife, the Grand Duchess Victoria, to attempt to influence the Czarina, but that on reach the Czar and persuade him to adopt wider reform measures. To all of the dukes' pleadings that certain noble-born Russians should be granted power to institute reform the German born Czarina replied:

"But those people are enemies of our dynasties. There is only a handful of ignorant, bridge-playing aristocrats against us. I know Russia and know the people of Russia love our family."

From the front yesterday the Grand Duke Nicholas telegraphed to the Premier, expressing his firm determination to maintain discipline in the ranks, and urging the Premier to restore order in the country especially in those industries whose product is essential to the success of the army.

ONE-MAN TORPEDOES PLANNED BY HOBSON

He Will Talk Over His Idea With Henry Ford

DETROIT, March 23—Richmond P. Hobson, hero of the Merrimac, is expected here today to confer with Henry Ford on the feasibility of constructing one-man torpedoes. Mr. Hobson's idea is to construct the torpedoes for use in times of great stress, the man to volunteer, of course, and not be assigned to duty which would mean certain destruction.

"I have had an idea for some time regarding a one-man torpedo, which would mean nothing more or less than placing a man in a torpedo to control it," said Mr. Hobson at Lansing last night. "Perhaps Mr. Ford can make my scheme workable."

According to a Petrograd despatch, Professor Paul N. Milukoff, Foreign Minister in the new Government, is leader of this party.

Factory Would Have Closed

Order of Government Regarding Ross Rifle Company Makes no Difference—Lee-Enfield Rifles Will be Made

OTTAWA, March 23.—"The Government has passed an order for the expropriation of the Ross rifle factory and all machinery, buildings and appurtenances," said George Foster, the acting Prime Minister last evening, when asked what the situation was regarding the taking over of the factory. The Ross rifle company has recourse to the Exchequer Court for valuation of the property.

"The Government will not manufacture any more Ross rifles, but will make arrangements as quickly as possible for the manufacture of Lee-Enfield rifles and other subsidiary necessaries for the war. The preparations necessary for the manufacture of the new Lee-Enfield will necessarily take considerable time as changes in machinery and also of all kind will be necessary.

"Such help as is requisite for these purposes will be retained, but for the present and until the factory is in a position to turn out the new rifle the help required will be small as compared with the number of hands heretofore employed.

"The transition from the manufacture of the Ross rifle to the Lee-Enfield would have caused the same delays, and brought about the same diminution of employment had the expropriation not taken place and the Government contracted under the terms of his contracts had undertaken to turn out the number of rifles called for by the terms of the contract.

"It was inevitable in any case that there would be a temporary diminution in employment. The employees, however, it is hoped, will be easily absorbed into other employment called for under the present condition of scarcity of labor."

SOCIALISM AT BREAKING POINT

German Populace Growing Impatient Over Conditions in The Fatherland

Special to The Intelligencer.

LONDON, March 24.—A despatch from Berlin, via Amsterdam to Reuter says the Emperor and Von Bethman Hollwez were denounced in Reichstag by Socialist Deputy Kunert during the debate Thursday as originators of the war. When Vice-Chancellor Helfferich declared that the German who spoke in the same breath of Russian and German conditions insulted the Fatherland, Kunert reported amid socialist applause: "I should be proud if such progress were made in our country as has been made in the Russian Empire!" Other socialist deputies declared: "Underfeeding is most terrible, and bound to affect public health!" and that in many establishments workmen had collapsed from hunger.

CANADIANS IN SPLENDID FORM

Cable Says That Casualties are Notably Light—Condition of Men Could Not be Better

Special to The Intelligencer.

TORONTO, March 24—Stewart Lyon's cable to the Canadian Press today states the Germans exploded a mine on the Canadian front yesterday morning, but our men were on alert and immediately organized the crater. Our losses in raids and other small affairs of the last two weeks have been notably light, and the health of the troops is excellent. Battalions which come out of the trenches for a rest are almost as fit as those going in.

TURKISH RULERS SEE UPRISING

Mass Levy so Unpopular That Government Dare Not Enforce It

ATHENS, March 24.—Special—Information has reached here that the mass levy ordered by the Turkish Government has proved so unpopular with the people so far that the Government has not ventured to enforce it fully. Resentment is rife among the people. The Young Turks are trying to prevent the spread of the facts about the Russian revolution, fearing to it as disorders and riots against the war. The attitude of the people is declared to be feared by the Government.

HAIG'S REPORT OF OPERATIONS

LONDON, March 24—Special—Friday's official report from headquarters in France reads: "In the area of our advance encounters between our outpost and hostile detachments of equal strength have occurred with a number of points along the general line, Ehreillers-Rancourt-les-Cambrai-Bapaume. During the day enemy counter-attacks near Ancourt-les-Bas, Rancourt-les-Cambrai and Vraucourt were driven off after fighting. Our positions were maintained, and we took a few prisoners. Our troops made further progress in the neighborhood of Roisel and Croisilles."

AGGRESSIVE PART MAY BE TAKEN BY U. S.

Steps Much More Far-reaching Than Defence of Merchant Ships Are Contemplated by the Wilson Government—Once a State of War is Declared Strong Measures Will be Adopted Against Teutons

WASHINGTON, March 24—Special—The American Government has decided upon sweeping measures to be put into effect following the expected declaration by Congress soon after it meets April 2, that a state of war exists between the United States and Germany.

Fully appreciating Germany's policy of acting in the war first and talking afterwards the Government has decided to provide against every possible emergency.

Broad questions involved have been discussed at a long Cabinet meeting, to which heads of the department carried reports on preparations already made and others contemplated. Details are being taken up between President Wilson and the individual members of the Cabinet.

Regretfully, the Government apparently has decided that since Germany is making war upon the United States through ruthless killing of Americans and destruction of their ships, the least must be met with steps much more far-reaching than mere attempts to pro etitnedrmaiblaiclUr chant craft.

If anything is ahead to prevent this it is not now foreseen. Once a state of war is declared to exist, aggressive measures are expected to be taken.

At, outlined after yesterday's Cabinet meeting, the preparations of the Government are not to be for a short war, or a war marked by half-way measures. Nothing is to be taken for granted. A complete programme has been prepared so that everything done will be carried out in a systematic and orderly manner.

The exact measures of American participation in the war are not expected to be revealed until after the President addresses Congress, and until public sentiment crystallizes. So far as is known, no political alliance with the Entente allies is contemplated, although military as well as naval co-operation is possible, and the Government will be unsparing in both money and supplies for the allies.

COULD NOT GET PASSPORT

LONDON, March 23—In the Commons today Tyson Wilson asked the Colonial Secretary if there were twenty thousand dependents of Canadian soldiers here, who are anxious to return to Canada and could not get passports.

Steel Maitland, Under Secretary replied he believed some had been unable to receive owing to a restriction, which under maritime conditions, it was necessary to impose on the travelling of women and children. The responsibility rested with Naval authorities.

McCallum Scott.—"It is known that many dependents of the disbanded Canadian soldiers are in severe distress here. Mr. Maitland?"

Mr. Maitland—No knowledge of that, but will try to receive information."

McCallum Scott said if it was so, some provision should be made for them here.

GOLD SHIPPED TO MEXICO

EL PASO, March 23—Shipment by German commercial firms of a large sum of money into Mexico today, it is learned from a reliable source, has been brought to the attention of the Government investigators here. The amount of the shipment is not disclosed.

American secret service officers continued to keep a close watch today on the movements of Germans here who are not American citizens.

RETIRED IN FACE OF THE ENEMY FIRE

Special to The Intelligencer.

PETROGRAD, March 24—Official Statement—Roumanian front:—The enemy yesterday attacked our positions between the Rivers Silcha and Buzeu-Rimnic, miles west of Molnenchi. Under enemy pressure our troops withdrew to the next line of defence about two-thirds of a mile to the eastward.

Barbers' License Bill Withdrawn

Information Brings Out Fact That Same Provision Can be Put in Health Act

TORONTO, March 23.—In moving the second reading of his bill respecting barbers, among other things, provided for a board of examiners to issue licenses to suitable persons, Mr. Studholme said that there was any place which should be clean from the standpoint of sanitary arrangements it was a barber shop.

Premier Hearst said he understood the object of Mr. Studholme in bringing the bill forward was chiefly for educational reasons at present. He hardly thought the House would go as far as Mr. Studholme wanted them to go at present. Nor was the sentiment of the country in favor of the measure. He thought amendments could be made to the public health act that would insure clean and sanitary barber shops.

Mr. Studholme made an earnest appeal for action, after which the bill was withdrawn.

HELD FOR THEFT

TORONTO, March 23.—The Detective Department received word last night from the Buffalo police that Harry A. B. Jones, a Hamilton officer attached as a clerk in the local offices of the Imperial Munitions Board, had been arrested in Buffalo on a warrant issued in Toronto charging him with theft. According to the police, the information was laid as the result of certain alleged irregularities said to have been found in Regan's books. The police stated this morning that Regan was going to fight extradition.

PURCHASES $50,000 OF GOV'T. BONDS

KINGSTON, March 23.—The City of Kingston has purchased $50,000 worth of Dominion War Bonds, according to an announcement made by Mayor Hughes to-day. The question was considered by the mayor the city's financial experts for years and it was decided that the investment would be a good one. A local broker handled the sale. The means to meet the bond purchase will be taken from the sinking fund.

TOO MANY DOGS IN OWEN SOUN

OWEN SOUND, March 23—Something is going to happen to many of the dogs in Owen Sound if the town council has its way. The matter was thoroughly gone into and it looks as if the dog population of Owen Sound was going to dwindle within the next few months. A higher tax and a tax collector were proposed and more stringent measures re dogs running at large will itself be adopted at a future

MRS. PETER TALLON.

The funeral of the late Mrs. Peter Tallon, formerly of this city, whose death occurred Monday March 19th, took place from her residence, 86 Asylum Street, New Haven, Conn. Requiem High Mass was celebrated at St. John Church, at 9 o'clock by the Rev. Father Ford. Mrs. Tallon was born at Horse Islandd, Canada, but has lived in New Haven for the past eight years. She is survived by her husband, Peter Tallon, two daughters, Mrs. J. J. Calnie, of West Haven, and Mrs. K. K. Tone of Pinsacola, Fla.; three sons, Robert of Calgary, Alberta, Canada, Daniel and George of New Haven. Also her mother, Mrs. Ellen Patterson, and two sisters, Mrs. D. Welch, Mrs. A. Goodfriend of Howe Island, and by three brothers, J. W. Patterson, New Haven, Conn., George of New Port, R. I., and Robert of Fairbanks, Alaska. —Communicated.

MRS. JENNIE MAY WHITE

Yesterday afternoon the funeral of the late Mrs. Jennie May White, wife of Mr. A. E. White, took place from the family residence, 158 Bridge Street, east and many relatives and friends were present to pay the last tribute of respect to the deceased. Services at the house were conducted by the Rev. W. P. D. Wilson, of Belleville, and Rev. A. S. Kerr, Pastor of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church The Rev. gentlemen also took part in the interment services at the family plot Belleville cemetery. Many beautiful floral designs were contributed by relatives and friends. The bearers were Messrs. H. G. Bleecker, L. P. Hughes, A. McGie, C. N. Sulman, J. M. Parley and T. E. Ketchenson.

DEATH NOTICES.

HAGERMAN.—In Belleville, on Saturday, March 24th, 1917, Melville P. Hagerman, aged 37 years and 17 days.

The funeral will take place from the family residence 117 Bridge Street, west on Monday, the 26th inst. Service at the house at 2.45 a.m. Interment Stirling Cemetery.

Popular Local Young Man Dead

Melville P. Hagerman a Victim of Pneumonia—Ill But Short Time

Many were the expressions of regret heard upon the streets of the city today when it became known that Mr. Melville Parry Hagerman had joined the great majority. In the early part of this month deceased was the victim of an attack of pneumonia, which eventually caused death. For the past few days he had been in a critical condition and his demise was by no means unexpected. Melville, who was in his 38th year, was born in the Township of Huntingdon, but had lived for some years past in this city, where he was well known and universally esteemed. After passing through the Public School he took courses in the Ontario Business College and Albert College of this city, and was a clever scholar. He was by occupation a civil servant, having for some time been connected with the Belleville Post Office, and in this position he was exceedingly courteous and a general favorite with his fellow employees. Deceased was deservedly a popular young man, and his passing away is regretted by a host of friends. A few months ago, namely in September last, his mother, Mrs. S. P. Hagerman passed away. He was the eldest son of Mr. S. P. Hagerman who with his two brothers, Ernest F. of London, and Stanley D. of Belleville survive. To the bereaved will be extended the heartfelt sympathy of many relatives and friends. The remains will be taken to Stirling on Monday for interment in the family plot at Stirling cemetery.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES

The following are biographical sketches of the newly elected Grand Master and Deputy Grand Master, elected at the annual meeting of the Orange Grand Lodge for Ontario, held in Belleville this week.

GRAND MASTER

The new Grand Master is R. W. Bro. O. W. Landon, of Lansdowne. He was born on August 4th, 1868, and follows the worthy occupation of a tiller of the soil. He is one of the best known residents of his township, and will make a worthy successor to Grand Master Evan H. McLean.

The newly elected Grand Master, although only 51 years of age, has a record of 37 years with the Orange Order, commencing at the age of 14, when he joined the Orange Young Britons. For twenty years he has been connected with the Grand Lodge, during which time he has held the following offices: Grand Lecturer, five years; Grand Director of Ceremonies, two years; Junior Deputy Grand Master, two years and Deputy Grand Master, two years.

Grand Master Landon is a member of the Masonic Order and of Harmonic Preceptory, Royal Black Knights of Ireland, Lynsburst.

In religion, Mr. Landon is a member of the Presbyterian church, and is also a Municipal experience which dates over ten years, during which time he has been in the Lansdowne Council as Councillor, Deputy and Reeve.

DEPUTY GRAND MASTER

J. Mr. W. E. Tummon of Crookston, who was elected as Deputy Grand Master of the Orange Lodge in Ontario East, is perhaps the youngest occupant of that position. Deputy Grand Master Tummon has been connected for nineteen years in the Orange Order, and has filled every chair, Deputy Grand Registrar, Master of the Primary Lodge, District Master, County Master of the Worshipful Preceptor of the Black Chapter and County Master of the Black Chapter. He is now in line for the office of Grand Master two years hence. This is the first time since the time of the late Lieut.-Col. Cockwell, that a County of Hastings Orangeman has reached this position.

He has had twelve years' experience in Huntingdon Township Council, and in Hastings County Council.

HALF MAST

The flag from the Post Office staff is flaunted at half mast, out of respect to the late Mr. Melville P. Hagerman, who was a member of the Post Office Staff.

ICE CLEARED AWAY

All the ice has been cleared from the bay on both sides of Victoria Avenue hill from Pinnacle street up. The improved walking is appreciated. Thank you.

FLAG BLOWN AWAY

During the gale which prevailed last night the new flag, which has recently been placed on the staff of the city building, was carried away, owing to the rope breaking. The flag was however secured.

PLEASING ENTERTAINMENT

Before an appreciative audience last evening in the lecture room of St. Andrew's Church, Miss Tuite's Dramatic Class in connection with Albert College, presented a play entitled "The New Crusade." In taking part portrayed their characters in a manner that was creditable alike to tutor and pupil. The proceeds were for a worthy cause, namely, the Red Cross and a goodly sum was realized.

REAL ESTATE PURCHASE

The Front Street property, known as the Coleman Block, has been purchased by Mr. D. V. Sinclair. This property, with a frontage of 65 feet on Front street, and extending back to the river bank, has been in the Coleman family for generations, and we congratulate Mr. Sinclair upon having acquired one of Belleville's most desirable business blocks, which also may be taken as an evidence of the purchaser's confidence in the future of Belleville.

CELEBRATES HER 94TH

Mrs. Thos. Hampton, Foster Ave., yesterday celebrated her, 94th birthday. She is still hale and hearty, and much enjoys seeing friends who call. She was born in Sidney. Mrs. Hampton is a grand-daughter of the late Capt. Meyers, who owned the first house here, when Belleville was Meyers Creek. She remembers the rebellion of 1837-38 and her father, when a boy was driving ammunition wagons during the war of 1812. She is very much interested in the present war, having three grandsons at the front, namely: Major Ketcheson, Lieut. Allan Ketcheson, and R. S. Harder.

CARPET BALL MATCH

At the Baptist Church last night a carpet ball match took place between teams representing the Business Men's Bible Class of Bridge Street Methodist Church, and the Yokefellows Bible Class of the Baptist church. The result was a win for the Yokefellows, with a score of 33 to 25. Mr. P. K. Fisher umpired the game. The Business Men's team have won the first-round of the series of matches, claiming the pennant. At the close of the game last evening refreshments were served, and a pleasant social time was participated in by all present.

ACCUSED OF STEALING PARTNERSHIP PROPERTY

County Constable L. Soules last night placed under arrest Louis George, a Syrian, charged with theft. The warrant upon which the arrest was erected, charged George that he did unlawfully, being a partner with Kellie George, steal partnership property from a general store in the Village of Frankford, to the extent of over $3,000, and convert same to his own use, with intent to defraud the said Kellie George. This morning the accused was arraigned before Police Magistrate Masson, but the case was not ready to be proceeded with, and was enlarged until Thursday next. Mr. Carnew represents the Crown, and Mr. J. J. Butler the accused. Bail was fixed at $3,000 on the accused, and one surety of $3,000 or two in $1,500 each. The accused has not been able to furnish bail, and in consequence will have to remain in jail.

TRAINMAN MEDALED FOR HEROIC ACT

All Money Looks Alike to Us.

One Price to All. No Rebates at Sinclair's

During the past few days, we have been frequently asked by Customers from surrounding towns if we would allow them the price of their Return Railway Ticket, provided they purchased a Suit or Coat in our Store.—Our answer was No, and this for Two Reasons—First, our Goods are so marked that we could not afford to do this, and secondly we do not think it is fair to the great majority of our Customers.

Here's an experience we had recently. A Customer from Stirling was buying a $15.00 Rain Coat and asked for a Rebate of 95c, the price of her Railway Ticket, because she could get it elsewhere, it being so advertised. At the same time we had another Customer who had driven from two miles beyond Stirling, bringing with her some Farm Produce to help to supply the Belleville Market, and this Woman was buying a $25.00 Suit for her daughter and as a business proposition we do not consider it would be fair to discriminate in favor of the Customer who came by train.

Ours is a Woman's Store, and our Business, one of the largest of its kind in Central Ontario has been established by the ever increasing patronage of Hastings and Prince Edward County Farmers' Wives and Daughters, as we want our Customers, both Old and New to know that ALL MONEY LOOKS ALIKE AT SINCLAIR'S, and in Our Store a Farmer's Wife or Daughter can buy just as much for her Dollar as the Woman can who comes

A Record Sized Egg

Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Parliament, of Consecon, visited The Intelligencer sanctum today, and took the editor's breath away by laying before him an egg measuring 8 1-4 by 6¼ in circumference. It is certainly a beauty. The hen that laid it is a barred Plymouth Rock, a breed noted for productive propensities. Mrs. Parliament stated that she got the eggs gathered from their henneries were unusually large, but this particular specimen ranged slightly above the average. We were not at all surprised when told that the product of these hens sold readily, bringing the highest price. When cordially requested to retain and make a meal of the hen-fruit, our eyes shone with gladness, for such luxuries are scarce and expensive these days.

When Jim Corbett Lost to Fitzsimmons

Racey Review of the Gritting Scraps Between These Two Great Ring Champions

(By Robert L. Ripley)

Twenty years ago St. Patrick Day the sporting world was startled by a flash from Carson City announcing "Fitz Wins."

It meant the end of a great battle; that a world's championship had changed; that Jim Corbett had been knocked out in the fourteenth round by Robert Fitzsimmons.

We were talking with Corbett, "Gentleman Jim" was reclining at ease on the cushions of the Friars' Club. He looks mighty young for a man of fifty-one.

"Yes, twenty years ago St. Patrick's Day. I won't forget it. But it doesn't seem that long ago," Jim was saying.

"Well, it is all past now. Time heals all wounds. I lost—I lost fair and square—it is all past now. But that championship is one of the different accounts of the fight.

"Strange as it may seem, I had that fight because I used GOOD judgment. Sounds funny, doesn't it? But it is true. If I had used BAD judgment I most certainly would have lost.

"How is that?" some one asked.

"Like this," he went on. "You know I had a chopping block of Fitz for the first six rounds. In the sixth round I hooked him on the jaw with the left and he went down. Many people claim he was down more than nine seconds. I don't know. Only I know that the referee was a little unfair in counting the seconds. However, I did not worry at the time, as I thought the fight so good as won—but Fitz got up in time, too, if, as said before—if I had used BAD judgment. Fitz was in a very bad way when he got up. He was bleeding profusely from the nose. How I wished I could COOL judgment. I easily away from him and tried to feint him out for a right-hand that would certainly have finished him. I felt very cool and confident, and took my time. But before the chance came the bell sounded for the end of the round—and the chance never came again. Now, if I had used what is called bad judgment I would have tore into him the instant he rose from the floor, and rained blows on him so fast as I could with both hands. That is always bad judgment; but in that particular case I am positive that Fitz would never have finished out the round."

"And the knockout. I had read where Fitz had already planned the knockout blow, and had patiently waited for the opportunity to land it. That was not the case. Fitz didn't have that much sense. I got the best of the battle right up to the finish, and felt that I was winning easily. Fitz was desperate. He was swinging frantically and wildly—taking a dying chance.

"All during the fight I had been jumping back from those terrific wild swings, and trying to counter him. I was not accomplishing much, however, because I was always too far away from him when he finished his swing to score effectively, so I decided to feint him into swinging again, and just move my head back inches at my body—and then catch him with my right. I feinted with my head, and Fitz started another swing—but just as luck would have it he failed to get a good start with it, so he stopped and hooked his left instead. The blow landed on my stomach, which protruded out as I bent forward. The blow paralyzed my legs, and I was unable to get up when I went down, although I was perfectly conscious. The blow was a plain left hook. He did not shift. He says he did, but I know he didn't. There was no mug that could ever hit me with a shift blow—I was too fast in those days. It was a simple, plain wallop in the stomach, and all this talk about the solar plexus is bunk."

"Too bad," some one murmured.

"No; the hardest thing about that defeat," interposed Corbett, "was the presence of my father and brothers at the ringside. It was the first time any of them had ever seen me in the ring—and I had to lose."

"Didn't you make a return match with him, Jim? You might have got him next time," Corbett was asked.

"Why didn't I? Why didn't I?" roared Jim. "Why do you know I me again? Why, I offered him $25,000 cash, win or lose or draw, to box me again, but he refused it. The public became annoying him about it until Jack had to make a match with some one to avoid me. As you know, Fitz picked out my sparring partner, a young chap who had just turned pugilist. His name was Jefferies.

"Oh, well, it is all past now. Twenty years will calm the most tumultuous feelings. Fitz and I are good friends to-day, and I have nothing but the kindliest feelings for him."

It may be of interest to know that Fitzsimmons to now in California, where he is usually "god religious" and is now engaged in evangelistic work after the fashion of Billy Sunday.

Jim is in New York at present taking a brief rest from his lecturing work before playing in Toledo.

MARCH WEATHER RHEUMATIC WEATHER

Victims Can Cure Themselves With Williams' Pink Pills

With the coming of March people who are afflicted with rheumatism will have unpleasant reminders of their trouble. Sudden changes from changeable—balmy and springlike one day, raw, cold and piercing the next. It is such sudden changes of weather that sets the pangs and tortures of rheumatism, lumbago and sciatica going. But it must be borne in mind that although weather conditions start the pains, the trouble is not caused by the weather, and can only be cured through the blood. Liniments and lotions and liniments in the world can't cure rheumatism. Rubbing may seem to ease the pain while you are rubbing, but there its value ends. Only through the blood can you cure rheumatism. That's why Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have so many thousands of cures of this trouble to their credit. The new, rich blood which they actually make drives out the poisonous acid and rheumatism vanishes. Among many sufferers from rheumatism who have been cured by the medicine is Mrs. Thos. Hall, Thwaite's Mill foreman for the G. T. R. at Peterboro, who says:—"In the course of my work I am frequently exposed to all kinds of weather, with the result that about two years ago I contracted rheumatism which settled in my legs. At times I could scarcely walk and often had to quit my day's work on account of the stiffness and the pain. I tried different remedies without getting any help until I began the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I used six boxes of them, and am glad to say I am about as well as ever I was. I still take the pills occasionally, and I hope that my experience may be of benefit to some other rheumatic sufferer."

If you suffer from rheumatism, or any other disease of the blood, look to cure yourself today with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Carries Scars of Forty Wounds

Corporal Graham of Toronto Has Many Physical Trophies of the Horrors of War

TORONTO, March 23.—Lance-Corp. John Graham, a Toronto man, who returned from overseas this morning, carries the scars of 40 wounds about his body. Graham and Lance Corp. Graham was one of a party of 48 who left here at 8 o'clock this morning. Eighteen of the party were Toronto men. There was a good turnout of friends at the depot and also at the hospital.

Hon. W. D. McPherson and other members of the Hospital Commission extended the official welcome to the men.

Lance-Corp. Graham says he received all his wounds at once. It seems miraculous that not one of them reached a vital spot or maimed him, although he is pretty badly broken up. It was at the Somme that a high explosive shell burst quite near him and he received the full force of the flying fragments of the shell. His unit, Toronto one, was making the memorable 15th of September advance at the time.

How an American Soldier In France Took on Chains

By F. A. MITCHEL

Guilford had lived in Paris several years when the pan-European war broke out. He at once enlisted in the Foreign legion and went to the front with the Americano corps. He was a handsome fellow and had a winning way with him. Women were easily attracted to him. There was an audacity about him that took well with them.

One day Guilford was knocked senseless by the bursting of a shell. He was carried to the rear on a stretcher to a field hospital and put in charge of a Red Cross nurse. Coming to him-self suddenly and seeing a beautiful face bending over him, he threw his arms around the woman to whom it belonged, drew her quickly down and kissed her.

Of course as his arms were loosened the nurse arose and without a word left him. But she sent a surgeon to him, who examined him and found he was in nowise injured except for the shock he had received. Within an hour he was up on his feet, going to relieve his command.

Guilford did not forget the face of the nurse nor the look she gave him as she rose and left him. He was very much ashamed of himself. The nurse had been ready to succor him; he had returned the favor by insulting her. He stolved on him by insulting her. He could have cut off his arms he had thrown around her; he could have plucked the lips he had pressed upon hers.

Guilford was struck again, this time with self, with love, with war. He was bursting shell, but by stranger. As he would have it, he was placed a second time under the care of the nurse who had attended him before. She was surprised that the wounded man she recognized him he could not tell. She regarded him with that impassive look usual to those accustomed to the suffering, brought restoratives as the surgeon directed and otherwise ministered to him.

A number of sick and wounded men were under her care, and she devoted all alike. Guilford received his share of her attentions and no more. He wished to apologize for his action toward her when he had come under the influence of liquor, but she gave him no opportunity—that is, she kept such a reserve that he was unable to break through it. He said something about having been indebted to her for kindness on a former occasion, but while he was saying it she seemed to be thinking of something else. Before he could make up his mind to break through her reserve and express his penitence she had turned away from him.

Guilford received letters necessitating his presence in America, and since it was not probable that he would be fit for service again for a long while, he succeeded in getting a discharge. Before crossing the ocean he resolved to find the nurse whom he had treated so wrongfully and ask her forgiveness therefor. Guilford made inquiries for her and was told that she had been worn out by a long period of nursing and had gone to her home in Paris for a rest.

Guilford learned her address, intending to go to see her, but first he learned that was troubling him off his mind. He dreaded putting an ocean between him and the only woman who had shown toward him—what? That was the trouble with him; he was in the dark as to her treatment of him. How slighter that she should have treated him exactly the same as hundreds of others who had not offended her!

As soon as he arrived in Paris he took a conveyance and told the driver to take him to the address that had been given him. What was his surprise to be driven to a handsome residence in the fashionable quarter of the dwelling portion of Paris. Leaving the cab he looked at the house and wanted to get back into the cab. He had not occurred to him that the woman who had been nursing soldiers might be an aristocrat. The fact only made him feel the more culpable.

How could he, an American, face a lady, perhaps of rank, whom he had treated as he had? Was he a barbarian? But he was resolved that he would not leave France without setting himself right with her. He went up his card, on which was written "One who has received your kind attentions in a field hospital."

When mademoiselle came down to meet the caller she stood for a moment on the threshold regarding him. Again that impassive look. Then she had advanced into the room, bowed to him ceremoniously and asked him to be seated. He spoke of the good work she had done at the front; of the poor fellows who had been benefited by her tender care. He commended her especially that she, a lady surrounded by comforts in a splendid home, and who would grace society, should have assumed the duties of a nurse for men brought in from a battlefield.

All this he could say, though every word seemed like a knife and his unconscious served only to make his offense seem the greater. She listened to his praise, but never for a moment did she relax from that quiet dignity of a high born dame. When Guilford could endure it no longer, he rose to go. Standing beside him before leaving, suddenly a pent up pleading burst forth.

"Pardon," he said, almost in a wail. With a smile she put out her hand. Guilford has not yet returned to America. Some say he never will return. He has become the slave of the woman he blessed.

IT DIDN'T WORK

AVOID DRESS EXTREMES SAYS JEAN BLODGETT

Fads Are Unbecoming and Are Created by Specialists Because Women Want Them

This is an age of extremes; extremes in everything, but particularly in dress. Women blame this on the manufacturers. Manufacturers reverse the charge. In a bright little article in this month's "Everywoman's World," under the title "Make Your Own Style," Jean Blewett quotes a Fashion Specialist as saying:

"We have the reputaton of preferring the bizarre to the beautiful, of forcing old fashions out of sight and new ones to the fore, of making ourselves rich by making other men poor; but, believe me, we are not—at least as they paint us. If some fashions are bizarre—and they are—it is because women want them so. It is only the extreme styles that we banish so soon as their little day is over. No less an authority than Worth has put it down in black and white that there is no one son why a gown, becoming and in taste should not be worn two or three years. Only," he adds, "let women who want their clothes to be stylish and look comparatively up-to-date stick to the end, leave the latest fads of fashion alone."

Said fads are usually unbecoming anyway.

"It is not the woman with the largest wardrobe who is the best dressed; it is she who exercises taste and common sense in choosing. I would say first, last, and always, to such as desire to dress well on as little money as possible, to avoid extremes. And do not buy many garments. For the really woman there is safety in numbers, but for the poor—and often prettier—sister, the rule should be 'taste, not variety.'"

The writer's own advice is that:

"A woman should have a tailored suit of good texture and make, an afternoon and an evening frock, and an evening wrap. These are the essentials; the rest are the accessories. Now, while the out of gown may add to a woman's style, it cannot give her style, which is but another word for individuality. If she have this quality in a marked enough degree, her clothes seem so much a part of herself that you forget to notice them."

Private Houses Searched Far Stored Food

Two Meatless and Potatoeless Days Weekly—Other Regulations Soon Coming

LONDON, March 23—The Controller announced in the House of Lords yesterday that although voluntary rations had brought about excellent results, much more in this direction was required, otherwise, it might be necessary to resort to compulsory rationing, which would be a national calamity.

He was very desirous of avoiding this, owing to the tremendous machinery such a system. This machinery, however, was ready, he declared, if required, and a great reduction in bread and sugar was still impossible. The controller also intended he said, to introduce a strong measure to prevent the hoarding of food.

According to an unofficial report, the Government intends to introduce two meatless and two potatoless days weekly in all restaurants and hotels and forbid more than five ounces of uncooked meat to be served for each person.

With regard to hoarding, it is said the police will be empowered to search private houses, and if more than a fortnight's supply of sugar, on a basis of a weekly allowance of three quarters of a pound per capita, is found, the persons so hoarding will be severely punished. Traders would also be prohibited, under penalties, from attempting to compel purchasers to buy other things before being supplied with sugar, potatoes and similar commodities, as this system has led to mischievous waste.

NATIONALIST ALLIANCE

Tancrede Marsil, who wants to establish a Republic on the banks of the St. Lawrence, is the latest recruit in the camp of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. At a gathering of Québec shirkers in Montreal the other day to protest against conscription, this precious patriot emitted the following:

"We will keep up the fight until the conscription movement is beaten. I belong to the Laval Nationalist bunch . . . I hope that when the old chief of the Liberal party returns to power, there will be an end of extravagance."

It will be observed that although Mr. Marsil professes the Nationalist cult he is anxious for the return of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. And why not? In what respect do the two disagree? Marsil denounces conscription; so does Laurier. Marsil does not favor Canadian participation in all Empire wars; neither does Laurier. The meeting which Marsil addressed in the name of Mr. R. B. Bennett, Director of National Service; Laurier refused to join the National service movement. And so to the end of the chapter. Marsil is merely crude in expressing his views. Laurier is more guarded and subtle.

The truth is that a political and racial alliance at present exists between Laurierism and Bourassaism in the Province of Québec. When Cannon, a Liberal, declared, "ye have done enough for England," and when Lavergne, a Liberal, proposed sending more men overseas, they were simply exposing the common basis of a Nationalist-Liberal union among the French-Canadians.

It is an alliance that must be disturbing to the Liberals of Canada whose sons sleep in nameless graves under Belgian skies.

LIGHT ON SALONIKI

A MINGLING OF MANY RACES.

The Town Has a Slight Italian Flavor, and the Striking Costumes of Its Varied Peoples Form a Complete Exhibition of Balkan Fashions.

A striking picture of street life in Saloniki, Greece, is given in a bulletin of the National Geographic society issued from a communication to the society from H. G. Dwight.

"Coming we told me that Saloniki was rather like Genoa," writes Mr. Dwight. "My first impression, therefore, was of a disappointing flatness not in the least comparable to the hilly site—the piled, hustloued, heaven scaling mass of the Italian city. Yet Saloniki scales heaven, too, in her more modest manner.

"And there is even something faintly Italian about her. This is most palpable in the broad quay of the water front, especially when a veritable row of fishermen from the Adriatic are drying nets or sails under the sea wall. Just as they do in Venice. The crescent of white buildings facing the blue bay would not look foreign in any Italian or Spanish port.

"The White tower, which is the most conspicuous of them, might perfectly have been the work of an Italian prince. Indeed, a doge of Venice is said to have built the entire citadel of it, and Suleiman the Magnificent employed Venetians for his own.

"The Turk is clever, however, and this Italian appearing town has unfamiliar details. The white campanili that everywhere shoot up above the roofs of weathered red are too slender and graceful for true bell towers. Then, as you land at the quay you perceive that the electric cars are labeled in strange alphabets. The cafes do not look quite as they should either. Their tables are built into the walls, many would pass without question. Just such slight and trim young men as these sit at just such little tables on the sidewalk. Just such young women, closely veiled and powdered as to complexion, rather dusky as to eyes and hair, would sit beside them. And you have a good deal of Italian. But you hear more of other and less familiar languages. And those red fezzes are another note.

"A more striking note is afforded by the clothing distilled on the human living their ease in their bathrobes, as it were, slit a little up the side and tied about the waist with a gay silk girdle. Over the bathrobe they usually wear a sleeveless vest lined with yellow fur, which guards them from the cold in winter and in the summer from heat. And now of them is without a string of beads, preferably of amber, dangling from his hand and giving him something to play with.

"Such an old gentleman should be accompanied by an old lady, who contributes what is most characteristic to the local color of Saloniki. The foundation of her costume is a petticoat of some dark silk and a white bodice crossed below her throat—a very thin bodice, cut very low at the neck and unstiffened by any such mail as western ladies array themselves with.

"Over this superstructure the old lady wears a dark satin bolero lined with fur and two striped silk aprons, one before and one behind. The latter is caught up on one side, some corner of it being apparently tucked into a concealed pocket. But the crown and glory of the old lady is her headdress, a sort of fat frame tightly wound about with a fine-meshed, gauzelike handkerchief and crowned with an

MANY OFFICERS HAVE REVERTED TO RANKS

Wished to Get Overseas Quickly With Artillery

(Ottawa Journal Press)

A large draft of artillery men and officers are leaving for the front in a very short time. These men have been carefully waiting calling orders for the past month, as nearly all of them have chums already in France, serving the Canadian flag.

A feature of this draft is the large number of officers who have given up their commissions and reverted to the ranks, that they might get into action sooner. Four qualified artillery officers enlisted as gunners during the last three days at the Recruiting Office on Sparks street.

The artillery has been the great mecca for the majority of the young men of Ottawa. The stories that have come back from their friends at the front, describing the exciting times they were enjoying, has been the stimulant which caused many to join this branch of the service. Another thing that has attracted many is the fact that the field artillery is a mounted unit and the course of training is interesting, instructive, and certain to improve every man.

All the Kingston batteries are well filled with Ottawa boys, and another attractive feature of the artillery, a divisional ammunition column, is also claiming its share. Several Queen's University students joined this unit last week, and Lieut. Frank Shanglinessy expects to land a lot of McGill men in a few days, as several have written him expressing their willingness to go with him.

The men in the divisional ammunition column are also well off. March has a strong tendency to bring out freckles, and as a result more online is sold in this month. Be sure to ask for the double strength online, as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove the freckles.

HIS SMUGGLING TRICK.

A Mexican Trader's Way of Evading the Customs Inspectors.

There are ways of evading duty down on the Rio Grande impossible to the port of New York. The Mexican found a way. He was a smuggler just on the other side of the Mexican border. He had two vases which had caught the fancy of an American customer, but they were dear, and with the duty added—not to be thought of. The customer told the Mexican so. The Mexican fell $5. But the price was still too high. The Mexican fell again. But still there was the duty staring the customer in the face. Then suddenly, without explaining how, the Mexican guaranteed that the vases would get through the custom house on the other side of the Rio Grande—next morning at breakfast time.

"And the Mexican said in a clerical-scenic manner, 'I will be there to-morrow.'

"At breakfast next morning, as the customer was eating leisurely, the Mexican appeared.

"Where are the vases?' the customer inquired.

"In the next room, senor," replied the Mexican, smiling blandly.

"And the duty?"

"There is no duty, senor."

"How in blunder did you manage it?" asked the American, amazed.

"I paid a greaser a dollar, senor. With the money I paid him he took the vases in the Rio Grande. See, senor"—hurrying to bring in a vase from the next room and displaying the wet with his fingers—"they are whole, per-fect."

"PROGRESS" IS WATCHWORD OF CANADIAN WOMEN

Jean Blewett, the Noted Author, Sifts Its Meaning and Drives Home Its Application

"Progress is the watchword of Canadian women for the year of grace 1917," proclaims Jean Blewett in the current issue of "Everywoman's World."

"Progress is power, the power ultimately to be subjugated, coerced, or turned aside, comes in time to the soul of its desires. Progress! Close your eyes and you can see the first untried believer in better things taking his first stumbling step forward. Cover your ears to shut out the clamor of the world about you, and you can hear the marches of the centuries, marches of might, marches of weakness. Hark to the footfalls, heavy and worn, strong footfalls, light ones, quick ones, slow ones, but all going one onward; jubilant footfalls which seem to ring out with solemn sweetness—How beautiful upon the mountains—carry tidings—great joy! Marches in the night, the dawn, the day; broken marches; glad and glorious marches; silent, obscure marches with flaming banners and martial music, clanging straight, to Heaven's gate—and beyond.

"Progress—a word big enough and great enough to stand for all that the strong of earth, the good and the great of earth, the saints, the martyrs, the fearless fighters of earth have accomplished, or will accomplish, yet not too big or great to be the watchword for any Canadian woman in this day of rich endeavor and splendid achievement."

SOUNDNESS OF CANADIAN FINANCES

The Canadian fiscal year which closes on the 31st of this month will show the country to be in a prosperous condition and the revenues buoyant. Statistics available indicate that when this month is ended the total revenues of the Dominion from all sources will reach two hundred and thirty million dollars. This is about fifty million dollars in excess of the revenue of the previous year, which in itself, was the highest in the history of Canada. The revenue for the fiscal year ending March 31st, 1917, will be one hundred million dollars greater than the year ending March 31st, 1915, the first year of the war.

It is likely that when all accounts are made up that, after paying all ordinary and capital expenditure, the increased interest charges upon war expenditures, and all pensions, the Government will be able to devote fifty million dollars towards the payment of principal on war cost. This is quite beyond the most sanguine expectations expressed by the Minister of Finance, Sir Thomas White, when he delivered his last budget.

An equally optimistic outlook exists with respect to Canada's trade situation. For the twelve months of the fiscal year just ending the trade of Canada has set a new high water mark. For the eleven months of the year ending February 28th, Canadian commerce reached the enormous figure of $1,771,995, reached a total of $1,028,660,000 and the imports $724,993,000, a favourable trade balance of more than three hundred million dollars.

AN EXONERATED PARTY.

Liberal newspapers are accusing the Borden Government of sole responsibility for the exodus from Canada to the United States of a number of men who fear compulsory military service. In common justice it must be admitted that the Liberal party is not to blame for any such manifestation of alarm.

In more than one public speech he has delivered since the war began, Sir Wilfrid Laurier has voiced unalterable opposition to conscription. He has made it plain to those who wish to take advantage of their freedom by allowing others to preserve it for them, that one way to avoid compulsory service was to get Liberal leaders back into power. Another way, obviously, was to leave Canada.

The consuerable number of men who have gone to the United States therefore, might have diluted their fear of conscription with the hope that the Liberal party would soon become active. The prospect of the latter event they seem to have found extremely dim. It failed to hold them, and many, no doubt, made a considerable sacrifice in order to get away.

One of the benefits to the nation calculated to follow a return to office of Sir Wilfrid Laurier would be the homecoming of the exiled patriots to a country governed in such a way as to accommodate their patriotism. But are they worth the sacrifice?

BLONDIN AND LAURIER.

BLONDIN was accused of telling about "SHOOTING HOLES IN THE BRITISH FLAG" and "didn't do it."

LAURIER talked about "STUMPING QUEBEC" and "didn't do it."

BLONDIN THE NATIONALIST, who talks against imperialism, votes for dreadnoughts, and enlists is a better Canadian and more acceptable to other Canadians than LAURIER THE RACIALIST, who talked in favor of autonomy, voted against dreadnaughts and failed to incite his anti-recruiting followers in Quebec or his Austro-German followers in the west to enlist.—Telegram.

PAINFUL SWOLLEN VEINS QUICKLY RELIEVED AND REDUCED

Mrs. R. M. Remfer of Federal, Kansas, writes an interesting account of her success in reducing a severe case of enlarged veins that should be encouraging to others similarly afflicted. She suffered with badly swollen and inflamed veins (in fact one had broken) for more than seven years before she became acquainted with Absorbine, Jr., and used it. Absorbine Jr. was faithfully applied for several weeks and to quote from her letter, "The large knots in the veins left, it was all nicely healed, and has not bothered me since."

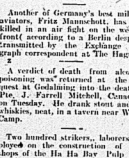
A MINGLING OF MANY RACES.

The Town Has a Slight Italian Flavor, and the Striking Costumes of the Varied Peoples Form a Complete Exhibition of Balkan Fashions.

A striking picture of street life in Saloniki, Greece, is given in a bulletin of the National Geographic society from a communication to the society from H. G. Dwight.

"Somebody had told me that Saloniki was 'like Genoa,'" writes Mr. Dwight. "My first impression, therefore, was of a disappointing dissimilarity not in the least comparable to the lofty air-the piled, battlined, heaven-scaled city-of the Italian city. Yet Saloniki scales heaven, too, in her more modest fashion.

"And there is even something faintly Italian about her. This is most pilpable on the broad quay of the water front, especially when a veritable row of lighters from the Adriatic are drying nets or sails under the sea wall, just as they do in Venice. The crescent of white buildings facing the bay bay would not look foreign in any Biznte or Spezzia.



"The White tower, which is the most conspicuous of them, might perfectly have been the work of an Italian prince. Indeed, a doge of Venice is said to have built the first edition of it, and Suleiman the Magnificent employed Venetians for his own.

"Look a little closer, however, and this Italian appearing town has unfamiliar details. The white campanili that everywhere prick up above the roofs of weathered red are too slender for Italy and too few for ten bell towers. Then, as you land at the quay you perceive that the electric cars are labeled in strange alphabets. The cafes do not look quite as they should either. And the people in them, a good many would pass without question. Just such slight and trim young men in Italy might sit at little tables on the sidewalk. Just such young women. Rather pale and powdered as to complexion, rather dusky as to eyes and hair, would sit beside them. And you hear a good deal of Italian. But you hear more of other and less familiar languages, and those red fezzes are another note.

"A more striking note is afforded by the dignified old gentlemen taking their ease in their bathrobes, as they were, sit a little up the side and tied about the waist with a gay silk girdle. Over the bathrobe they usually wear a long, open coat lined with yellow fur, which guards them from the cold in winter and in the summer from heat, and on one of them is without a string of beads, preferably of amber, dangling from his hand and giving him something to play with.

"Such an old gentleman should be accompanied by an old lady, who constitutes what is most characteristic to the local color of Saloniki. The foundation of her costume is a petticoat of some dark silk and a white bodice crossed below her throat—a very thin bodice, cut very low at the neck and unstiffened by any such mail as western women find themselves with.

"Over this superstructure the old lady wears a dark satin bolero lined with fur and two striped silk aprons, one before and one behind. The latter is caught up on one side, some corner of it being apparently tucked into a mysterious pocket. But the crown and glory of the old lady is her headdress, a sort of fat frame tightly wound about the head and surmounted by handkerchief and crowned with an

MANY OFFICERS HAVE REVERTED TO RANKS

Wished to Get Overseas Quickly With Artillery

(Ottawa Journal Press)

A large draft of artillery men and officers are leaving for the front in a very short time. These men have been eagerly awaiting sailing orders for the past month, as nearly all of them have claims already in France serving the Canadian guns.

A feature of this draft is the large number of officers who have given up their commissions and reverted to the ranks, that they might get into action sooner. Four qualified artillery officers enlisted as gunners during the last three days at the Base Recruiting Office on Sparks street.

The artillery has been the great magnet for the majority of the young men of Ottawa. The stories that have come back from their friends at the front, describing the exciting times they were enjoying, has been the stimulant which caused many to join this branch of the service. Another thing that has attracted many is the fact that the field artillery is a mounted unit and the course of training is interesting, instructive, and certain to improve every man.

All the Kingston batteries are well filled with Ottawa boys, and another attractive branch of the artillery, the divisional ammunition column, is already forming in the Kingston and University students joined this unit last week, and Lieut. Frank Shanghnessy expects to land a lot of McGill men in a few days, as several have written him expressing their willingness to go with him.

The men in the divisional ammunition column take the same drill with the guns and horses as the men in the batteries. They mark quality as gunners and drivers.

They will train at Petawawa, and will go over early in the summer. "Shag" has several good athletes going with him, and expects to have a champion ball team.

Mr. Joseph Zivian, secretary of the Returned Soldiers' Association, has asked him to put on some games for the benefit of the association, and he has agreed to bring a team to Ottawa for a few games during the summer.

"PROGRESS" IS WATCHWORD OF CANADIAN WOMEN

Jean Blewett, the Noted Author, Sifts Its Meaning and Drives Home Its Application

"Progress is the watchword of Canadian women for the year of grace 1917," proclaims Jean Blewett, in the current issue of "Everywoman's World."

"Progress is power, the power which refusing to be subjugated, coerced, or

Zutoo
Will cure any headache in 20 minutes, will nip a cold in the bud, will relieve all rheumatic pains of women, and in every case it turned aside, comes in time to the goal of its desires. Progress! Close your eyes and you can see the first untried believer in better things taking his first stumbling step forward. Cover your ears to shut out the clamor of the world about you, and you can hear the marches of the conquering marches of might, marches of wrath, marches of weariness. Hark to the footfalls, heavy and worn, strong footfalls, light ones, quick ones, slow ones, but all pressing onward; jubilant footfalls which seem to ring out with solemn sweetness—How beautiful upon the mountains—carry tidings—great joy! Marches in the night, the dawn, the day; broken marches; glad and glorious marches; silent, obscure marches; marches with flaming banners and martial music, clanging straight, to heaven's gate—and beyond.

"Progress—a word big enough and great enough to stand for all that the storms of earth, the good and the great of earth, the saints, the martyrs, the fearless fighters of earth have accomplished, or will accomplish, yet not too big or great to be the watchword of our Canadian women in this day of high endeavor and splendid achievement."

To Have Beautiful Hair Use

NEWBRO'S HERPICIDE

No woman can afford to be indifferent to the appearance of her hair. A mass of nice snappy hair, beomingly dressed, will add more to genuine looks than a pretty face, or an expressive eye. Don't allow the scalp to become clogged with dirt and dandruff. Don't allow dandruff to destroy your hair. If your hair is uneven, dead, dull and brittle and comes out by the handful every time you draw a comb through it, dandruff is the cause. To rid your scalp of the dandruff and check the loss of hair should be your first step. NEWBRO'S HERPICIDE will do this and at the same time restore the hair and scalp in a sanitary condition. HERPICIDE appeals to those of greatest refinement on account of its exquisite odor, its purity and cleanliness. It contains no grease and does not stain or dye. There is nothing more dependable than this remarkable scalp prophylactic. The hair responds readily to a prompt and faithful use of NEWBRO'S HERPICIDE.

Try it and see. Send 10 cents today to THE HERPICIDE CO., Dept. S, Detroit, Mich., for a sample and a booklet telling all about the hair.

Amazing Power of Bon-Opto To Make Weak Eyes Strong

Doctor Says It Strengthens Eyesight 50 per cent in One Week's Time in Many Instances

A Free Prescription You Can Have Filled and Use at Home

Victims of eye strain and other eye weaknesses will be glad to know that they will be glad to know that according to Dr. Bon-Opto, it lives a real joy and gift to them. Many who were were failing say they have used the Bon-Opto prescription remarkable prescription and many who once were almost blind say they now see clearly. One man says, after using it "I can actually read, which I had not been to read at all. Now I can read everything without glasses, and my eyes do not hurt any more. At night they would pain dreadfully but now they don't all the time. It was like a miracle to me." Still another says: "I have taken before second busy with or without glasses, but using the prescription for fifteen days everything seems clear and distinct, even in fine print without glasses. I cannot tell you how much it has bothered me to wear glasses. I was overworked my eyes, which induced fierce headache. I have worn glasses for reading, near and far distance and work, and without them I could not get along my own, same on a typewriter or the typewriting on the machine before and now I can do both and have discarded my long distance glasses altogether. I cannot count the number of times I have looked across the street now, which for several years I could not do with a fine print, and to me I cannot express my joy at what it has done for me."

Considering how many and multitudes more will be able to strengthen their eyes so as to be without glasses at the expense of ever getting glasses. Eye troubles of many descriptions may be wonderfully benefited by the use of this prescription at home. Go to your nearest druggist and get a bottle of Bon-Opto tablets. Drop one tablet in a glass of water, let it dissolve in water and let it dissolve. With this liquid bathe the eyes two to four times daily. You should notice your eyes clear up almost instantly. Inflammation, redness and soreness will quickly disappear. Even if your eyes are not bad a little it is your duty to take steps to have them strengthened. Don't wait until they become blind might have saved your eyes in time.

Any druggist or other prominent Physician to whom the above article was submitted, said: "Yes, Bon-Opto contains ingredients well known to eye experts. Its combined ingredients are well adapted to relieve many cases of weak eyes, sore eyes, and eyes needing glasses. It is used successfully in my own practice on patients whose eyes I have tested, and many of them report no need of glasses. I can highly recommend it in case of eye weakness, as it has shown unusual merit. Many of the ingredients are obtained from coconuts by a secret process, and are sold under the name of Optona, by the Optona Co., Inc., 1133 Broadway, New York City. Optona is the name to look for."

A Pernicious Hedging System

Ontario Liberals Still Busy Obstructing Legislative Progress

(Special Correspondence)

TORONTO, March 23.—Persistent and wilful hospitality to the reorganization of the Department of Agriculture in Ontario, is the attitude that has been adopted by the Liberals in the Legislature. From the Leader of the Opposition down, every member on that side of the House seeks to discourage the efforts of the Government to enlarge the organization of the Department and increase the services it can render to the agricultural industry.

The fact has been well established that the proposals of the Prime Minister, instead of impairing the work of the Department, will make for its greater usefulness. The appointment of a Commissioner of Agriculture is not in any sense a duplication of existing machinery, but an extension of facilities in the interest of agriculture.

Dr. Creelman, who has been appointed Commissioner, will hold the same relation to the Minister as does the late Dr. C. C. James held to the Minister of Agriculture at Ottawa. In fact it was brought out at the time Dr. James decided to go to Ottawa that he felt the work in Ontario was well in hand and he could render greater service to the country by entering the larger field.

Sir William Hearst in taking over the duties of Minister of Agriculture, has paid a distinct compliment to the farmers of Ontario. As Prime Minister he proposes to make a personal study of the agricultural situation, familiarize himself with the details of the organization, plan for extensions and then the department is in position to assume the after-war burdens which are sure to be heavy. This is done, he has announced, he will appoint a Minister of Agriculture, when he is satisfied that he has been able to make the best selection from the standpoint of the public welfare.

All this is constructive statesmanship. The Opposition have centered their criticism of the organization of the Department around the appointment of a Deputy Minister five years ago, on the supposition perhaps if a man has not followed the plough he is entirely unsuited to the administrative work of the Department, although the record of the Department show that the appointment has given every satisfaction.

But in the midst of this criticism some members on the Liberal side have risen above party exigencies and have given credit for some things the Department has done. Mr. G. H. Gillespie (West Peterboro) who was formerly President of the Eastern Ontario Dairymen's Association, commended the establishment of demonstration farms in every county, and would have them increased until they were within easy reach of every farmer. In this way the benefits of the Ontario Agricultural College would be brought home to the farmer in a practical and satisfactory way.

It is generally accepted now by those who have facilities for studying the situation in Ontario, that the progress that agriculture has made under the Conservative Government has kept pace with advancement along other lines, and as one in touch with the farming community knows, the farmers don't want to be paternalized, but by steady assistance and the introduction of improved methods of agriculture Ontario will maintain its premier position among the Provinces of Canada.

OTTAWA BI-LINGUAL SCHOOLS AGAIN

The Ontario Government is not sitting quietly back and accepting the slap administered by the Privy Council in declaring ultra vires the Act under which the Ottawa Schools Commission was appointed. In the House yesterday Hon. Dr. Pyne introduced legislation that will give the Government power to appoint another commission; this time, it is thought, in a way that cannot be attacked in the courts. The Minister of Education explained that the bill gave the Government the power to appoint a commission to carry on the Separate Schools of Ottawa, if the local board again failed to conduct the schools in accordance with law.

The school children of Ottawa were for months without classes. If the Separate School Board of Ottawa put those children in the same position again, we take the right to appoint a commission and carry on the classes. It may never be necessary to use that power. It won't be if the Ottawa board carries on the schools in accordance with the law."

To Mr. Marcau, the Minister stated that the bill was similar to the one of two years ago, but differed in some respects. The terms of the bill provide for the submission of the matter to the Supreme Court of Ontario if the question arises as to the sufficiency of reasons for bringing the Act into operation.

Protect Commissioners

Hon. Dr. Pyne also introduced a bill protecting the former commissioners against court actions instituted by the Government Separate School Board for the recovery of moneys expended while in control of the schools. It also protects the banks that did business with the commission.

RECRUITING

Four questions were submitted by a correspondent standing "Enquirer" to the Daily News and received the following answers:

(1) How many French-Canadian males between the ages of 16 and 60 are there in Canada?

The Census Bureau of Canada is unable to supply an answer to this question, mainly because the compilation of the enumerators is to deal with men from an electoral standpoint rather than a military. We know the number of males over 21 years of age in each Province, and it is possible that the number from 16 to 21 might be about as many as from 45 to 60 years of age. Of that we cannot be sure. The Province of Quebec reports 445,915 males over 21 born in Canada. This includes the English-speaking people.

(2) How many French Canadians have enlisted since the beginning of the war?

No officials figures of French enlistment have been issued. La Presse claims 25,000 but this includes an estimate of 6,000 among the 22,000 soldiers who formed the First Contingent. Everyone who was at Valcartier at that time, knows that this estimate is absurdly excellent sources of information, declared in October, 1915, a year after the first Valcartier Camp, that up to this latter date, and after 14 months of war, the total enlistment was not over 5,000. From the same sources it is learned today that not over 15,000 at most have been enrolled since this total has been greatly depleted by desertions.

(3) How many Canadian-born males of British descent—between the ages of 16 and 60 are there in Canada?

This question cannot be answered by the Canada Bureau, but we have of British-born outside of Canada 404,605 males over 21 years of age.

(4) How many Canadian born citizens have enlisted since the beginning of the war?

An answer from official sources is not available. Not a large proportion went with the First Contingent, but as the war wore on the enlistment of native Canadians increased. Those who are in touch with the small towns and cities of Ontario know how heavy the drain on the best young native Canadians has been. Tiverton, Kincardine, Parkhill, Forest, Orillia, Barrie, Belleville, Peterboro, Lindsay, and a hundred other communities find themselves with few of the young men class. On the other hand, the smaller towns of Quebec have almost as many young men as ever. St. Joseph de Beauce, the home of Dr. Beland, M.P., now a prisoner in Germany has contributed 18 soldiers to the army.

In a recent letter Mr. James S. Brierly, of Montreal, asked this question: "Why has French-Quebec contributed not more than 12,000 or 12,000 men to our overseas forces, when English-Quebec has given 24,000?" Why is French-Quebec's percentage of recruits to population as four-fifths of one per cent., while English-Quebec's percentage is 7.6 per cent., and Ontario's 5.57 per cent?" Mr. Brierley is an experienced and responsible Journalist and is in a position to know the Quebec situation as well as any man in Canada. All this is very significant.

SPORTING NEWS

FLEMING WAS FOULED

MONTREAL, March 22—Harry Condon, New York lightweight, was disqualified for fouling in the third round of a scheduled ten-round bout with Frankie Fleming, Canadian featherweight champion, at Sohmer Park here last night, and the bout was awarded to Fleming by Referee Picard, all bets being declared off. Condon was twice warned for roughing it.

Fleming outclassed Condon in the first two rounds, hitting many hard blows. After one minute of hard, fast fighting in the third Fleming backed on to the ropes and Condon closed striking two low blows in succession. Fleming was carried out of the ring and examined by two doctors, both of whom declared he was injured so that he was unable to continue.

PROTECT THE BREWERS

Relief for brewers who had large contracts for hops in force at the time the Ontario Temperance Act was passed is proposed in a bill introduced in the Legislative Assembly on the 21st inst., by Charles McCrae, M.P.P., of Sudbury. Mr. McCrae pointed out that when prohibition went into force several brewers were tied up by contracts covering as long as five years. They now had no use for the hops, and were faced with the alternative of buying them or becoming liable to action in the courts. The bill gives them protection against such action upon the principle that gives hotel keepers relief on long-term leases.

Colin S. Cameron, North Grey, proposes in a bill introduced yesterday that every assignee must use all due diligence in winding up the estate of the assignor, and must distribute to the creditors all money in hand together with the accrued interest thereon within one month after the assignment and must pass his accounts.

READ THE INTELLIGENCER

To City, Town and Village Dwellers in Ontario

"Many mickles make a muckle"

All our public men and leaders agree with increasing strength of conviction that, in the fateful days which lie before us in this sternest year of the war, the food supply is going to be a vital factor in the final decision.

The hour has arrived when the efforts of every man, woman and boy who can help to increase production will count in the scale of victory. The helpful possibilities of back yard gardening are immense. For instance, the Medical Health Officer of Toronto states that there are 2000 acres of available back yard garden space in that city. This space would be sufficient to grow enough vegetables to supply the whole community.

"A vegetable garden for every home"

The Ontario Department of Agriculture emphasizes the importance of vegetable growing to every one who has even a few square feet of ground. Do not think that your small effort will not be worth while. Every garden, however small, is worth while and will count in this critical year of world wide shortage of food.

The Department invites Horticultural Societies, lodges, school boards, Women's Institutes, to encourage vegetable growing by every one. Parents and guardians are requested to encourage boys and girls to grow vegetables and to give them every co-operation.

It is suggested that organizations arrange for addresses on vegetable growing by local expert gardeners. If these be not available, the Department of Agriculture will endeavor to send a speaker. It is urgently requested that applications for speakers be made promptly as the demand for them will be great and the number of available experts is limited.

The Department suggests stimulating interest by forming organizations to offer prizes for best vegetable gardens. Every possible assistance will be given any organization encouraging vegetable production on vacant lots.

Write for free literature giving instructions about implements necessary and methods of preparing the ground and cultivating the crop. A plan of a vegetable garden indicating suitable crop to grow, best varieties and their arrangement in the garden will be sent free of charge to any address.

Towns and villages have, as a rule, much larger garden spaces than the crowded and congested large city. Think of the effect upon the high cost of living if every one would grow vegetables! Think of the money saved that would otherwise be spent for vegetables, the labor that would be released for vital war work and the increase of the urgently needed surplus of food for export. Let the slogan for 1917 be,

Write for Poultry Bulletin which tells how to keep hens—the waste from the table in an average home is sufficient to feed them. They are not expensive to keep and you will be highly repaid in fresh eggs.

DISPLAYING EGGS IN STORE WINDOWS

At the present time when our every energy and effort is being put forward to increase the production of food products and make Canada more than ever before, a large factor in the winning of the war, one's attention naturally turns to the food stocks available, and the waste evidenced in their handling. With no commodity is waste so apparent as it is in the handling of eggs.

During the past few years special endeavor has been made to bring this matter to the attention of producers and the wholesale trade. This appeal, however, is addressed more particularly to retailers, many of whom do not seem to realize the extreme perishability of eggs.

It is a common practice at this season of the year for many retailers to advertise the increasing egg supply and the rapidly falling prices, by displaying piles of eggs in their store windows. The eggs thus exposed in many case, come under the direct rays of the sun, and are subjected to a temperature behind the plate glass window of about 100 degrees. The excessive heat resulting causes material deterioration through evaporation accompanied by loss of flavour. Furthermore, at this time of the year, a large percentage of the eggs marketed are fertilized, and as it is common knowledge that a temperature of 70 degrees is sufficient to start incubation, the possibility of serious deterioration will be readily seen.

It is good business to advertise, but window displays of eggs under the aim of the advertiser, in that the resulting deterioration of the eggs causes dissatisfaction among consumers, and so retards consumption. Eggs should be kept in the cleanest, coolest, driest place in the store, removed from moisture, foul odors, or other sources of contamination.

The food value of eggs, their freedom from waste, the saving in time, labor, and fuel in their preparation, and the favorable way they compare in price with other articles of food places them an important place in the diet of our people. Now, as never before in the history of the Dominion, the conservation of food supplies must be one of our chief considerations, and the waste now apparent in the handling of eggs that can be eliminated by careful and more up-to-date methods, is a consideration that will appeal to every citizen who has at heart the best interests of his fellow citizens, his country, and the Empire as a whole.

INDUSTRIAL TRAINING

Every year, more than 2,000,000 children and youths are recruited in the United States and Canada to industrial and commercial enterprises. School statistics show that 75 per cent of the children who enter school leave between 14 and 16 years of age to work in mills, factories and stores.

The percentage going to work at this age with definite training is negligible. These young recruits to industry are found to fill highly specialized tasks. Drifting from job to job, in later year, many settle down to become handy men and unskilled laborers. Hardly one in a hundred ever obtains a chance to become a skilled worker or master of a trade. What wonder that employers bewail the shortage of skilled workers and that its labor market is overstocked with thousands of unskilled workers.

To meet this situation Canada must provide some form of technical training whereby all who enter agricultural or industrial occupations shall be provided with at least the preliminary elements of vocational training.

SMUT IN GRAINS

Its Presence Means Loss of Millions of Dollars to Canadian Farmers

Contrary to increase production on Canadian farms it is to prevent the loss caused annually by smut in cereal grain. An average loss from smut of ten per cent of the crop means a loss of millions of dollars to the farmers of Canada. Losses have frequently run from 10 to 40 per cent on individual farms.

Agricultural surveys conducted by the Commission of Conservation have shown that a very small percentage of the farmers in the five eastern provinces treat their feed grain for the smuts, while among farmers in the prairie provinces this practice is general. It pays the western farmer to treat his seed and it will also pay the eastern farmer.

At the farmers' meeting recently held in Western Ontario, one farmer stated that he had purchased seed wheat which had a little "smut" or stinking smut in it, but thought it was not worthwhile treating it. As a result he had a badly smutted crop, causing a decreased yield and disagreeable threshing, and he was docked 20 cents per-bushel when he marketed it.

The formalin treatment for stinking smut of wheat and smut of oats is effective and easily applied. The formalin is mixed with water at the rate of one pound to 46 gallons of water, and the grain is either sprinkled with the solution or sprinkled with it until every kernel is thoroughly wet. The grain should then be placed in a pile and covered with sacks or blankets for several hours, or over night. It should then be dried sufficiently to run through the seeder. Care must be taken to prevent the treated grain from coming in contact with sacks, blankets or floors upon which there may be smut spores.

When the treatment has been properly performed, treated seed will practically always give better yields than untreated seed. Try it for yourself with your seed for 1917.—F.C.N.

NOW THE VARIETIES YOU SOW

During the summer of 1916 the Commission of Conservation conducted agricultural investigation work on 400 farms in Dundas county, Ont. It was found that nearly all the farmers were growing oats and barley. Of those growing oats, only 52 per cent knew the names of the varieties they were growing and only 13 per cents in the case of barley.

When a farmer is sowing an unknown variety of grain, he cannot be certain that it is the most suitable for his farm. Many farmers today are sowing a mixed crop of oats and barley and do not know the name of the variety of either. When late maturing oats are sown with early barley, the barley will ripen first and before the oats are ready to cut many heads will break down, with a consequent loss of barley on account of the broken down heads.

The farmer should know the varieties he sows. This will enable him to select for mixed crops the varieties which will ripen together and give the best results. Every farmer should know the name of each variety of crop grown on his farm, and, in each case it should be a variety of proven merit.

BASEBALL.

A LUCKY CATCH

It has developed that the Toronto Club was mighty lucky to secure Nap Lajoie to handle the managerial reins this season. The veteran baseball would probably have succeeded Dave Shean at Providence, but for the fact that President Draper, of the Gays, was disgusted with the way in which things were going, and neglected his interests. He was offered first chance to land "Larruping Larry" by President Ed. Barrow, but turned down the opportunity. It was then the local club stepped into the market and did business with the big fellow. Lajoie is tickled to death that he did not sign with Providence when he was first approached, as he is well content with his local surroundings. According to a Providence scribe, when Barrow heard that Lajoie was a free agent he wrote a letter to Draper suprising him of the fact, realizing that Providence, a weak link in his chain last year, would be considerably strengthened by the addition of such a star as Lajoie, who is a native of Woonsocket, R.I. But Draper didn't even answer him, and so Toronto landed the famous Frenchman. Now, with Dave Shean gone and the management post still open, the fans are not over-pleased at the idea that such a plum was allowed to drop into another basket.—Toronto News.

THE FIELD IN GENERAL

Seattle and the Canadiens battle to-night. Battle is the right name for it as long as 'Newsy' Lalonde and "Cully" Wilson are in the fray.

Dentals are coming home by easy stages. We don't expect as long as they bring the Allan Cup with them.

Dunsville and Hamilton may meet in a hockey game. Dunsville are champions of the Northern League, and should give the O.H.A. International date champions quite a battle.

The Dentals won at Chicago last night and if they will only do the same in Detroit we will be tickled to death.

Silk O'Loughlin and Hank O'Day will travel with the Red Sox and Dodgers on their spring tour as umpires. This added feature should alone be worth the price of admission.

An Eastern writer remarks that it is strange some title has been heard from Ty Cobb the past winter. The manager of the Allan Cup call for this style, ball in the summer time.

"Roxy" Roach, baseball jumper, says he won't sign with Louisville at the salary offered. He claims to have a good route making $200 a month. It must be located on Broadway, New York, to do that much business. Roxy was always somewhat of a romancer.

Percy Lancaster, of Havelock, will tackle anything once. He is going to run for the presidency of the O.A.A.A. Unless the big amateur lacrosse association cut down their list of officers they are liable to have more officials than clubs.

The advocates of seven-man hockey are basing on the fact that the rules of the Allan Cup call for this style, and this will mean it will be continued in the O.H.A. However, this is not right. If the O.H.A. adopt six-man hockey half the games would be played at this style.

THE RING

TORONTO RINGSTERS BEATEN IN ENGLAND

LONDON, March 23—Canadian boxers were beaten in every bout in the tournament arranged by Captain Tom Flanagan for the benefit of the Sportsmen's Ambulance Fund, at Holborne Stadium yesterday. Jimmy Wilde of England, beat Frankie Russell of the 180th Sportsmen's Battalion, of Toronto. Russell was sent down four times in the third round, when the referee intervened. Wilde is flyweight champion of the world. The bout was over the seven-round route.

Pte. Gus Platts, England, beat Pte. Danny Johnsone, 180th Sportsmen's Battalion, on points. In ten rounds Corly Walker, of England, beat Jimmy Clarke, of the 180th on points.

Driver Housego, of England, beat Charles Christie, of the 180th, the referee stopping the contest. In a six-round contest Pte. Ted Bull, of England, beat Corp. Tom Hickey on points. Russell exhibited considerable cleverness, but he was no match for the hard-hitting Welsh, who is a marvel at his weight. Danny Johnstone put up a good argument and showed much aggressiveness, while Christie was a little bit too slow for his opponent.

KINGSTON SPEAKS!

The old "Limestone City" is all worked up over Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. In nearly every home someone is trying out the restorative upbuilding influence of this great food cure. The newspapers are daily reporting cures effected. As Spring approaches more and more will find the need of this famous blood builder to keep up vitality. These are interesting letters:

Dizzy Spells

Mrs. Nellie Harding, 377 Earl St., Kingston, Ont., writes: "Last winter I was suffering from nervousness, headaches and dizzy spells. The headache and dizziness were so bad that I used to faint. I didn't know just what to do, until a friend advised me to use Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. So I got a box and followed up the treatment, with splendid results. Now I have not had a fainting experience, and I can sleep quite well. I would recommend this treatment to anyone suffering from nervousness, dizziness or rundown system."

Sleeplessness

Mrs. F. Truesdale, 9 Lower Charles street, Kingston, Ont., writes: "For some time I suffered from nervousness and sleeplessness, and I attributed it to the fact that I was alone so much with my child, my husband being a sailor. But after trying one box of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I found I could go to bed at night and get a good night's rest, despite the fact of being alone. I have found excellent results from Dr. Nerve Food, and recommend it with confidence to all suffering as I did from nervousness and sleeplessness. I also used some Nerve Food for my little boy, eight years old, and found it quieted his nerves and made him sleep better."

Weak Heart

Mrs. G. Storring, 13 St. Catharine Street, Kingston, Ont., writes: "I have been suffering for the last few years with nervousness, headaches, so that my eyeballs would fairly split, dizziness and weakness of the heart and a generally run-down condition. I doctored for several years with different doctors, but without getting relief. Through reading one of your booklets I was thought that possible I could get benefit from Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, so I decided to try it, got one box, took the pill, and, feeling better, followed it up with more. Now I am feeling much better and stronger, and able to get around and do my work without difficulty. I would recommend Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to anyone suffering from nervousness and run-down condition."

Restless, Sleepless

Mrs. S. S. Schofield, 124 Bagot Street, Kingston, writes: "About a year ago I got run down, suffering from nervousness, and could not get a good night's rest. From reading one of your little books I began taking Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and after taking the Nerve Food treatment I found great relief. I recommend this to anyone suffering as I was, with nervousness. My husband also used some of the Nerve Food, and was relieved of nervousness."

Headache

Mrs. B. Robinson, 359 Alfred Street, Kingston, Ont., writes: "Some months ago I was suffering from severe nervous headaches, sleeplessness and general run-down condition. I was so bad at times that I would have to go to bed. From remembering that my grandmother always resorted to Dr. Chase's remedies, I decided to try the Nerve Food, and found it gave me great relief. I am now gaining in weight and feeling much better in every way."

Gained in Weight

Mrs. G. Brown, 115½ Cerrgy W. Kingston, Ont., writes: "Last year ago last summer I was badly run down and so nervous that I could not sleep at night, but would have to get up and walk around. I had no appetite, had pains in my stomach and back. I sent for a box of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and found it gave such good results that I kept up the treatment until I had taken five boxes. I have gained in flesh, my nervousness is gone, and I can eat as much in one day as I used to in a week. I sleep well and have not had a sick headache for a long time."

"Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is worth a lot of money to any person that is suffering like I did; it makes a person feel young and full of life, not downhearted and dull. I am glad to recommend it to all suffering from nervousness, sick headaches and run-down conditions."

Exhausted Nerves

Mr. W. E. Moore, No. 4, Lower Quebec St., Kingston, Ont., writes: "About five years ago I was suffering from nervous trouble, pains in my back and general run-down condition, and was next door to dying a couple of times. I was so nervous at times that I could not get a cup of tea to my lips. Sometimes I would never close my eyes during the whole night, and if I did get to sleep would waken with a jump. Through seeing the effect of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food on a friend of mine I was induced to try it. After taking a treatment I found a great improvement; could sleep well and am enjoying good health at present. At times, if I am not feeling up to the mark, I use some Nerve Food. I wish to recommend the use of Dr. Chase's Food to persons suffering from nervousness, sleeplessness and run-down condition."

Soldiers Held Owing To Danger

Many Canadians Must Remain in Old Country For the Present

TORONTO, March, 23—The Liberals kept up a running argument, as the Provincial Highway bill was passed through committee in the Legislature yesterday. When the bill was taken up, Mr. Pyne, South Grenville Huron, returned to the attack on the Government in connection with the absence of an estimate of cost. How, Mr. MacDiarmid stated that an estimate at the present time could only be guessed at. No engineer would estimate upon a highway that had not been definitely located and which would not be started until away in the future.

The Minister stated that the highway would run from Windsor to Montreal and would serve fifty per cent. of the people of the province. Sam Clarke, of West Northumberland, admitted it might but he claimed that it would not serve fifteen per cent. of the agricultural population, and over a large part of the route would be largely a "joy ride" for motorists.

George H. Gooderham, of Southwest Toronto, reminded Mr. Clarke that the Government's share of the highway would be paid for, out of revenue owned by motorists.

Mr. Rowell pressed Mr. MacDiarmid for a statement as to the route for the highway, remarking that the Minister must have the route in mind. The Minister stated clearly that the exact route, the towns and cities through which it would pass, had not been decided upon.

Most people who have such a need in use to find it it breaks, and then the neighbors are glad.

FOR CATARRH-CATARRHAL DEAFNESS OR HEAD NOISES YOU SHOULD TRY PARAMINT

If you have Catarrh, Catarrhal Deafness or Head Noises caused by Catarrh, or if phlegm drops in your throat and has caused Catarrh of the stomach or bowels you should secure a proper treatment at once. Don't Neglect Catarrh! Don't let it make you into a worn-out, run-down Catarrhal wreck.

Remember Catarrh is more than a trifling ailment—more than a disgusting disease. It's a Poisonous one. Unchecked it frequently destroys smell, taste and hearing. It clogs the nostrils and slowly but surely undermines the general health.

Sprays, salves and inhalers may bring you a temporary relief but permanent results can only come from a constitutional treatment that will expel the Catarrhal poisons from your system.

If you are a victim of Catarrh and have not been able to find relief from your trouble, go to your druggist today and get an ounce of Parmint, about 75c worth, take this home and add to it four ounces of sugar and ¼ pint hot water. It acts upon the blood and mucous membrane and has brought relief to those who thought there was no help for their trouble. Parmint has been used in the treatment of Catarrh throughout Europe for many years. A Parmint Inhaler of the American druggists shows that it is the most successful used in this country where it is producing satisfactory results in localities where Catarrh is most prevalent.

To be able to breathe freely, to hear distinctly, to taste and relish food in the morning refreshed and strong and with head and throat free from phlegm, are conditions that you should strive to acquire.

For your own sake give Parmint a trial. Certainly you cannot enjoy and get the good out of life that you are justly entitled to so long as you are afflicted with Catarrh.

Start with Parmint NOW, today. It may bring you a relief and give you a wider margin of health than you thought it possible to obtain.

Parmint is sold and recommended in this city by all first class druggists.

Any druggist can supply you, or a bottle will be sent on receipt of 75c, postal note or money order. Address International Laboratories, 74 St. Antoine St., Montreal, Canada.

Music and Drama

"THE GIRL WHO SMILES"

Despite the inclement weather last night it was a fine and appreciative audience which assembled at Griffin's Opera House to witness a musical comedy in three acts, entitled, "The Girl Who Smiles." It was presented in such a manner as to be most pleasing and even instructive. Besides having the merit of more than ordinary musical novelty, the comedy may truly be designated in the light of a theatrical comedy, with a plot. There is running through it scenes, which at times are even pathetic, and is full of pathos. In brief the story deals with Monsieur Paul Fabre, a wealthy and grouchy old father who has long forgotten his own childhood and cannot abide sounds of youthful mirth in his household, and his daughter Marie who has never been known to smile until she meets Francois Dechanelle, a poor artist, of the happy-go-lucky Latin Quarter, who teaches her the meaning of love. Forced by her father into an unhappy engagement, Marie runs away to Dechanelle's little studio. Here surrounded by composers, artists, musicians, and other care-free but happy Bohemians she learns the gentle art of smiling, and after a years or so, returns to the home of her father and a reconciliation is effected through the appearance of baby boy, who resembles his grandad. This scene is unusual in musical comedy. During the production some twenty songs are rendered and in a manner most pleasing. Possibly the best and most catchy number is that entitled, "Teach Me to Smile," given by Marie and Francois, both of whom are clever singers. The choruses were also well given by a well balanced company, all of whom reflect well the parts assigned them. The scenic effects of the play are all that could be desired. It was without doubt one of the best and most pleasing productions presented here in some time and the management is to be congratulated in securing same for the pleasure of a Belleville audience.

LOUISE HUFF AND JACK PICKFORD AT GRIFFIN'S MONDAY

Louise Huff and Jack Pickford appear at Griffin's Monday and Tuesday evening in the Famous Players picturization of Booth Tarkington's delightful novel, "Seventeen." On the same programme with this five part offering, the Mutual News Weekly, and two selected comedies are also announced for presentation.

UNDER TWO FLAGS HAS LONG RECORD IN STAGE AND STORY

Blanche Bates Acted Cigarette at Academy of Music in 1901.

"Under Two Flags," the novel by Ouida which the genius of William Fox has turned into a film masterpiece, with Theda Bara in the leading role, is a story of French army life in Algeria, dramatic swing and martial atmosphere run through the plot, which Miss Bara, by her superb acting, has interpreted with her usual art, this story has enjoyed a long history in its printed form, and as a piece for the stage. Many dramatic versions of the novel have been acted, the most important being Paul M. Potter's who also dramatized du Maurier's "Trilby." A strange thing about the play is that it was given at the academy of music, in 1901, with Blanche Bates in the role of Cigarette. The same theatre now owned by William Fox, and his pictures are shown there regularly. "Under Two Flags" returned to this playhouse recently after an absence of fifteen years.

PEG O' MY HEART AT GRIFFIN'S WEDNESDAY

This charming comedy is coming to Griffin's and will be presented next Wednesday night by the United Producing Company. Everyone knows this popular company, and may be sure that they will give a fine cast and charming staging of it, for they have picked the members of the cast by their fitness, physically and temperamentally, to interpret their roles, is one of the features that makes the performance really worth while. Marion Dentice, the Moroso-Star, has again been chosen to play the role of "PEG" the Irish mad-cap, and one of the most fascinating dramatic creations of modern times.

Peg comes out to England and falls immediately in the midst of an English family of aristocratic relatives with strict traditions. She walks into the library with her shabby travelling bag and shabby, though real, dog under her arm.

It seems she was willed on the Chichesters by a relative just dead. She is the daughter of a runaway sister of the family, who married beneath her station and went off to America. Peg has had no advantages except poverty, which less her see something of life. Her Irish father, whom she describes as the best man in the world, gave her a quaint brogue and a quick and very little else except her looks, which are quite out of the ordinary.

The light and shades of contrast between the conventions petrified the Chichesters, and naturally Peg forms the basis for the humor situations in the play, falls in love with Sir Gerald, a young executor of the will which has provided for Peg, whom she first knows under the name of "Jerry." She makes him take her to a dance which she is forbidden to attend, and afterwards stops her cousin from running away with a married man with whom she is infatuated.

Seats go on sale at Doyle's on Monday morning.

EVA BOYLE SENTENCED

Montreal Woman is Given Seven Year Term

MONTREAL, Que., March 23.—Eva Boyle, a married woman, who shot and killed Albert Haynes, her sweetheart, on Pine avenue, in the early hours of January 6, was sentenced this morning to seven years in penitentiary, by Mr. Justice Lavergne.

The prisoner, who was a munitions worker, asserted that she had shot Haynes because he was going to desert her. She turned the revolver against herself, inflicting a wound in the chest. She lingered for weeks between life and death. She formerly worked in a Pembroke factory.

Thinks Farmers Should Go Easy

Are Taking Chance in Refusing Govt. Offer—May Lose by Selling Wheat On Market

OTTAWA, March 23.—The Minister of Commerce has issued a statement in respect to the recent refusal of the Western farmers to accept the British Government's offer for wheat. After pointing out that Britain has purchased the entire Australian wheat crop at $1.12 per bushel; that it declined to get its wheat supply as far as possible from Empire sources; and that the geographical position of Canada, taken in connection with sea conditions and shortage of transport tonnage, makes it of great importance that its surplus should be at the disposal of the British Government," the Minister of Trade and Commerce goes on to say:

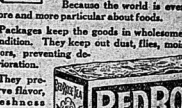
"Whilst no price was definitely fixed upon in the communications with the British Government, yet a possible rate was canvassed by talking as a basis the price paid the British farmer, with adjustments and deductions for freight and cost from Fort William to Europe. One can come pretty closely to it by taking that base price as being about $1.82 to the British farmer and making his own calculations.

"The Council of Agriculture advised that the lowest possible price acceptable would be a flat rate of $1.70 per bushel for No. 1 northern at Fort William, or preferably a guarantee of prices from a minimum of $1.50 to a maximum of $1.90. This latter appears very much like making the price $1.90 for all, or defeating the purpose of the Government in obtaining certain supply.

"There are some considerations which will naturally suggest themselves to the farmers as to what constitutes a reasonable and safe price.

"The rate paid for No. 1 northern does not indicate the price the farmer will get for his whole crop On an average he will have less of No. 1 than of the lower grades. The farmer well knows the spreads to which, under the present method of purchase, he is subject on wheat of good milling value, but of inferior grades as certified. If, on the other hand, the British Government buys all its millable wheat in terms of its milling value and buys it from the farmer himself and not from the speculator, the farmer gets the full price for all. He does not have to divide with anyone."

The statement goes on to point out to the farmer that in turning down the British offer they are taking a chance in the open market, that they are giving up a profitable sale now for a gamble later on; that they should consider questions of difficulty in ocean transport which may seriously affect prices.



People More Particular

THE demand for package goods grows greater every year. Why?

Because the world is ever growing more and more particular about foods.

Packages keep the goods in wholesome, sanitary condition. They keep out dust, flies, moisture and odors, preventing deterioration.

They preserve flavor, freshness and strength—insuring value for the money.

Sir Sam Hughes in Great Demand in United States as After Dinner Speaker

OTTAWA, March 23rd—General Sir Sam Hughes arrived in Ottawa last night after a visit to Boston and Hartford, where he was the guest of honor at two large banquets given by the Chambers of Commerce of these cities. He described himself as deeply impressed with the spirit of patriotism shown at these gatherings which he addressed.

"The most enthusiastic meeting I have ever seen," he said of the banquet at Boston. "Boston has always been the central point of the United States in the great cause of human liberty, and the meeting which I attended demonstrated that the spirit is still alive and is quickening."

Next Monday, General Hughes will address the Chamber of Commerce of Rochester, N.Y. He will speak at Chicago next month.

Urgent Need Of Farm Help

Lieut. Governor and Premier of Ontario Appeals For Co-Operation From Available People

The following telegram was received this (Saturday) morning from Toronto. It expresses clearly the need of the hour, and it is to be hoped that every possible assistance will be rendered.

THE TELEGRAM
Toronto, March 24th, 1917.
Editor The Intelligencer,
Belleville, Ont.

The call of the Empire for more food is urgent, but the Ontario farmer cannot respond unless labor is available for seeding, which commences early in April. Immediate action is imperative if assistance is to be given. Will your patriotic committee kindly call an emergency meeting and ascertain whether retired farmers and others in your community are willing to help. Co-operation with Boards of Trade and other organizations interested is advisable. Your co-operation should be gratefully appreciated.

R. D. Davies Claims Damages for Indignities

TORONTO, March 23.—Because he was arrested, thrown in jail, and later paraded with other prisoners handcuffed and escorted through Montreal streets afterwards, found to be groundless, Benjamin D. Davies, of Toronto, is suing the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for $1,000 damages.

In September, 1915, Mr. Davies left here for Montreal with some horses for his brothers. On alighting from the train at Montreal he was placed under arrest on a charge of stealing a ride. He explained to the officials that he was entitled to travel with the horses, according to the contract. On Saturday he was being again taken to the police court when the C. P. R. police court police met him, and remarked that they were "in wrong" let him go.

On Monday he saw the magistrate, and was told that the charge against him had been dismissed.

He bases his damage claim on injury to reputation and suffering on body and mind.

WISHES TO REACH FRONT

Hon. P. E. Blondin Will Take Course at Once

OTTAWA, March 23—Hon. P. E. Blondin, now [illegible] has enlisted for overseas wishes to get into the midst of the "big push" as soon as possible. He is afraid the raising of a battalion might mean a delay of six months or more, and he desires to reach France by June. He probably will proceed at once to take a military course and then leave for the front.

BATHE ETERNALLY

OVER 500,000 PEOPLE ARE NOW DOING SO

For many years physicians have agreed that the vast majority of human ills were caused by accumulated waste in the Lower Intestine; that in our present way of living Nature could not remove all this waste without assistance, no matter how regular we might be, and that the poisons from this waste circulating through the blood pulled us away down below par and were responsible for many diseases of a serious nature.

During this time the "J. B. L. Cascade" for Internal Bathing has become universally known and recommended, and those of its users been steadily growing in favor.

Recently however, the startling news which has been covering this country, that great surgeons and specialists have been operating on the Lower Intestine for the most chronic and serious diseases, had caused Americans to become thoroughly awake to the importance of keeping this Lower Intestine free from all poisonous waste matter, and over 500,000 are now using Internal Baths.

If you try the "J. B. L. Cascade" you will find yourself always bright, confident and capable—the poisonous waste makes us bilious, blue, dull and nervous. Internal Bathing is Nature's own cure for Constipation and warm water properly applied. Drugs force Nature—the "J. B. L. Cascade" gently assists her.

Ice In The Moira River Breaking Up

The prevailing mild weather of the past few days, the downpour of rain yesterday, accompanied by a heavy wind, had the effect of breaking up the ice in the river, but fortunately the only damage resulted was the flooding of some yards and cellars on the west side of Front street.

At 9.30 last night the ice between the lower and upper bridges commenced to move and was taken down the river as far as the C.N.R. and C.P.R. bridges. At a few minutes before 6 o'clock this morning there was a second move, caused by a considerable quantity of ice coming down the river from above the upper bridge. This shove was carried down below the railway bridge to the mouth of the harbor, where it stopped. A quantity of ice was carried over the roadway leading to Victoria Park. Railings over two of the culverts were carried away. This blockade had the effect of backing up the water to a considerable depth. A few cakes of ice were carried over the dock near Allen's coal yard, in the southwest part of the city.

Another shove occurred at 2 o'clock this afternoon, owing to a field of broken ice coming down from Canifton and Corbyville. As it was impossible for it to get beyond the bank of ice already in the southern part of the river, it had the effect of backing up the water to an unusual height, and its only outlet was over the banks, flooding several yards. In some cases horses and vehicles were under sheds, and were after some difficulty, removed to dry land. Two guy wires attached to the foot bridge were carried ... number of large pieces of timber, which had the appearance of being wrestled from dams located along the river. ...

HEADS OR TAILS?

By ESTHER VANDEVEER

"Excuse me, Tom," she said one day, "but if I am to be your wife I think I have a right to know whether it is to be months or years before the wedding."

"I wish I could tell you, but I can't. I'm afraid you'll have to wait till I am in a position to say 'Name the day.'"

"Why can't I know what contributes to or detracts from your ability to say that?"

"Well, you had better not know the many drawbacks that continually come up before me. Naturally they are discouraging. If I told you about them they would fret you. That would react on me, and instead of having only myself to bolster up I would have you also."

There the matter dropped.

One evening when he called on her she was not at home. He called again several times during the week and she was always away. Sunday evening he found her in. He mentioned having called without seeing her and expected her to give a reason for not being at home. She went on talking about other matters without doing so. He did not ask for an explanation, but when the next week he again found her out every evening that he called he expressed surprise at the change in her habits.

"I presume you consider," she said, "that you have a right to know everything that I do. I don't admit that you have. We are not married and may never be married. Even when married you will only have a right to know what I am doing provided I know the same of you."

This was a view of the matter he had not considered. He was aware that it was intended as retaliation for his own refusal to give her his confidence, and he had nothing further to say.

Not long after this he took a partner in his business. Quite likely had not this withdrawal of confidence on both sides taken place he might have mentioned the fact of this addition to the firm and given the reason for it. It would certainly have been a pleasant matter to communicate, for the additional capital brought him almost certainly insured his success. But the struggle was on between the lovers, and one withholding of confidence brought another. She heard of the change in her lover's firm, but not from him.

It had scarcely occurred when he informed her that his affairs were now in such condition that he would be pleased to have her name the day. She named one year from the next first of January, in all about fifteen months.

By this time he was ready for any counterstroke she might make in this battle of denied confidences and did not ask her why she proposed to make him wait so long. But it did not suit her purpose to leave him in ignorance. She had accepted the position of assistant to a wealthy woman who was president of a society of suffragists and in consideration of certain advances made by her employer had agreed to serve eighteen months. She was busy most of the day and in the evening wrote a great many letters in the president's name.

She had hoped that he would show some disappointment in having to wait so long for her, but if he felt it he controlled its expression. He merely said that, such being the case, they would have to wait, but since a great deal might happen in a year and a half, perhaps it would be better to leave the matter of the wedding day open. She didn't like this; her idea was to tie him down to a fixed day and make him wait for it.

He did not call so often as formerly, giving as a reason that he did not care to draw her away from her duties. She said that the correspondence had been delegated to another, and her evenings would be free. Nevertheless he confined his visits to Sunday nights.

This status was maintained till the period of her engagement with the president was about to expire, when her lover informed her that his business would require a six months' trip abroad, and the wedding had better be postponed till after his return. This was a home thrust, but she had a counterstroke ready. She told him that she concurred heartily. She had been offered the position of secretary to a wealthy bachelor and would like to try it for awhile. It would therefore suit her to postpone the day for a year instead of six months.

This was playing the joker. He cursed inwardly, but not outwardly. He said that a year's interval before the marriage would suit him very well. He was to leave on his trip in a week and would call the day before sailing to say goodby.

She went up to her room, locked the door and had a good cry.

The day before he was to sail he called. The hour was 4 in the afternoon. The ship was to be pulled out at 2 the next morning.

"I am going to flip a coin," he said.

She abated her pride so far as to ask him what for, and he said he would tell her if it came down heads up. If it came down tails there would be nothing to tell.

It came down heads.

"I flipped," he said, "to determine whether we should contiue this nonsense longer or that we be married this evening, go aboard the ship by midnight and take the trip together. It was heads that we do."

She flew upstairs to do her packing. They were on board by 11 p m.

ANTI-WAR CAMPAIGN IN PROVINCE OF QUEBEC

Murder Threatened—Volunteering Opposed by Propogandists —Roman Catholic Prelates Against Conscription

MONTREAL, March 23—The "down with conscription" propaganda is gaining ground in the Province of Quebec. It has reached the stage where threatening letters are being sent prominent French-Canadians who have come out in favor of the enforcement of the Militia Act, advising them that their lives are in danger unless certain actions recently taken are rescinded. Public protests have been made against the proposal to enforce the Militia Act by Mayor Medéric Martin, Alderman Vandelac and others. Stickers reading: "Down with conscription" in both French and English have been prominently stuck up in various parts of the city. The movement has attained no mean proportions.

Threats of Death

Mr. Zepherin Hebert, President of the Board of Trade, and several militia officers have been recipients of letters threatening death unless they abandon their stand with reference to the enforcement of the Militia Act. These missives are written in English, apparently by an educated Frenchman, signed "Vengeance," and ornamented with a dagger. The declaration is made that those back of the movement are prepared to back up their threats, that they have snipers who will not miss their targets, and that they might as well die here in defence of their principles as anywhere else. The demand is made to Mr. Hebert that the Board of Trade rescind the motion recently carried enthusiastically by that body, to the effect that it considered the Government should immediately use all measures within its power to bring enlistments up to the required standard.

Ordered Posters Removed

Little attention is being paid these messages by the recipients, but they go to show what extent the propaganda has attained. Mr. Hebert left a message at the Board of Trade office that no notice be taken of the communication he received, and gave orders that the "Down with Conscription" posters which had been conspicuously pasted up throughout the building occupied by the Board be removed.

Mayor Martin's protest did not accomplish the desired object, for his attempt to bring on a debate in the Council was frustrated by a "next meeting" call. The mayor's letter protesting against the action taken by the Board of Trade was read, however, and a lively debate on the subject was will under way before discussion was headed off. At the conclusion of the meeting, it was announced that a special meeting of the Council had been called for Friday when a motion of Alderman Mayrand on the subject will be submitted.

Protests "Forcing Hand."

The mayor asserted that he considers the resolution of the Board of Trade a most inopportune one, and has protested energetically against what he termed "this effort to force the hand of the Federal authorities." He went on to say that he thought it well for the Council to adopt such a resolution as was deemed advisable, and to transmit it to the Federal authorities. A draft resolution which His Worship had prepared was enclosed with the letter he had written on the subject. In this he declares that the members of the Council have always been of the opinion that Canada should bear a large share of the sacrifices for the triumph of the Allies, but "it believes it is duty to declare that the resolution adopted by the Board of Trade would not be, under the circumstances, the most efficacious means to aid their cause and to do what the interests of the country and the Empire require."

"Would Paralyze Industry."

In Mayor Martin's opinion the enforcement of the Militia Act would "cause serious perturbation and it would paralyze agriculture and industry, by removing therefrom the support they absolutely need, and would prevent us from supplying to the Empire and to the Allies indispensable things for the conduct of the war." The mayor then goes on to urge the needs of increased production, and declares that the putting into force of obligatory service to that end should be the objective of immediate and serious study by those who are charged with the Government of the country.

"To Aid England"

Aside from the fact that it pay tribute to the courage and loyalty of the officers and men who through patriotism have left their families to aid England and her Allies," the motion which Ald. Mayrand introduced is substantially the same as that brought before the meeting by the mayor.

The most outspoken member of the Council is Alderman Vandelac who advised a crowd which filled St. Jean Baptiste Hall on the call of the Federation des Clubs Ouvrier not to sign the National Service cards, arguing that such action was some sort of an engagement to let the Government do what it willed with the signer. One speaker at the same meeting asserted that the movement was merely one to find out who were fit for military duty. Condemnation of the Board of Trade, for its stand on the question, was expressed in a motion which was passed by the meeting and it was decided:

Resolution of Protest

"Whereas certain capitalists derive profit from the war at the present time, and many of them would be beneficiaries directly, in that they would receive more war orders, on account of any increase in the Canadian forces:

"Whereas the members of the Government have pronounced themselves against military service;

"Whereas the Prime Minister Sir Robert Borden, in the session of 1916, speaking after the leader of the Opposition, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, formally declared that there would be no conscription in Canada;

Whereas the Canadian effort should be concentrated on agricultural production the economic side of the war, so as to find a remedy for the present high cost of living.

"Whereas the present Government's term expired in 1916, and it does not, therefore, legally represent the Canadian people, and it is urgent that the Government should make a declaration on this question;

"It is resolved that we citizens ..... protest with all our energy against the resolution of the Board of Trade, asking the application of the Militia Act in Canada, and that moreover, we are completely opposed to every sort of conscription or obligatory military service in Canada until the present Government has been consulted that the Canadian people by referendum or by a general election, and that at all costs the people must be consulted."

"The Abattoir of War"

In the course of his address at the meeting at which the above resolution was passed, Ald. Vandelac declared that he was against conscription, and said that he thought all Canada's brave children would hesitate to send them to the abattoir of war.

At the conclusion of this meeting it was stated that similar meetings would be held throughout the city, and most of the speakers declared that they would persist even in the face of threats of imprisonment.

On the same day that this campaign was being waged against conscription Ottawa that Montreal would be expected to mobilize five thousand soldiers there as quickly as possible for home defence.

LATER

Ottawa, March 23—The "Down with Conscription" propaganda is gaining serious ground in the Province of Quebec. A systematic campaign is being carried on with Montreal as headquarters and an effort is being made to incite feeling not only against conscription, but against any further effort in the war—even voluntary. How much of the movement is political is not known, but it is noteworthy that Liberal members of Parliament and Liberal candidates are particularly active in the campaign.

It was knowledge of this situation and the danger of riots in certain parts of Quebec, which led the Government to go slow in putting even the Militia Act in force. It was felt that every possible voluntary effort should be given an opportunity. The Nationalists in Quebec have already stated they would be willing to defend our own shores. They now have their opportunity.

Prelates Opposed to Conscription

Montreal, March 23—La Reviel revived under the name of La Laberte printed last evening the following despatch from Quebec: "Dr. Baril, president general of the Catholic Association of Canadian Youth of Montreal, and one of his colleagues, were in Quebec yesterday.

"They came especially to consult His Eminence Cardinal Begin, and His Grace Mgr. Roy concerning the establishment of conscription in Canada. They had a long interview with the Cardinal-Archbishop. We are in a position to announce that the answer of the Archbishop of Quebec, and one of his colleagues, to the questions of the two officers of the association were categorical. They were absolutely against conscription. On the subject we know further that His Eminence told us that he was preparing a letter to the Government on the subject to the effect that the establishment of conscription in Canada would be against

WHY NOT?

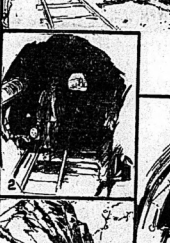
An Appeal to the Opponents of Union

By the Rev. HUGH PEDLEY, D.D., of Montreal

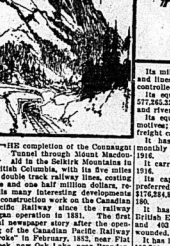
FOR over fourteen years the question of the fusion of the Presbyterian, Methodist, and Congregational Churches in the United Church of Canada has been a subject of earnest and practical discussion. During that time a Joint Committee of over one hundred men have been at work with a view to discover a comprehensive and practical basis of union. They have met with unexpected success. The basis of Union finally framed represents practical unanimity on the part of the framers. This is a very significant and important fact.

But an opposition has sprung up in one of the churches—the Presbyterian—whose object, boldly avowed, is to frustrate this endeavor after union. It is much easier to explain this opposition than it is to justify it. But it should be justified and by the men involved. What the logicians call the burden of proof lies with them. The question they have to answer is, Why should not this Union be consummated? Why not? and the answer must be such as to take into account at least five considerations.

The first is that the New Testament is in its entire spirit and outlook on the side of Union. I defy any one to read the Gospels and rise from the reading with any other conviction than that Jesus was on the side of Union. I challenge any one to read the letters of Paul to the Corinthian Church and not be impressed by the horror with which he regards any tendency to break up into sects. It startles him as if a fire were about to break forth or a nest of snakes to be hatched.



The second is that the mature judgment of the world is behind the principle that strength lies in unity. "United we stand, divided we fall" is a maxim that has its roots striking down into generations of experience.



The third is that negotiations, which been carried far forward, have involved patient labor and large expense, and at two pivotal points received clear and determining impulse from Presbyterian leaders. Principal Patrick, of Winnipeg, whose words had the impartiality of a newly-arrived but well disciplined mind, and Principal Cavan of Toronto, whose deliverance had the weight of a life-long experience in Canada, have assumed no light responsibility who had to render futile all this mass of thought, effort and prayer.

In the fourth place there is a very serious practical problem involved. That problem was inadvertently introduced by one of the speakers in the recent meeting of the anti-union party in Montreal. He referred to the last next General Assembly, which is to meet in Montreal, and he parodied tiefly exclaimed, "Thank God not in Winnipeg." And why "thank God not in Winnipeg?" Because, and this is the significant thing, the West is the home of this Union, and the Anti-Union men feel that their cause is a lost cause on the other side of the Great Lakes.

What is the condition of things out there? A vast and thinly settled country; three great trunk lines of railway, each of which is like a necklace on which beads of various sizes are threaded, each bead a collection of human beings; communities that are by the very conditions under which they are formed together are driven to emphasize the type of life in which the Union could be little and practically nothing just for much. This is weighty and most conclusive.

The LONGEST TUNNEL in AMERICA OPENED

THE completion of the Cunnagunt Tunnel through Mount Macdonald in the Selkirk Mountains in British Columbia, with its five miles of double track railway line, concrete, five and one half million dollars, remains many interesting developments in construction work on the Canadian Pacific Railway since the railway began operation in 1881. The first real newspaper story after the opening of the Canadian Pacific Railway "broke" in February, 1882, near Flat Creek, now Oak Lake, near Brandon, Manitoba. That year was the worst for snow storms the prairies had ever experienced. One night a fanger, pulled by an engine which burned wood and had to stop to "blow up" steam every few miles, "jumped" the track. The universal fuel on locomotives then was wood. Train No. 1 of the early days left Winnipeg at 7 a.m., stopping at Portage la Prairie, 56 miles west, for dinner and reaching Brandon at 6.30 p.m. The bulk of freight traffic at that time consisted of rails and other construction material. Since that time the development has been rapid.

Its mileage is 18,533, viz: C. P. R. and lines west of Fort William, 13,371; owned and controlled 4,956.

Its equipment is valued at $206,577,265.32, not including ocean, lake and river steamers.

Its equipment includes 2,255 locomotives, 2,781 passenger cars; 87,108 freight cars, and other cars, 8,247.

It has 65,000 employees with a pay roll of $43,625,000 in 1916.

It carried 13,833,978 passengers in 1916.

Its capital stock is $260,000,000; preferred $80,681,921; debentures stock $176,284,882; mortgage bonds $6,359,160.

It has 12,500 miles of pole lines and 103,100 miles of wires.

It has a fleet of 59 steamers, exclusive of the Atlantic service: three Lakes, 5; ferry service, 2; R. C. Lake and River, 24; B. C. coast service, 26; Bay of Fundy service, 2.

Its gross earnings, according to the annual report in 1916, were $179,481,685; expenses, $80,255,965; net earnings, $49,225,720.

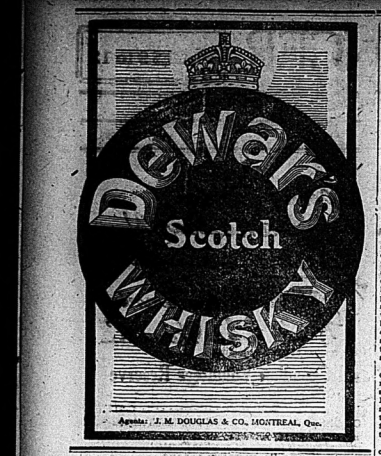
Its ocean services include Canadian Pacific Trans-Atlantic, Trans-Pacific Lines and Allan Line.

It circles the world by land and sea.

The irrigation project of the company in Alberta will irrigate portions of a tract of 2,000,000 acres of land, east of Calgary.

The western section, comprising 1,500 miles of canals and ditches providing for the irrigation of 870,000 acres of land has been completed.

The great irrigation dam at Bassano, Alberta, built by the C. P. R. was opened April 26, 1914. It is 7,000 feet in length and contains more than a million cubic feet of earth and concrete.



The Canadian Pacific Railway has been Canada's greatest asset in building up population to 2,000,000; it has seen capital wealth increase from a few millions to $9,920,000,000; it has 2,500 miles of railway lengthened to 35,000 miles, with annual salaries and wages of $111,762,972; it has seen scientific farming produce million dollar crops, tremendous strides in medicine and surgery and a transformation in social conditions.

It has seen the trade of Canada develop for 12 months in 1916 to $2,082,-950,734, an increase of $481,814,298 over 1915.

Canada has seen eight Governor-Generals since the Canadian Pacific Railway began operation. They were the Marquis of Lorne, Lord Lansdowne, Lord Stanley, Earl of Aberdeen, Lord Minto, Earl Grey, Duke of Connaught and Duke of Devonshire.

The following names have been power since its inception: Sir John A. Macdonald, Sir John Abbott, Sir John Thompson, Sir John Sparrow Dowell, Sir Charles Tupper, Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Sir Robert L. Borden; and the great railway company with men Canada owns third in the world's wheat crop estimate in 1915, with 376,000,000 bushels and 111,000 occupiers take farms and holdings.

ECONOMICAL POWER

POWER—Power is the very life of your car. It is the energy that makes the car leap forward in the instant get-away. The energy that carries you swiftly and smoothly on high speed without effort. It is the energy that takes you over the hills, through the deep sands, through the snow-drifts of winter.

POWER makes your car easy to drive on the Road or in Traffic. Power makes you forget the mechanism of your car. It meets the emergencies of travel and traffic without noticeable effort, without faltering. That is the way Studebaker has made Studebaker cars the most powerful cars on the market in ratio to weight.

They have made them powerful by perfecting design—four years Studebaker Engineers have concentrated their skill improving, developing and perfecting Studebaker motor designs, until today Studebaker is the most powerful car on the market, in ratio to size of car.

At the same time it is economically powerful. It gives you great power with very reasonable gasoline consumption.

A Widow's Experience

By ESTHER VANDEVEER

My love for Edward Lane began when we were both so young that neither of us could remember a time when it did not exist. His father's place was but a short distance from ours. Indeed, the rear line marked the limits of both places. On one side of this line was the playground of the several children, boys and girls, including Edward and myself, who lived in the neighborhood. I can remember as far back as when I was seven years old and Edward nine that in playing keep house he and I always played the part of husband and wife. There was a swing on this playground, and Edward's father put up articles for a Boys' gymnasium. A little house for or five feet high was built for us girls and furnished with toy furniture. At times we would leave our dolls there all night, first putting them to bed.

When I grew taller I could not understand how I could have stood upright in. that little house. And what seemed upon remarkable to me was that Edward could have fixed-up, for he was always a large child. And I remember that when he had been away to school for a long while and came back he was taller than the house.

By this time we were growing out of childhood into that intermediate period when, though boys and girls may fee love, they are not likely to express it. It is a period of transition from child love to real love. The boy mind is taken up with athletic sports, while the girl hides her secret almost from herself. Indeed, so nebulous is this period that in my own case it is difficult for me to recall my exact feelings. I remember them faintly and as existing at intervals. They were rather a small portion of my girl's existence than the whole of it.

When I was sixteen I was awakened to the true condition by the marked preference displayed by another girl for my Edward. From that time my love became the principal instead of a minor part in my life. I failed to conceal my jealousy from him, and that brought out his own consciousness of what was between us. There was no formal declaration, no conventional giving of the hand, not even the lover's kiss. He merely said something about the other girl, I know not what, but it assured me there was no change in our position since the days when we played husband and wife at keeping house—no change in the position, but a great change in the condition. It had then been like a winter bud, but it was now awoken under a spring sun, ready to put forth leaves.

I sometimes wished that I could have experienced the proposal that other girls seemed to regard the next most important moment in their lives to their marriage. Edward and I had no occasion for a proposal. Our love was rather, as I have said, an unfolding of a bud than the birth of a butterfly. The only abrupt part of it was when he gave me the first kiss. I treasured that in lieu of a proposal.

When we were married great changes had occurred. I had been left alone in the world, so it was arranged that we should occupy my house. Our living room was on the second floor, overlooking the playground where we had pretended to be husband and wife. The faint dream of childhood had been developed to a realization of almost perfect happiness. If there could be a perfection on earth these five years of my life, from twenty to twenty-five, were such a condition. Two children were born to us, a boy and a girl. What seemed strange to me was that, though I gave them a boundless love, that which I bore their father, instead of being diminished, was increased. Truly love must be, like space, infinite.

Up to this point there had been an expansion of happiness. Suddenly there came a check. Our younger child sickened and died. I have described with some minuteness what I have likened to the gradual unfolding of a flower. I have no heart to give more than a brief mention of its blighting. Within a few months after the first death a second occurred, and within another year I lost my husband.

For a time I was in a sort of fog-lapse, in which I did not take enough interest in my surroundings to be affected by them. After one has met with a serious accident or has been operated upon by a surgeon the senses are deadened; then comes the beginning of pain. It was so with me. When I became myself my surroundings were painful to me. Some persons similarly situated nurse their grief by living in such surroundings.

I longed to get away from them. Friends advised me to seek recovery in the many new scenes and interesting objects that are to be found abroad. I took their advice. I sailed for Europe, leaving the place where I had been so happy in the hands of an agent for sale. One thing I was resolved upon—never to return to it.

It may be considered that my story is one of coincidence. It is more than that. It is an illustration of the very different conditions that may occur in the life of a single person. Masters of romance have maintained that there should be in one story but one [illegible] character never bring a second on in the story. They portray rather romance than real life and do not give all that real life needs. They are of the same order as the people of India, who believe that the wife should die on the funeral pyre of her husband.

I may be weaker than some women or I may be stronger. Possibly I may have less depth or feeling, though that I will not admit. I saw only in nursing my grief a dreadful life before me. I recognized the principle that no two absorbing ideas can occupy the brain at one time. I did all that I could to interest myself in what was about me. True, I did not at first succeed and when I did only partially so. I dreaded the word forget, and yet I realized that to avoid suffering I must sometimes forget. I forced myself to feel that after a time I would be reunited with my loved ones and that meanwhile I must, accept occasionally, put them out of my mind.

I made my home abroad. Three years after my bereavement I married again. I did so partly because I was lonely, partly because I wished for a man to rely upon, as is natural to any woman, partly because the man I married assured me that I could give him an interest in life and, lastly, because I became attached to him. He was an American, like myself, and, being wealthy, gave himself up to study. He lived abroad that he might write books which required his presence among the subject which he wrote.

For five years after our marriage we continued our residence abroad. During this period children were born to us. There was a tacit mutual agreement between us that I should not talk about the world in which I had lived. I saw that he would rather leave that to me, confining himself as far as having to part in it, and I had no desire to make him a part of it. He was absorbed in his literary work, and if I ever told him even where I had lived he soon forgot it.

Then he was called to America on a matter of some property that needed his attention. It was agreed between us that he should leave me and our children in Liverpool, where we were then living. He expected to be absent not more than two months, but soon after his arrival in America he was induced to write for a publisher a work necessitating his presence in America. He suggested my coming home with the children, but left me to consult my own feelings in the matter.

I had never intended to return to the United States, dreading lest it should reawaken me to my lost world. But with a husband and children that world had receded further and further from me till the consciousness of it had grown very dim. I wrote my husband that I would go back to the western hemisphere and remain there.

I was tired of moving about from one place to another, and the children were coming to that age when they should have steady instruction at school. Our boy I preferred to bring up in America. I therefore suggested to my husband that I take a place in which we might settle. He replied that he agreed with me in everything save my suggestions. Later he wrote me that he had bought a place in the suburbs of the city where he would be necessary for him to do his work.

We arrived after dark. I was delighted at our reunion, as were the father and the children. I did not see where our home was to be. I intended to be satisfied with it, pleased with it, wherever it was. We took a train and in less than an hour alighted at a station, where a carriage was waiting for us. It was very dark when we reached our home, and I saw nothing of it till I stood in the hall. Then I caught at a banister to prevent my falling.

I was in the house I had left more than ten years before with a blighted heart.

"My dear!" exclaimed my husband, starting toward me.

But in a twinkling I had recovered myself. What had enabled me to do so? The sudden appearance of an object. Ah, those objects that come to us! How much more valuable often than realization! I must at least for the present declare my good man the inexpressible pain of knowing what he had brought upon me.

"Nothing," I replied. "A little giddiness at having been so long rolling at sea."

"Nothing you don't like, is there?" he asked seriously.

"On the contrary, I am very well pleased. Let us see the rest of it."

He took me into every room in the house, a house that had been sold twice since I had parted with it and both times with the furniture included. Not for the world would I have betrayed that these rooms, closets, corners, with every bed, table, bureau, had been familiar to me from childhood. But when it was over I passed the night alone in a room opening into one occupied by my children.

No tongue or pen can describe what that night was to me.

When morning came I found that if I could endure the first shock I could endure more. I deferred from day to day telling what had happened. My husband was delighted with his purchase, and before I had pointed out to me the secret he had become a fixture in it. Months passed, then years. My husband is now an old man and my children are grown. None of them know that their mother has been living in her second earthly world.

And yet, after all, this coincidence has not brought its unhappiness. I have been living two existences, both of which are dear to me, the one near by, the other in the far past and future; the one of flesh and blood, the other of spiritual form. In time it will be a spiritual mingling of the two.

The Topeka paper called the Capital says that when a woman shoots a man it is because she loves him.

Anti-War Campaign in Province of Quebec

the vital interests of the Province of Quebec. As to His Grace Mgr. Roy, he was equally pronounced against the measure, and added, "I regret to say that on this subject L'Action Catholique has already said too much." Dr. Bartil came to ask advice of the Cardinal as to the attitude the association should take in relation to this probable measure of conscription."

ONE SENSIBLE ONE

Protesting against the intervention of the Young Men's Liberal Association in the anti-conscription propaganda being conducted in Montreal, Arthur Lafontaine has resigned the office of Vice-President of the organization. In a letter in which he announces his resignation Mr. Lafontaine says:

"Our public men and political associations should do all in their power, instead of alarming our people with threats of conscription and tirades against conscription, to reassure the timid ones and to endeavor to calm the over-excited minds. I believe, therefore, that all agitation over this question is inopportune, and, to say the least, premature, before knowing exactly what policy the Federal Government intends to carry out in this respect. It is equally imprudent to judge the question on its merits before it is formally announced to the country by those in authority."

Query? Could not Sir Wilfrid Laurier put a stop to all these treasonable utterances by adopting the suggestions of young Lafontaine?

"Oh, John," exclaimed the young mother happily, "the baby can walk." "Good for him," returned the civil father. "Then he can walk the floor with himself at night."

Weak, Anaemic, Nervous, Run-down

WINCARNIS offers you new health! Think what this means to you. Instead of that out-of-sorts, nervous, run-down feeling, you can revel in the enjoyment of new and buoyant health. You feel well—eat well—work well—sleep well—and rise in the morning refreshed and vigorous, and feel your whole body pulsating with new life.

That is the new health Wincarnis offers you. Because Wincarnis is a Tonic, a Restorative, a Blood-maker and a Nerve Food—all in one. This four-fold power, acting upon the system at one time, enables Wincarnis to give new strength, new rich blood, new nerve force, and new vitality. And because Wincarnis does this, it is recommended by over 10,000 Doctors.

If you are weak, Wincarnis will give you new strength. If you are anaemic, Wincarnis will give you new rich red blood. If you are nervous, Wincarnis will give you new nerve force. If you are run-down, Wincarnis will give you new vitality.

Knowing this, surely you will not continue to suffer needlessly. Remember, you begin to get well from the first day you commence to take Wincarnis. And each succeeding day you derive more strength, more rich blood, more nerve force, and more vitality, until soon your whole system becomes recharged with a feeling of new life.

Then you can stop taking Wincarnis.

But you can still enjoy the new health Wincarnis has given you.

Wincarnis is not a luxury, but a positive necessity to all who are Weak, Anaemic, Nervous, Run-down—to all enfeebled by old age—to martyrs to Indigestion—to all invalid—and to all who are depressed and "out-of-sorts."

Don't suffer needlessly. Take advantage of the new health Wincarnis offers you. But be sure you get Wincarnis—don't trust substitutes.

Based on current dividend rates and earnings, the copper stocks are cheap. Most of the large producers will have surplus accounts at the end of 1917 sufficient to pay current dividends for three or four years. There is today no one group of securities in which the protection of the investment is so great in measurable values, or on which the yield is so high as in the securities of the leading copper producers. FORBIDDEN FRUIT

By WILLARD BLAKEMAN

My father died when I was twelve years old, leaving me a good property in the care of my uncle, John Strong. His name should have begun with a "G," for he was the gruffest spoken man I ever knew. I was sent to boarding school, till I was seventeen and then to college. Upon graduating I received a letter from my guardian, bidding me to come to his house.

When I looked it, leaving the suite in which I arrived with my hand luggage, I saw looking at me through an upper window a young girl evidently about seventeen, the sweetest face I had ever seen. I was thrilled at the idea of being in a house with such a lovely creature, being of an age to be easily struck by a pretty girl.

On entering the house I saw another face, the antipodes of the first. It was that of my uncle. His face was square, his mouth curved down at the corners, his eyes set deep in his head and overhung by beetling brows.

"How are you?" was his first remark to me.

"I will be twenty-two next September."

"By the term of your father's will you are to have $10,000 the day you are twenty-two years old; $20,000 the day you are twenty-five and the balance when you are thirty. In the matter of marriage, you can't take a wife, of which I do not approve. You may live in this house with me as long as you like, but I have a warning for you. I have a ward who has been in my care by her father who was a bosom friend of mine. He left her a fortune with the provision that she should not inherit it if she married without my consent, and her father charged me to bring about, if possible, a marriage with a young man who is part owner in certain property which will fall to her. I care nothing about the wife you select except this girl. In her case it is hands off."

With the last words my uncle looked at me so savagely that I believed if I married his ward there would be infinite trouble. This gave me deep concern, for it struck me that the girl I had seen at the window was the same ward, by whom I was already stricken.

My uncle's dark protest worse than his bite—that is, on all subjects except my interfering with the plans laid down for his ward. Of course the forbidden fruit was altogether too tempting for me, and I soon learned that she had received a warning similar to mine, which had a like effect on her. But our guardian seemed singularly obtuse to the interest with which I and Edith Sterling inspired each other. At any rate, he made no effort to prevent our being much together. We drove, played tennis and rode on horseback together without a word of remonstrance from him. Edith and I talked over his action, or, rather, want of action, and came to the conclusion that since by the terms of our inheritance he held the whip hand of us he did not propose to interfere with our temporary relations. When the time for action came we would feel his power.

When September came and with it a legal age for me I received $10,000 of my estate. Nothing could have been more adverse to the plans laid down for me and Edith Sterling. The possession of this money brought with it an added temptation. I sounded Edith to learn if she would give up her fortune for me and this first payment of my patrimony, which, if I defied my guardian, was all I could hope for. She was not only willing, but eager to do so. I should not have permitted this, but I was young and deeply in love. Indeed, I felt guilty in having suggested such a thing, and found it difficult to look my uncle in the face. This feeling was enhanced from the fact that his harshness was all on the surface, and was often used to render more effective certain bursts of humor.

Well, the inevitable result of putting two youngsters of opposite sex under the same roof forbidding them to love each other, followed. One morning I took Edith out to ride, and driving to a town across the border of the state we were married. I telegraphed my uncle of the fact, and awaited his reply. It was very short, simply, "Shall expect you for dinner." "Which means," I said to Edith, "if you, for choose to give up wealth for love, it is no concern of his."

We reached my uncle's house half an hour before dinner. He was not at home, but expected soon. When he arrived he found us in the library waiting for him. He shook hands cordially with me and kissed Edith, then led the way into the dining room.

The moment we entered it both Edith and myself were astonished. It seemed to have been set for a wedding feast. A bottle of champagne was in a cooler beside my uncle's chair and as soon as we were served with food it was uncorked, and our glasses being filled my uncle raised his glass,

"To the folly of youth," he said. "Those who put you two under my management found one who, understanding these same follies, has been well able to carry out their designs. This marriage was planned for you long ago, and when I consented to be your guardian I consented only on condition that I should have my own way as to bringing you two together. Had I told you that you must marry, you would have turned your backs on each other. When I told you you should not marry, with the penalty of each losing a fortune, I drove you into each other's arms."

Probably the new variety are for males who tango. There should be some distinguishing mark.

A MAN WE HAVE FORGOTTEN

Matthew Fontaine Maury, Who Was a Really Great American.

Every one who has read or heard of Robert Fulton, certainly every one who has heard of S. F. B. Morse or Cyrus W. Field ought also to have heard of Matthew Fontaine Maury. But that is not the case. For my part, I had never heard of Maury until I went to Virginia. If he's asked schoolboys if they have heard of him. None of them has. Yet, Maury's scientific researches and accomplishments have had as enormous effect, not only in this country, but throughout the world.

It may be said that Maury laid the foundation for our modern weather bureaus and that the science of meteorology began with him. He founded the national nautical observatory and the hydrographic office in Washington and discovered, among other things, the cause of the gulf stream and the existence of that plateau in the north Atlantic ocean which, if I am not mistaken, made possible the laying of the first Atlantic cable. Cyrus W. Field said with reference to this, "Maury furnished the brains, England the money and I did the work." Further than this, the charts of the north Atlantic which Maury made years ago are today the basis upon which that ocean is navigated by all nations.

I am informed that though he was decorated by many foreign governments, he was never given so much as a cheap little medal by that of the United States, and that his name has not been kept alive by any memorial or other token of his country's gratitude.—Julian Street in Collier's Weekly.

Following the Styles.

"The strange woman made most of her time thinking about what to wear."

"I fear you are mistaken."

"Why so?"

"She spends most of her time thinking about what to wear next."

His Time to Talk

Judge—Have you anything to say before I pronounce sentence upon you?
Prisoner—Yes, judge, I certainly have. But it's dinner time. Let's wait until after we've had it. I have quite a reputation as an after dinner speaker.—Yonkers Statesman.

Dangerous Suggestion.

"Talk is cheap."
"Now, look out and don't be talking that way or first thing you know the telephone rates will be going up."—Baltimore American.

When a man sits down and hopes for the best he is apt to get the worst of it.

Reputation and Character

From the matchless valve-in-head motor, right in principle to start with, to every mechanical detail—transmission, clutch, brakes, electrical system, vacuum feed and cooling—the McLaughlin of 1917 has been perfected to a degree looked for only in cars selling at much higher prices.

The new series McLaughlin consists of a complete line of fours and sixes in touring and roadster types at prices from $895.00 up, and a new 60 H. P. 7 passenger valve-in-head touring car with a handsome double cowl body and superb refinements and appointments at $1900 f. o. b. Oshawa.

Send for a free copy of our 1917 catalogue.

DRAUGHT VERSUS BOTTLED LIQUORS

Liquors in sealed bottles in cases cost one-third more than in draught, and the quality is no better. Why one-third more? Because you are paying for the bottles and the labor of bottling, for the same goods.

Following are some draught liquors, especially "Belmoral" Scotch, which we can highly recommend:

DRAUGHT SCOTCH
"Belmoral" Fine Old Scotch, 2 gals. $12.50
"Belmoral" Extra Fine Old Scotch, 2 gals. 14.50
"Belmoral" Extra Special Liquor, 2 gals. 16.50

Cherub Devine

By SEWELL FORD

Copyright, 1916, by Sewell Ford

"AUREA, THIS I DO!"

"The Countess Vecchi nodded," and her dark eyes drooped.

"Then I guess there's something I want to say all over again right now—that is, Mr. Hewlington, if you wouldn't mind—" and he glanced suggestively at the library door.

Mr. Hewlington frowned. From Cherub Devine he looked toward his daughter.

"Ruth, run along, daddy," urged the countess.

Mr. Hewington sighed a sigh of resignation and retreated from the scene.

The Cherub simply stood there and gazed at the Countess Vecchi. All his audacity and self confidence had vanished. He was gazing wistfully and eagerly at her. Then his gaze found the big brown eyes—found something in them which quickened his blood and gave him hope.

"Aida," he faltered questioningly, "I know I don't deserve it, but—but—could you—will I do?"

And presently, holding her closely in his arms and looking at shorter range into her brown eyes, he was reasonably sure that he knew.

"Guess I never knew what it was to be happy before, anyway," he whispered.

"Nor I, Cherub, dear," said the Countess Vecchi.

THE END.

Changing Niagara.

Any one who was familiar with the appearance of the Niagara falls before the present power installations were built and opened can settle the question as to whether the appearance of the falls has been affected by going to see for himself. Small though the total amount of water taken for power purposes in proportion to the total amount usually over the falls may be, it has been sufficient to cause the shallower portions of the overflow at the edges of the falls to become entirely dry, thereby greatly reducing the total length of the crest line.

Geese Fat.

Goose fat makes an excellent pastry that is absolutely free from any flavor of the kind of meat from which it comes. The pastry turns out light and "short" when this sort of fat is used. A belgian recipe says that the geese are fed so fat left after drawing the goose into cold water with a little salt in it and as the goose is drawn. When the bird is half done ladle off some of the dripping before it browns or becomes strong and as the roasting proceeds leave only enough dripping in the pan to baste with. Next day put the dripping, with the fresh fat, in a stewpan, with slices of apple, and cook gently, adding a little salt and pepper. When done clear it and strain it into a jar. Cover it and keep it in a cool place.

Spoiled His Speech.

"When I rose to speak it was so still in the hall you could have heard a pin drop."

"Yes?"

"Well, I stood there for a moment looking out over the audience and framing my first sentence, and I am sure that I should have been able to get along all right, but just before I had got ready to utter my first word some fool in the back end of the hall yelled, 'Louder!'"

Reckless Disregard.

"The law of supply and demand," said the economist, "is as immovable as the law of gravitation."

"You can always enforce either of them. The law of gravitation doesn't prevent people from getting up in the air these days."—Washington Star.

At It Night and Day.

"My daughter is a wonder at the piano," said the proud father.

"That's so, for wonders never cease," said the man who occupied the adjoining flat.—Boston Transcript.

Peaceful Mind.

"So Stubbins has a mind of his own?"

"I should say he has. And you ought to see her use it."—Chicago Herald.

Lucretia was a greater adept in business than the Hun is with gas. A chemist of a kind in a way.

The Future Of Russia

Foreign Minister Says Victory Will be Hastened and Friendships Strengthened

LONDON, March 24—Foreign Minister Milukoff has outlined the attitude of the new Russian Government in foreign affairs to a number of Petrograd and Moscow journalists. A Reuters's despatch from Petrograd quotes the Foreign Minister as saying:

"We shall remain faithful to all past alliances similar to that with our Allies, which will be still further strengthened and become still more cordial and sincere. The change in regime will disperse the distrust our allies had a right to feel toward the late Government. It is Russia's duty to continue to struggle brilliantly both for her own liberty and that of all Europe.

"By the change in regime we definitely won the sympathy of neutrals, especially Sweden, while Finland, thanks to the restoration of her constitution, has become our sincere friend. Our Allies came into touch with the new regime without an instants' delay, understanding that the old regime was a serious hindrance to that organization of the Russian people which is necessary for a final triumph.

"To-day Russia is no longer a dead weight in the coalition of allies. She is a productive force. Henceforth all rumors of a separate peace must vanish once for all. It would be antinational for freed Russia to come to an understanding with reactionary Germany.

Vote Allowed Each Dominion

Imperial Conference, However, Hopes for Unanimity

LONDON, March 24.—The Imperial conference sat for the second time to-day. Sir Robert Borden, Hon. R. Rogers and Hon. J. D. Hazen and Sir George Perley attended. Some misconception having raised regarding the proportion of voting strength of each Domiinon and the Mother Country, in this combined council, it is pointed out that each Dominion has one vote upon any question. India, which comes in for the first time, now also has one votee. As a matter of fact we understand very few matters are likely to arise which will form the subject of a divided vote. Every endeavor is being made to reach unanimous decisions.

VASSAR GIRLS MOBILIZE

Thousand Students Prepare for War Service

PLOUGHKEEPSIE, N.Y., March 24.—About 1,000 undergraduates of Vassar College have signed for war service in the National League for Women's Service. The students enrolled as nurses, wireless telegraphers, motor car drivers, and clerks, and in many other ways. Hospital classes to be graduated at once about 300 students having enrolled in that organization immediately after diplomatic relations with Germany were severed. The alumnae are ready also to do their bit, a large class in first aid having been graduated last year. Vassar is virtually a state of mobilization to-day.

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., March 24—Smith College have enlisted for preparedness. Five hundred and thirty students joined classes organized as branches of the Red Cross service.

FIVE GERMAN AIRPLANES WINGED ON SATURDAY

Allied Aerial Squadron Dropped One Thousand Kilograms of Explosives on Factories and Railroad Stations—Enemy Attacks Checked by Allied Fire—Material Advance South of Oise

Special To The Intelligencer.

PARIS, March 26—French Official Statement—Between the Somme and Oise the Germans made repeated attacks during the night on the front between Essigny and Benay. All these attempts were checked by our fire or repulsed by our counter attacks. Serious losses were inflicted on the enemy. We maintained completely positions captured yesterday. South of Oise our advance continued notwithstanding the state of the ground and bad weather. We pushed our patrols beyond Folemora, south of the lower forest of Coucy.

North of Rheims our batteries caused an explosion of the munitions depot of the enemy east of Du Godat farm. Elsewhere the night was calm. Five German airplanes were brought down yesterday by our pilots. Two were destroyed by Adjutant Ortoli. One of our aerial squadrons dropped one thousand kilograms of explosives on factories at Thionville, and in the basin of the Briey, and also on the railroad stations of Conflans and Montmedy.

Makes Treaty With Portugal

Canada Will Obtain Extensive Benefits Under Tariff

OTTAWA, March 24.—An Order-in-Council has been passed giving notice of Canada's adhesion to a treaty of commerce and navigation which has been signed between the United Kingdom and Portugal. By Canada's giving notice of this adhesion she will obtain the benefits of the conventional tariff, in return for which Canada will grant to Portugal the benefits of the intermediary tariff upon the articles mentioned in the Franco-Canadian convention of 1907. Portugal has been notified of Canadas' adhesion, but it has not yet been made effective by the Portuguese Government.

The negotiations for this treaty were in progress at the outbreak of the war, and were signed at Lisbon on August 12, 1914. Owing to the war the ratification did not take place until May 20, 1916, and the treaty went into force September 23, 1916. The usual Colonial clauses were included in the treaty whereby British Dominions could become partners to the treaty upon giving notice of their intention so to do before the expiration of one year from the date of the exchange of ratification. Canada has now acted under the authority of this clause.

PUTTING UP FIGHT TO RETAIN LIQUOR

Hull Men Lease Properties to Secure Vote, is Claim

OTTAWA, March 24—Prohibition opponents in Hull are on the war path, and don't intend to let the temperance advocates sweep the city clean of intoxicants without offering any resistence. If the "dry" vote carries next month it won't be the fault of some active prohibition fighters in Hull.

It was suggested to the press by a resident of Hull, that some of the "wets" in that city who didn't have a vote, were after Ottawa men who held property in Hull, to lease their property to them so that they could vote against local option.

If prohibition does not carry at the voting to be taken next month, the city will be under the "no treat" system on May 1. Clubs and wholesale stores will also go, according to the Temperance Association in that city. The voting will last ten days, and has been set back to April 20 instead of April 15.

Standard Hotels To Get Longer Exemption

Express Book to be Open For Inspection by Certain Officials—Amendment to the Temperance Act

Licensed keepers of standard hotels are to be exempt from the payment of taxes in respect of business assessment for a further period of three years, as distillers, brewers, and malsters who have continued in business since the Ontario Temperance Act came into force on September 16 last. These are the outstanding proposed amendments to the Ontario Temperance Act as announced by Hon. W D. McPherson, Provincial Secretary, in the Legislature on Friday.

Another important amendment provides that all express companies and their agents and all common and other carriers shall keep an accurate record of each consignment of liquor made, with the name and address of persons from whom it was received and to whom delivered, which record shall at all times be open only to the inspection of an inspector, Provincial constable, or Provincial officer, any of whom shall be furnished on demand a certified copy of the record. No information obtained in this manner shall be communicated to anyone other than the License Board, and shall be used only for the purpose for which it was lawfully obtained.

Back To Russia After 42 Years

Grandmother of Revolution to Return to Petrograd

LONDON, March 24—A despatch to Reuter's Telegram Company from Petrograd dated Friday said that Mme. Catherine Breshkovskaya, "grandmother of the Russian revolution" would arrive in Petrograd on Friday night after having been 42 years in prison or exile. She was sentenced to penal servitude in 1874, but was released early in the 90's Later she was banished to Siberia, for belonging to the Socialist Revolutionary party.

1,085,000 ARMY FOR U. S. NAVY CALLS 87,000 MEN

WASHINGTON, March 26.—Special—President Wilson's plans for the army are more far reaching and elaborate than generally realized, according to General Staff officers who are in a position to predict with some degree of accuracy. It can be stated that the general programme which the President is now considering includes the following salient features:

The immediate raising of a volunteer army of 500,000 men, bringing of the National Guard up to its maximum strength, taking into the regular army without delay the second increment of army reserve, thereby raising the military strength to 1,085,000. Recruiting of navy to full authorized war strength of 87,000.

Employment of the regulars and the National Guard to take care of the situation at home.

Possibly an early despatch of a small force to France in order that this Government may, for sentimental reasons, be represented "on the field of honor."

BIG CITADELS LEFT BY HUNS

Enemy Only Evacuated Because He Had to—Trenches Deeply Dug

War Correspondents' Headquarters, France, March 26.—Special—Along every step of the way by which the enemy retreated there are relics which show exactly how our enemies lived and fought when they were hidden from view across No Man's Land.

Everywhere outside Bapaume and Peronne and Chaulnes and all those deserted places near the front lines one ugly thing stares one in the face—German barbed wire. It is heavier, stronger stuff than ours or that of the French, with great cross-pieces of iron, and he used amazing quantities of it in great wide belts in three lines of defence before this trench system and in all sorts of odd places, by bridges and roads and villages, even far behind the trenches to prevent any sudden rush of hostile infantry, or to tear our cavalry to pieces should we break his lines and get through. His trenches were deeply dug, and along the whole line from which he has now retreated they were provided with great concreted and timbered dugouts, leading into an elaborate system of tunnelled galleries, perfectly proof from shellfire, and similar to those which I described often enough in the Somme battlefields.

Thieves Took Rings From Fingers

Entered Fashionable Apartments of Mrs. Catherine Skinner of Toronto

TORONTO, March 24—Mrs. Catherine I. Skinner, of the Queen's Court Apartments, 579 Jarvis Street, today related to The Daily News how two men, representing themselves as telephone inspectors, secured entrance to her apartments on Thursday morning, and menacing her with a revolver, tore off five of nine rings which she was wearing. In response to her piteous appeal, they gave her back her wedding ring. The other four rings fitted tightly on her fingers and were unable to take them off. Mrs. Skinner collapsed, and recovering about half an hour later, notified her sister, Mrs. Gillies, who occupies the next apartment. Mrs. Skinner is a widow, her husband having died about ten years ago. He was a son of the late Col Skinner of Woodstock, was an Alderman at Vancouver, wealthy and highly respected. Mrs. Skinner is also well known in Toronto, where she has resided for the past ten years.

Four rings, Mrs. Skinner's most valuable ones, were in a drawer in a dressing table in her bedroom, but the thieves did not find them, although they ransacked the room. The stolen rings are valued at about $2,000. Two have been recovered in pawnshops and were identified by Mrs. Skinner.

BRITISH ENJOY OPEN FIGHTING

Roads Blocked by Troops Following Germans—Indian Troops Taking Active Part

With the British Armies in France, March 26—From a Staff Correspondent of the Associated Press—The open fighting of the past ten days during the German retreat has presented war pictures fascinatingly spectacular and closely approaching the bolder ideas of modern martial splendor. The roads, or, more exactly, the remnants of the roads, in some of the stricken districts of France have been fairly choked with troops on the move. From an eminence on a recently evacuated German stronghold could be seen Saturday a seemingly endless column of cavalry coming over a distant hill, dipping down into a beautiful valley and rising again by a winding road to a broad, open field, where camp was pitched for the night. At times the brown-hued horses and brown-clad men were almost invisible against the brown winter landscape. At points farther forward infantry detachments could be seen disappearing in the distance, skirmishing, dodging, one unit covering another, until it seemed almost as if the days of Indian fighting had returned.

FRENCH TAKE ADVANCE FORTS

Capture La Fere and are Now Closing in on St. Quentin

PARIS, March 26—Special—Notwithstanding the stiffened resistance by the Germans, the French have made great progress during the past 24 hours Two of the advance forts in the defensive system of La Fere have been captured, and the French have also occupied the west bank of the River Oise from the outskirts of La Fere as far as Vendeuil, a distance of about four miles.

Another important advance has also been made by the French in their movement against the strongly defended town of St. Quentin, from north of Grand Sereaucourt, the position embracing Castres and Essigny-le-Grand, extending over a front of about two and a half miles, has been taken. Several villages were captured on the east bank of the Ailette River south of Chauny and in the region north of Soissons.

Heavy fighting has been in progress in various sectors, and the French report large German losses.

RUSSIA CURED OF ROMANOFFS

Chances in Favor of a Republic Strong—Rasputin Crowd Banished

PETROGRAD, March 26—Many things may happen before the Constituent Assembly decides the question of a Republic or a Monarchy. If under the Provisional Government Russia thrives without a Monarch, the chances will be heavily in favor of a Republic. Petrograd and Moscow are now predominantly republican, but what the rest of Russia thinks there is no means of judging, and an important factor in the question is the attitude of eastern subjects.

The sympathies of the Mohammedans to the new regime has been stimulated by the removal of educational and language restrictions, and, above all, by the dismissal of that hater agent of reaction, Mufti Bey Aztoff of Orenburg, son of the Mohammedan Archbishop.

The arrest of the ex-Czar and Czarina causes general satisfaction. The Russians are not vindictive, but there is a flat refusal to have anything more to do with the family that has been the cause of such an immense tragedy to Russia, and a strong demand that they should not be permitted to do any more harm.

U. S. NAVY ON WAR FOOTING

Two Military Departments Established on Atlantic Seaboard

WASHINGTON, March 26.—Special—President Wilson took steps yesterday to place the nation on a war footing.

By executive order he directed that the navy be recruited without delay to full authorized war strength of 87,000 enlisted men. Taken in connection with emergency naval construction already ordered, this means that the President has exercised the full limit of his legal powers as Commander-in-Chief to prepare the navy for war.

For the army, the President directed that two new military departments be created in the Atlantic coast region. The order means that the task of organizing whatever army Congress may authoride will be divided among six departmental commanders instead of four in the interests of speed and efficiency in mobilization.

FOE BATTERIES SMASHED BY CANADIAN TROOPS

Do Effective Work Behind Enemy's Front Line—Little Loss by Sickness—Trench Feet Fully Eliminated—Remarkable Figures Regarding Canadians

Canadian Headquarters in France (via London, March 26.—Special.—Our artillery carried out a bombardment on the German batteries in positions behind the enemy's front line, and put out of action some batteries occupying important points. The bombardment continued yesterday. Notwithstanding our bombardment on Saturday with unabated vigor, the enemy's response was notably weak. The damage done by him was confined chiefly to the villages already shot to pieces and not in occupation.

Our patrols are vigilant. A few more prisoners brought in show that some of the best German fighting divisions are on this part of the line.

Figures officially available indicate how remarkably well the Canadian corps has come through the trying experience of winter in the trenches. The returns show that sickness, which includes all accidents or injuries from other causes than the missiles of the enemy, is less than in any other corps of the army of which the Canadians form a part. During the first three weeks of March the daily average of men in the hospital from sickness was less than twelve per thousand. The disease known as trench feet has been practically eliminated by careful treatment and precautionary measures.

BRITISH SLOWLY DRIVING HUNS

Enemy Make Advances But Are Checked—Now Yielding Ground Slowly

LONDON, March 26—Special—Roisel, seven miles east of Peronne and a railway junction point on the line between Marcoing and St. Quentin, was captured by the British on Saturday. At Beaumetzles-Cambrai, near the centre of the British line on the Somme front, the Germans attacked and obtained a temporary footing in the village, but later were ejected. A British advance south-west and west of Coust St. Mien southwest of Arras, on a front of one and a half miles, also is reported.

On Sunday an enemy bombing attack on one of the British posts in the neighobrhood of Beaumetzles-Cambrai was successfully driven off, and Sir Douglas Haig's troops improved their position west of Croisilles. The British forces are still some ten or eleven miles from Cambrai, though they have made progress where they are nearest to that city. The Germans are giving ground only foot by foot, and defending themselves tenaciously.

WILL HE FOLLOW MR. BLONDIN'S LEAD?

OTTAWA, March 24—One of the National Service cards filled in last January by an Ottawa man had this legend written across it :"I will go to the front if Hon. P. E. Blondin will go."

When Mr. Blondin enlisted the other day, one of the officers of the National Service Board remembered the conditional offer made, and soon located the card.

The name and address of the sender were yesterday handed over to recruiting officers.

Winning In N. S. Wales

SYDNEY, Australia, March 26.—Special.—Latest returns of the election in New South Wales indicate that the National Governmen party is certain of 51 seats in the new State Legislature, the Independent Laborites having 35, with four seats still in doubt. Meagher, the Speaker, and McGowen, the ex-Labor leader, are substantially defeated. The issue was the formation of a National State Government to assist the Government of the Commonwealth in the prosecution of the war.

NO GERMANS IN SCOTLAND

Rumor to That Effect Received its Quietus in British Commons

Special to The Intelligencer.

DONDON, March 26.—Rumors which have been in circulation for several days of the landing of Germans in Scotland, or at a place on the English coast, received their quietus in the Commons to-day. Chancellor Bonar Law said that so far it was possible to give any reason for the origin of the rumors, they probably were due to the fact that the home defence troops had been told to be ready for any emergency. This often happened, but in the present instance it created unusual commotion.

TURKS FIGHT FROM HEIGHTS

Free Exchange of Fire With Russian Forces—Turks Were Repulsed

Special to The Intelligencer.

PETROGRAD, March 26.—An official report form the Caucasus front, says in the direction of Khanikin, our troops occupied fortifications at Kalachahin. The Turks are maintaining themselves on the heights near Maintaga. On the remainder of the front exchanges of fire are under way.

On the northern part of the Western Front, near Dvinsk, the Germans yesterday attempted to make advance near Postary, after discharging gas waves. The War Office announces they were repelled.

EXPLOSIVES FOUND NEAR BROCKVILLE PLANT

BRCKVILLE, March 26.—Special—Yesterday morning something of a sensation was caused by a report that a boy named Roy Hutton, had found a box of dynamite on the premises of a company here. Investigation revealed that the boy, on returning from an errand, while proceeding along the G. T. R. tracks north of the foundry, espied a small box under an oil tank, close to the railway siding.

The civic authorities are positive that the explosive was not at any time the property of the town. A piece of copper fuse was found in the box, but there was no detonation cap or other artifice necessary for firing the dynamite. How it got to the place where it was picked up is a mystery.

250,000,000 SUBSCRIBED TO WAR LOAN INCLUDING THE BANKS

OTTAWA, March 26—Special—Canada's third domestic war loan was considerably oversubscribed even without the applications of the chartered banks of the country for sixty million dollars of the bonds or of persons seeking to convert ten-year securities, floated in 1911, or 5 per cent debenture stock maturing in 1919, into the new twenty-year issue. It is predicted that the subscriptions for the new loan may be found to have reached $250,000,000 including those to be paid by conversion of the earlier war issues.

Harris, who returned last week from a visit to the Motherland.

ARRESTED ON SERIOUS CHARGE

On Friday night last, James M. Doyle of Trenton, was taken to Toronto to answer to a serious charge. He is held by the Provincial Police on a charge of arson. Doyle arrived in the city on the late train from Belleville, where he was taken into custody by Detective Smith, on a warrant charging him with being implicated in ordinating the fire which occurred in the King George Hotel at Trenton on March 28 last. Doyle was taken to Toronto to appear before Fire Marshall Heaton's investigation into the fire.

FAKER POSING AS TOM LONGBOAT

From San Diego, Cal., has come reports about Tom Longboat, the famous Canadian runner, who is believed to be overseas with the Sportsmen's Battalion. These reports from the west were hardly credited, but no one up to the present has been in a position to deny them.

However, a reader of the Mail and Empire has kindly forwarded a clipping of a San Diego paper containing a cut of "Tom Longboat," and an article stating that he was injured while fighting in Flanders, etc. The photo of the San Diego "Longboat" resembles the original as much as President Wilson does the Kaiser. Therefore, the western sports are being imposed upon by a certain clever fakir, who is getting money under false pretences.

THEDA BARA IN "UNDER TWO FLAGS" AT PALACE TONIGHT

Director J. Gordon Edwardes came near founding a menagerie in connection with the taking of the new William Fox picture "Under Two Flags," starring Theda Bara, which is announced for exhibition at The Palace tonight and Tuesday matinee and night. In the scenes at Cigarette's home, where the veteran lives with his pets, it became necessary to have a cow, two chickens, a dog, a cat and a rat. Most of the animals impressed into service behaved with good grace; but the rat refused to be led. When first put down he ran immediately from the stage setting. He was caught and brought back, and soared perhaps behind a chair out of camera range. When final rehearsals of the scene were over, and the camera man was ready to take the film, the rat was placed once more in centre stage, by the cat, and when the machines began clicking, instead of running off as formerly, the rat remained still, then climbed up on the cat's back, and there went about the business on the other side. The animal has been named Eddie, and placed on director Edwardes' permanent pay roll. On same program with the Fox production of "Under Two Flags," a two part L. Ko comedy entitled "Where is My Wife?" will be exhibited, along with the Pathe News Gazette.

"PEG O' MY HEART'," AT GRIFFIN'S WEDNESDAY

The staging properties of that wonderful comedy, "Peg O' My Heart," has justified the employing of a cast this season that has not been equalled since the first year that the play was put out. Among the first stars that Morosco featured as "Peg" was Miss Marion Deuller, she coming to this enterprising manager after a successful season as "Ysolt" in Irving Fisher's original production of "Everywoman." This Peg Company made a coast to coast tour of the leading cities both in the States and Canada, and her beauty, youth, grace and cleverness will be long remembered by many Canadians who saw the original company. She comes again, under the banner of the United Producing Company and is given the highest class support obtainable, as will be noted by the engagement for the role of Jerry and Mr. Wilfred Santler, the well known English actor, who was three years with R. S. Willard, two years with Forbes Robertson, and was leading man with Miss Eleanor Robson in "The Dawn of Tomorrow." Manager Forbes has this attraction booked for Griffin's Opera House next Wednesday night.

Ice Removes Without Freshet

The river from the lower bridge to Corbyville, is virtually clear of ice and it passed away without doing any particular damage. The dam adjoining Mr. Scott's grist and woolen mills was damaged to some extent by some timbers being carried away.

On Saturday afternoon for a time there was some inconvenience owing to back yards on the west side of Front Street shutting the rivers being flooded, but by evening the water had subsided. There is a considerable field of ice from the C. N. R. and the C. P. R. bridges to a considerable distance beyond the mouth of the harbor, where it is held on account of the ice in the bay still being firm.

Getting at A Secret

By JOHN TOWNLEE

Betty and I were at the piano, was handing her sheets of music, which she would play or try to play. Presently I tired of this and said to her:

"I heard something about you the other day."

"What did you hear?"

"I'm not going to tell you."

If I had really heard anything about her I might have teased her for a while, then told her; but, as I had heard nothing, I had drawn down discomfiture on my head.

Every now and again I would admit something in which there was not a grain of truth, and every time I did so I sank deeper into the bog.

"Did you hear it from a man or a woman?"

"From neither." This was about the only truth there was in all my answers.

"Did you see it written?"

"No."

"Printed?"

"Certainly not."

This ended the series of questions, and after some thought Bet went off on another tack, in which, of course, it was as easy for her to run on the rocks as before. At last I said to her:

"Really, Bet, there's nothing in what I heard, or rather, I heard nothing at all. I said what I did only to tease you."

"You didn't do any such thing. You heard something that I am sure I should know. There is an enemy against whom I should be on my guard. It is your duty to tell me who he is."

"She?"

"Yes. I'm not afraid of a man. Men have no interest in injuring women, and if they had they wouldn't know the "best" to injure, and it would all react on themselves."

"Didn't I tell you that what I heard was complimentary?"

"And don't I know how to injure a girl by prejudicing in your favor?"

"How would you do that?" I asked, hoping to divert her attention from the subject in question.

"You may as well tell me who this she devil is and what she said about me."

"There is no she-devil, and she has not spoken a word against you."

"Has she red hair?"

"I don't know," but no reply.

"This is ridiculous," said Bet. "Just as if I didn't know who had been saying disagreeable things about me."

What a fool I had been! And by my folly I had doubtless caused her enmity toward some innocent woman to burst into a flame. At any rate, this is the way I looked at the matter. I must try a bluff. I swelled fiercely and, rising, went into the hall, opened the door of the coat closet, stepped inside and was taking down my hat when I heard the door shut behind me and the key turned.

Here was a pretty how-d'ye-do. Bet had me locked in the dark and would doubtless keep me there until I told her what had no existence even in imagination, much less in fact. I waited, expecting to hear from her, but I waited in vain. I stepped on the door.

"What is it?"

"Let me out." I assumed an angry tone.

"Tell me what you heard about me."

"I would if I could, but since I heard nothing I can't."

"Then you admit that you are untruthful?"

"Yes, anything you like."

"And you heard nothing said about me?"

"Not a thing."

"Perhaps you have forgotten it?"

"Perhaps I have."

"Very well; stay where you are till you remember it."

I did not propose to remain in a dark closet where there was no room to stand except with upright. I would break down the door in preference. But this would make a disturbance in the house. Bet wouldn't care, but I would. I must find some other expedient.

There is a confession I have to make here. I was quite gone on this tantalizing creature and had been deterred from proposing to her because I had two years in college yet before me and three more in the study of a profession.

"Bet," I called.

"What is it?"

"I give in. I'll crawl; I crave."

"Are you going to tell?"

"Yes, I am. You have forced it from me."

"Well, tell it."

"Not while in here. Let me out and I'll make a clean breast of it."

It was a long while before I could convince her that I would keep my word. When I did I went with her into the library, where we had been before, and, drawing a small sofa to an open fire, we seated ourselves side by side.

"I told you I had not heard this thing from a man or a woman. It was told me by a little bird."

"What did the little bird say?"

"The little bird said, 'You are in love with Bet.'"

There was a long pause, after which Bet asked in a low, soft voice: "And what did you say?"

"I said, 'Little bird, you're right.'"

We celebrated our tin wedding recently and my wife paid no attention to the manner of my proposal.

"Hmmm!" she said, on hearing the secret all the while. I was determined to make you say it."

CANADIANS IN WAR OFFICE

May Be Represented Later on Imperial Staff

LONDON, March 24—A considerable number of Canadian officers are now working in the War Office in order to gain experience of highest inter administrative machinery. This step was arranged for by Sir George Perley who was met by most unfriendly fashion by the permanent officials at the War Office.

It is believed that these officers will remain there for about three months and will then be replaced by other Canadians. In this way perhaps, there will come about that representation of Canadians on the Imperial staff, lack of which formed a subject of complaint in letters to the newspapers some time ago.

When Col. Roosevelt wrote to the fellow-members of the Club the other day, asking, in connection with Belgium's terrible needs, "Are our souls rotted?" and declaring that the nation, which ignores the sufferings of these people is "committing moral suicide." He gave voice to sentiments which have just as much application to Canadians as they have to Americans. Because of the fact that our men have sprung to arms in the same cause for which Belgium has bled, because of the fact that our men have fought and died in holding back that mighty flood of barbarism, which Belgium for those fateful first weeks of the war, brought to a halt almost unaided, we have, perhaps an even keener realization of the debt which we owe to Belgium. There are none in Canada who do not realize that it was Belgium which saved Europe and saved civilization itself. . .

That being so, are we really sure—each of us—that we are showing our appreciation of what Belgium did in the only way that ccdata today? Are we each contributing, according to our means, to keep every single Belgian alive? Belgium today is in more delightful danger than at any period of the war. Died white with taxes, robbed of stores and supplies, with industries ruined, farms devastated, and even gardens laid waste, the people face the appalling prospect of extinction by starvation unless enough food to keep them alive is supplied them through the only agency that can help them—The Belgian Relief Commission—they cannot help themselves. Having saved civilization, they are now absolutely at the mercy of civilization. Either the civilized peoples whom they saved must now save them, and that by giving of their money out of their plenty to provide them with food, or they will perish from the face of the earth.

When we are told by the Relief Commission that 3 cents will provide a child with a meal, under the economical system of relief provided by the Commission, and that $2.50 will keep a Belgian family from starvation for a month, is there one among us—no matter how poor, who will not gladly avail himself of the opportunity to help? On the generous impulse of hearts like ours depends whether Belgium shall rise to a greater and still more glorious future, or perish, or whether the day of deliverance shall find a brave people pulled with new hope, or a country which is but an empty husk.

Contributions that will go to help the Belgian people to survive may be sent to the Belgian Relief Committee, 59 St. Peter Street, Montreal, or to any branch committee throughout Canada.

All Money Looks Alike to Us.

One Price to All, No Rebates at Sinclair's

During the past few days we have been frequently asked by Customers from surrounding towns if we would allow them the price of their Return Railway Ticket, provided they purchased a Suit or Coat in our Store. Our answer was No, and this for Two Reasons.—First, our Goods are so marked that we could not afford to do this, and secondly we do not think it is fair to the great majority of our Customers.

Here's an experience we had recently. A Customer from Stirling was buying a $15.00 Rain Coat and asked for a Rebate of 95c, the price of her Railway Ticket, because she could get it elsewhere, it being so advertised. At the same time we had another Customer who had driven from two miles beyond Stirling, bringing with her some Farm Produce to help to supply the Belleville Market, and this Woman was buying a $25.00 Suit for her daughter and as a business proposition we do not consider it would be fair to discriminate in favor of the Customer who came by train.

Ours is a Woman's Store, and our Business, one of the largest of its kind in Central Ontario has been established by the ever increasing patronage of Hastings and Prince Edward County Farmers' Wives and Daughters and we want our Customers, both Old and New to know that ALL MONEY LOOKS ALIKE AT SINCLAIR'S, and in Our Store a Farmer's Wife or Daughter can buy just as much for her Dollar as the Woman can who comes to Belleville by train, from any nearby town.

A Reasonable View of the Judgment

Evangelist Johnston Discusses Theme at Advent Hall, Campbell Street

A solemn and impressive discourse was delivered last night by Elder Johnston in Advent Hall, Campbell Street, entitled "A Reasonable View of the Judgment." The text was taken from Daniel 5: 27: Thou are weighed in the balance and art found wanting." Although these words were addressed to the king of Babylon yet they apply with equal force to every unbelieving soul. But, the time of reckoning, however, is confined to the judgment when the Judge of all gives the final decision, and every soul must appear before him. Rom. 14: 10, and give an account of himself, verse 12. The books will be opened also Rev. 20: 12, and whoever is not found written in the Book of Life will be destroyed, Verse 15. But another book will be there Mal. 3: 16, a book which records our thoughts not only that but when the Lord writeth of his people It will be recorded concerning the place and circumstances of our birth. Ps. 87:6, but the greatest book will be there—the Bible, John 12: 48 and what is true of God's word is also true of God's law in particular, James 2: 12. Everything will be considered, even our words, Matt 12: 36, 37, and every secret thing. Eccl. 12: 14. Mr. Johnston then pointed out briefly the time when this Judgment would begin; for a day has been appointed, Acts 17: 31. He referred to a chronological line of prophecy in Dan. 8: 14 that calls for the cleansing up of the records of the heavenly sanctuary at a given period and he proved we were living in that time, when the righteous are being judged. He pointed out the fact that "souls would participate in this work of investigative judgment, because being associated with man, Ps. 34: 7; Heb 1: 14, they have fully acquainted with their lives. An excellent quartette was rendered at the close of the sermon. A splendid gathering was present.

Honored By Their Neighbors

On Friday evening, March 2, the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Ketcheson was invaded by neighbors and friends who had gathered to spend a social evening with them before their removal from our midst. After a time of social intercourse, the crowd was called to order by Mr. C. J. Massey, who acted as chairman, and an address was presented to Mr. and Mrs. Ketcheson and Talbot was read by Mrs. C. Massey, after which they were presented with four beautiful pieces of silver—a carving set, a pie plate with pierced silver frame, a pie knife, and a biscuit jar.

Following is the address, signed on behalf of all by Mr. C. Massey, Mr. G. A. Ketcheson, Mr. C. H. Ketcheson, Mrs. G. A. Ketcheson, Mrs. C. Massey, Mrs. Louise Wright, and Miss May Seeley.

Dear Friends:—It is with feelings of deep regret that we have read that you have joined the ever increasing number of those who heed the fair call, bidding our best citizens to seek homes in the city. In this drift there is no doubt some evidence of prosperity, but we believe that we have good reason for wishing that few would respond. Some leave good, comfortable lives, meeting from day to day the friends of their childhood, and a hardly noting how much a congenial environment counts toward real happiness. In the more populous centres with the more crowded and hurried conditions, many fail to find real, kindred associations, and so become misfits from the standpoint of citizenship and content. We believe, however, that you will be wisely led with some, so to speak. That you will have so many old-time friendships now to be renewed and more fully developed offers much attraction to people of the truly hospitable type, which is your element we are sure. We join in hoping that from the time you bid us, as a church and community, a farewell that you will find a well-deserved welcome to a larger community and church amidst your new surroundings.

Our choir will often think of you because of the parts you have so well taken, and the League, Sunday School, and every good work will miss your sympathy and aid. May these pieces of silverware which we now tender you remind you, if you ever need reminding, that you have scores of warm friends about the old "Valley Farm."

HIGH SCHOOL GIRL

Run-down, Weak, and Nervous—Made Strong By Vinol

For the benefit of Belleville school girl who overwork and get into highly nervous, weak and run-down condition, we publish this letter from Dorris Copller of Fort Worth, Tex.:—"I go to the high school and take many lessons, and became run-down, weak and very nervous, so I could not do my work. I would shake all over and could have screamed at times, and was really unfit to keep on with my studies. Mother purchased a bottle of Vinol for me and within a week I was better, and in two weeks I had gained five pounds and felt fine."

It is the curative, strengthening elements of beef and cod liver peptones, aided by the bloodmaking, revitalizing effect of iron and manganese peptonates and glycerophosphates, contained in Vinol, which made it so successful in building up health and strength and overcoming the nervous condition of Miss Copller, and we ask every school girl in Belleville who is in a similar condition to try Vinol, on our guarantee to return their money if it fails to benefit. Presented With Birthday Gift

On Wednesday evening, March 21st, a number of young friends gathered at the home of Miss Beatrice Bradshaw, 24 Bridge Street, on the occasion of it being her birthday. The girls were a number of her school companions and other girl friends. At seven o'clock a very dainty supper was served, after which Miss Helen McGuiness read the following address:

Dear Beatrice.—We, your friends and companions, have assembled here this evening, and also brought with us a number of little gifts, which we present to you as a token of love and respect. We also wish you many happy and prosperous birthdays in the years to come. Signed on behalf of your many friends and school mates Miss Beatrice thanked the girls for their presents, and hoped they would enjoy the remainder of the evening, which was spent in music and games. At eleven o'clock the girls thanked Mrs. Bradshaw for the enjoyable evening spent, and Miss Goyer played the National Anthem, and the girls joined in the singing.

STOMACH WAS VERY BAD
MUCH DIZZINESS AND PAIN
The Liver Got Out of Order and the Whole System Was Poisoned

Ottawa, Ont., March 26—When the course of the food through the alimentary canal is impeded by sluggish action of the liver or bowels the food remains undigested, and as a result it ferments.

This gives rise to poisonous gases which crowd about the heart and other vital organs and cause choking sensations, as well as irregular action of the heart.

The liver struggles to remove the poisons from the blood, becomes enlarged, and finally fails, allowing the poisons to pass on to every part of the human system. Complications arise, and there is Bright's disease, hardening of the arteries and apoplexy.

The earlier derangements of the digestive system are such as are described by this letter from Mrs. J. Rochon. He also points the way to cure by use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

Mr. Louis Rochon, R. R. No. 11, Ottawa, Ont., writes: "For about seven months my stomach was very bad. I was troubled with dizziness, and had gas on the stomach and awful pains in the right side. The liver seemed to be out of order, so I started using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. This treatment seemed to be exactly what I needed, and before I had the box all used I was well, could eat and feeling as well as ever. I also used Dr. Chase's Nerve Food when feeling weak and suffering from nervous headache, and was soon restored to good health. I am proud of Dr. Chase's medicines, and recommend them above any doctor's medicine."

Sir Douglas Haig Was Discovered in Warfare

And Inspires Confidence

ONE of the most vivid descriptions of the personality of Sir Douglas Haig so far written is that contained in Frederick Palmer's book "My Second Year of the War." It gives an idea of what manner of man the leader of the British army is. Mr. Palmer says:

"It was really the army that chose Sir Douglas Haig to be commander-in-chief. Between the beginning of the retirement of Sir John French was mentioned and you asked an officer who should take his place, the answer was always either Robertson or Haig. In any profession the members should be the best leaders of the excellence of that profession; and through eighteen months of organizing and fighting Sir Douglas had earned the universal praise of their comrades in arms. Robertson went to London and Haig remained in France. England looked to them for victory.

"Birth was kind to Sir Douglas. He came of an old Scotch family with fine traditions. Oxford followed school as a matter of course for him and afterwards he went into the army. From then on the determining influence between his career and Sir William's, simply professional zeal and industry. They set out to master their chosen calling, long before the public had heard of either one their ability was known to their fellow officers. No two officers were more adverse to any form of public advertisement, which was contrary to their instincts no less than to the rules of soldiering. In South Africa which was the practical school in which the officers of to-day first learned how to command, their efficient staff work singled them out for promotion. Both had virtues. They studied the continental systems of war and when the great war came they had the records which were the undeniable recommendation for the command of them—not always their fellows.

"It was the test of command of a corps and afterwards of an army in Flanders and Northern France which made Sir Douglas commander-in-chief. A test of quality in the commander ability which directs cheesmen on the board; that of physical capacity which stands the test of month after month of campaigning, to keep one perspective, never get out of the mastery of the force under you get out of hand and never to be interfered with any details except those that are vital.

"The subordinate who went in an uncertain mood to see either Sir Douglas or Sir William left with a sense of stalwart conviction. Both had the gift of simplifying any situation, however complex. When a certain general became unstrung during the retreat from Mons, Sir Douglas received counsel alone the first duty was to assist this man to recover composure, and he slipped away from headquarters to see that he walked him up and down until composure had returned. After the great retreat from Mons, Sir Douglas said, 'We must stay here for the present if we all die for it!' stating this military necessity with as much assurance as if he were making another quarter-hour for the arrival of a guest to dinner. No man in the British Empire Sir Douglas lived by rule. He, too, insisted upon regularity in all night and rising fresh for his day's work, although the period of preparation for last summer's offensive his routine began with a stroll in the garden before breakfast. Over the heads of the different branches of his staff he could view the situation impersonally and give their reports. —At luncheon he may likely be right out of the war. A man of his education and experience does not lack topics to take his mind off his duties. Every day at half-past two he went for a ride with his aides and the staff of a regiment of Lancers. The rest of the afternoon was given over to conferences. On Sunday morning he always went into headquarters town and in a small, temporary wooden church listened to a sermon from a Scotch dominie who did not spare in length in awe of the eminent member of his congregation. Then he would left the chateau only when he went to the front or of the developing organization.

"Talking with him in the office, which had been the study of a

A New Yorker used rough language to the telephone girl and has been deprived of his phone. We've felt at times that we wish they'd come and take ours away.

The Central Powers are not nasty so concerned with what they will eat their next Christmas dinner as with whether they will eat any.

French country gentleman, one gained an idea of the things that interested him. He was the visioning house of all ideas, and through them he was setting the criterion of efficiency. He spoke of the cause for which he was fighting as if this were the great thing of all to him and to every man under him, but without showing his feelings to interfere with his judgment of the enemy. His opponent was seen without illusion, as soldier and leader. To him the problem was not one of sentiment, but of military science. He dealt in blows and blows alone could win the war. Through all the ups and downs of thought, decision, and readiness to accept responsibility, seemed second nature to the man secluded in that little chateau, free from any contention of what to do but the task—the greatest ever fallen to the lot of a British commander—of making a raw army into a force which could undertake an offensive against frontal positions considered impregnable by many experts and equipped by the skilful German army. His favorite expression was 'the spirit, effort and determination of the whole of discipline, of the fellowship of cohesion of organization—depending out from the personality at the desk in this room throughout all the units to the men themselves."

LABOR TO BENEFIT.

Plan to Have Co-operation in England After War.

Mr. John Hodge, M.P., Minister of Labor, presided at a meeting of the British Workers' National League, at a recent meeting in Manchester. The war, he said, had opened the eyes of a section of the people of this country to the fact that labor in the past had not had its due; it had suffered from unhealthy trade and bad housing. A great association of employers had grown up, with men of big hearts and far-seeing intellects, at the head of it, and they had realized that if they were going to be efficient in the field of trade they must be physical efficiency. That great alliance desired that labor should co-operate with it in the future, because if they were going to secure the partnership between capital and labor they were going to be kept united in a great market in the world. The war had taught the benefits of organization carried out scientifically, and the human mind was the big fish aware of the results of that organization.

The Government at the end of 1915 gave pledges to the position of both soldiers and sailors returning from the war, and the Trade Union Labor, had imposed upon him the duty of seeing that those things were right well done. All the pledges which the Government had made would be fulfilled to the letter. At that point they were fully determined. To avoid strikes and lockouts during the period of reconstruction after peace was important, and they made overtures to employers of labor whom they picked out for bigness of heart and greatness of vision and sympathy with the aspirations of labor. A plan was arranged, and there was general consent to the proposition that a combination of employers and employed working together were the best people to see the lads got back to work. Labor alone could not do that without friction. The two together could, and it was upon that basis that the Minister of Labor was going to form a big central committee and 400 or 500 local committees all over the country for the purpose of dealing with this problem.

Airmen's Slang.

As in other walks of life, a slang understandable to the layman has of course sprung up among the men of the flying circles. For instance, no self-respecting aviator would think of referring to an aeroplane in any other way than as "a bus." A trip in the air is never described as a "flight," but rather as a "joy-ride." A bomb dropping or a "reconnaissance" trip is referred to as a "stunt." Pockets are designated as "pips," and a crash is to "bump," and if the machine gets disturbed while in mid-air the pilot describes it as being "in the doodah." The "control-stick"—that wonderful lever which sets the both ailerons and elevators—is the "joy-stick." The technical name for fuselage is abandoned, and that portion of the machine is re-named "the body." An airman never talks through his hat, at least not in practice, for he does not possess such an article; instead he is the proud owner of a "flying helmet." If you should know you by name he will, with the utmost sang-froid, address you as "Crumpet," while a youngster learning to fly is usually referred to as a "quirk."—Tit-Bits.

The First Telegram.

Contrary to general belief, "What hath God wrought!" was not the first message to be sent by telegraph nor was Morse the sender of the first communication. It was The Popular Science Monthly. Instead, it was sent by one of the committee who were debating upon the proposal of Morse, the inventor, to string a telegraph line from Baltimore to Washington. Mr. Morse, who wanted to end the discussion and at the same time demonstrate his invention, sitting at his wife from the committee room to the top of the Capitol. One of the committee, who was partial to President Tyler, wrote "Tyler defeated, can be hanged." The message received by the man at the other end of exactly as it was composed.

Composer's Quick Wit.

There was real humor in some of the quiet, grim things which the late Lord Cromer did. Once the Young Egyptian party planned a demonstration in favor of France and against Lord Cromer. It was to take place at the opera as he entered, and as he was in his private box, so he knew all this in good time. He promptly ingratiated himself with the leader of the box at the opera, the invitation was accepted, and the hostile crowd was judiciously non-plussed when the two arrived together.

LETTERS FROM OVERSEAS

FROM P. G. PALMER

Dear Mother:—It is about time I dropped you a line or two, as I have not written in a good while, but I am sure you will excuse me, as the weather and conditions have been against this occupation. The weather, although not so cold here as in Canada, is noticed more on account of the dampness. However, it is gradually becoming warmer, and we will be tramping through mud once more. I am at the guns at present, and I have just received your most welcome letter of January 29th; also received other letters of yours, and two parcels a few days ago. One of the parcels contained the woollen cap from Uncle John, and the gloves, which were tri-bon. The other parcel was a box which was in good condition, and you may be sure touched the right spot. I just received a letter from Miss Bishop, written October 26th, which has been delayed some

A Reasonable View of the Judgment

Evangelist Johnston Discusses Theme at Advent Hall, Campbell Street

A solemn and impressive discourse was delivered last night by Elder Johnston in Advent Hall, Campbell Street, entitled "A Reasonable View of the Judgment." The text was taken from Daniel 5: 27: Thou are weighed in the balance and art found wanting." Although these words were addressed to the king of Babylon yet they apply with equal force to every unbelieving soul. But the time of weighing, however, is confined to the judgment when the Judge of all gives the final decision, and every soul must appear before him. Rom. 14: 10, and give an account of himself, verse 12. The books will be opened also the Book of Life, Rev. 20: 12, and whoever is not found written in the Book of Life will be destroyed, Verse 15. But another book will be there also, Mal. 3: 16, a book which records our thoughts not only that but when the Lord weighs the people it will be recorded concerning the place and circumstances of our birth. Ps. 87:6, but the greatest book will be that of the Bible, John 12: 48 and what is true of God's word is also true of God's law in particular, Jaines 2: 12. Everything will be considered, even our words, Matt 12: 36, 37, and every secret thing. Ecel. 12: 14. Mr. Johnston then pointed out briefly the time when this Judgment would begin; for a day has been appointed, Acts 17: 31. He referred to a chronological line of prophecy in Dan. 8: 14 that calls for the cleansing up of the records of the heavenly sanctuary at a given period and he proved we were living in that time, when the righteous are being judged. He pointed out the fact that angels would participate in this work of investigative judgment, because being associated with man, Ps. 34: 7; Heb 1: 14, they are fully acquainted with their lives. An excellent quartette was rendered at the close of the sermon. A splendid gathering was present.

Honored By Their Neighbors

On Friday evening, March 2, the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Ketcheson was invaded by neighbors and friends who had planned to spend a social evening with them before their removal from our midst. After a time of social intercourse, the crowd was called to order by Mr. C. J. Massey, who acted as chairman, and an address of appreciation to Mr. and Mrs. Ketcheson and Talbot was read by Mrs. C. Massey, after which they were presented with four beautiful pieces of silver—a spoon, a pie plate, a cake and pierced silver frame, a pie knife, and a biscuit jar.

Following is the address, signed on behalf of all by Mr. C. Massey, Mr. G. A. Ketcheson, Mrr. C. H. Ketcheson, Mrs. G. A. Ketcheson, Mrs. C. Massey, Miss Louise Wright, and Miss May Seeley.

DEAR FRIENDS:—It is with feelings of deep regret that we have read that you have joined the ever increasing number of those who heed the fair call, bidding one best citizenship to seek haven in the city. In this drift there is no doubt some evidence of prosperity, but we believe that we have good reason for grief, and hoped they would enjoy the remainder of the evening, which was spent in music and games. At eleven o'clock the girls decided Mrs. Bradshaw for the enjoyable evening spent, and Miss Goyer played the National Anthem, and the girls joined in the singing.

STOMACH WAS VERY BAD MUCH DIZZINESS AND PAIN

The Liver Got Out of Order and the Whole System Was Poisoned

Ottawa, Ont. March 26—When the course of the food through the alimentary canal is impeded by sluggish action of the liver or bowels the food remains undigested, and as a result it ferments.

This gives rise to poisonous gases which crowd about the heart and cause headaches and choking sensations, as well as irregular action of the heart.

The liver struggles to remove the poisons from the blood, becomes enlarged, and finally fails, allowing the poisons to pass on to every part of the human system. Complications arise, and there is Bright's disease, hardening of the arteries and apoplexy.

The earlier derangements of the digestive system are such as are described by this letter from Mrs. Rochon. He also points the way to cure by use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

Mr. Louis Rochon, R. R. No. 11, Ottawa, Ont., writes: "For about seven months my stomach was very bad. I was troubled with dizziness, and had gas on the stomach and awful pains in the right side. The liver seemed to be out of order, so I commenced using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. This treatment seemed to be exactly what I needed, and before I had used all I was able to work and feeling as well as ever. I also used Dr. Chase's Nerve Food when feeling weak and suffering from nervous headache, and was soon restored to good health. I am proud of Dr. Chase's medicines, and recommend them above any doctor's medicines."

Sir Douglas Haig Was Discovered in Warfare And Inspires Confidence

ONE of the most vivid descriptions of the personality of Sir Douglas Haig so far written is that contained in Frederick Palmer's book "My Second Year in the War." In it he gives an exact idea of what manner of man the leader of the British army is. Mr. Palmer says:

"It was really the army that chose Sir Douglas Haig to be commander-in-chief. Whenever the possibility of the retirement of Sir John French was mentioned and you asked an officer who should take his place, the answer was always either Robertson or Haig. In any profession the members should be the best judges of the excellence of the profession, and through eighteen months of organizing and fighting these two men had earned the universal praise of their comrades in arms. Robertson went to London and Haig remained in France. England looked to them for victory.

"Birth was kind to Sir Douglas. He came of an old Scotch family with fine traditions. Oxford followed almost as a matter of course for him and afterwards he went into the army. I think that there is something in common between his career and Sir William's, simply professional and natural. Each chose his line out to master their chosen calling. Long before the public had heard of either one their ability was known to their fellow soldiers. No two officers were more adverse to any form of public advertisement, which was contrary to their instincts, no two than to the ethics of soldiering. In South Africa both was the right hand of Lord Kitchener, the officers of to-day first learned how to command, their

Presented With Birthday Gift

On Wednesday evening, March 21st, a number of young friends gathered at the home of Miss Beatrice Bradshaw, 156 Church street, on the occasion of it being her birthday. The girls were a number of her school companions and other girl friends. At seven o'clock a very dainty supper was served, after which Miss Helen McGuiness read the following address:

Dear Beatrice.—We, your friends and companions, have assembled here this evening, and slay brought with us a number of little gifts, which we present to you as a token of love and respect.

We also wish you many happy and prosperous birthdays in years to come. Signed on behalf of young many friends and school mates

Miss Beatrice thanked the girls for their gifts, and hoped they would enjoy the remainder of the evening, which was spent in music and games. At eleven o'clock the girls decided efficient staff work singled them out for coming men. Both had vision. They studied the continental systems of war and when the great war broke they had the records which were the undeniable recommendation to the singled them out above their fellows.

SIR DOUGLAS HAIG.

"It was the test of command of a corps and afterwards of an army in the battles of Northern France which made Sir Douglas Haig commander-in-chief, a test of more than the academic ability which directs manoeuvres on the board: that of physical capacity to endure the strain of months after month of campaigning, to keep the mind unbiassed, free from the mastery of the force under you get out of hand and never to be burdened with any details except those that are vital.

"The subordinate who went in an uncertain mood to see either Sir Douglas or Sir William left with a sense of stalwart conviction. Both had the gift of simplifying any situation, however complex. When a certain general became unstrung during the battle of Loos, Sir Douglas seemed to consider that his duty was to recover composure, and he slipped after him and found him pacing and walked him up and down until composure had returned. Again, in the retreat from Mons, Sir Douglas said, 'We must stay here for the present if we all die for it!' stating the military necessity as if it meant nothing unless another army existed for the arrival of a guest to dinner.

"No less than General Joffre, Sir Douglas lived by rule. He, too, inclined upon the simple at night and rising fresh for his day's work. During the period of preparation for last summer's offensive his routine began with a stroll in the garden before breakfast. Other men heads of the different branches of his staff met him at the breakfast table and give their reports. At luncheon very likely he was not talk of the war. At the end of his evening's conference does not lack topics to take his mind off all shop. Every day at half-past two he went for a ride and with him an escort of his own regiment of Lancers. The rest of the afternoon was given over to conferences. On Sunday morning he always went into headquarters town and in a small, simply furnished chapel listened to a sermon from a chaplain. Then he had a walk and a tenth in awe of the eminent member of his congregation. Otherwise, he left the chateau only when he went to see with his own eyes some section of the front or of the developing organization.

"Talking with him in the office, which had been the study of a French country gentleman, one gained an idea of the things that interested him. He was the clearing house of all ideas, and through them he was setting the criterion of efficiency. He spoke of the cause for which he was fighting as if it were the great thing of all to him and to every man under him, but without allowing his feelings to interfere with his judgment of the enemy. His opponent was seen without illusion. As a soldier and scientist, to him the problem was not one of sentiment, but of military power. He dealt in blood and iron with the cool eye that was. Simplicity and directness of thought, decision, and readiness to accept responsibility, seemed second nature to the man who handed in that little chaaau, free from any confusion of detail, when the battle was the greatest ever fallen to the lot of a British commander—of making a war army a force which it would undertake an offensive against fortifications and artillery considered invincible by many experts and occupied by the skilful German army. His favorite expression was 'the spirit of the quicksand': the spirit of effort, of discipline, of the fellowship of cohesion of organization—spreading out from the personality at his desk in this room down through all the units to the most subordinate."

LABOR TO BENEFIT.

Plan to Have Co-operation in England After War.

Mr. John Hodge, M.P., Minister of Labor, presided as president of the British Workers' National Council at a recent meeting in Manchester. The work, he said, had been under the eyes of a section of the people of this country to the fact that labor in the past had not had its due; it had suffered from undeserved poverty and housing. A great association of employers had been formed, with men of big hearts and far-seeing intellects, at the head of it, and they had declared that if they were going to be efficient in this land of theirs labor must be physical efficiency. That great alliance desired that labor should co-operate with it in the future, because if labor were going to renew the combat between capital and labor they would be at a great disadvantage in the markets of the world. The war had taught the benefits of organization carried out scientifically, and they were going to make his full share of the results of that organization.

The Government at the end of 1915 gave pledges as to the position of both skilled and unskilled workmen from the war, and he, as Minister of Labor, had imposed upon him the duty of seeing that those things were kept in full effect. That meant that which the Government had made would be fulfilled to the letter. On that point they were fully determined. To avoid strikes and lockouts during the period of reconstruction after peace was important, and they made overtures to employers of labor whom they picked out for bigness of heart and intelligence, and found in sympathy with the aspirations of labor. A plan was agreed upon, and there was general concurrence in the proposition that a combination of employers and employed working together were the best people to see the lads got back to work. Labor alone could not do that without friction. The two could work, and it was upon that basis that the Minister of Labor was going to form a joint conference with 400 or 500 local committees all over the country for the purpose of dealing with this problem.

Airmen's Slang.

As in other walks of life, a slang understanding is to the layman but of recent months sprung into being in flying circles. For instance, no airman respecting aviator would think of referring to an aeroplane in any other way than as "a bus." A trip in the air is never described as such, but rather as a "joy-ride." The bomb dropping or a "reconnaissance" trip is referred to as a "stunt." The pilot of this and wasted air are referred to as "bunglers." The machine gets disturbed while in mid-air the pilot gets it, is "hedge hopping" or "dood-ah." The "control-stick"—that wonderful contraption that works both ailerons and elevators—is the "joy-stick." The technical name "fuselage" is abandoned, and the location of the machine is re-named "the body." The airman never gets through his hat, at least not in practice, for he does not possess one. An article; instead he is the proud owner of a "grummet." If he does not know you he will address you as "old utmost sangfroid, address you as "old thing," while a machine reported to fly is always referred to as a "quirk." Exit Bills.

The First Telegram.

Contrary to general belief, "What hath God wrought!" was not the first message to be sent by telegraph, nor was Morse the sender of the first communication, says The Popular Science Monthly. Instead, it was sent by one of the assistants who were debating upon the proposal of Morse, the inventor, to string a telegraph line from Baltimore to Washington. Mr. Morse, who wanted to end the discussion and at the same time demonstrate his invention, sent a wire from the room to another room to the top of the Capitol. One of the committee, who was opposed to President Tyler, wrote "Tyler deserves to be hanged." This was received by the man at the other end exactly as it was composed.

Cromer's Quick Wit.

There was much humor in some of the quiet, grim things which the late Lord Cromer did. Once the Young Egyptian party planned a demonstration in favor of France and against England. Cromer, who had his spies at the opera as he entered, and as he left, was told that a bomb was to be thrown in good time. He promptly informed the French agent in the box at the opera, the invitation was accepted, and the hostile crowd was ludicrously non-plussed when the two arrived together.

The Central Powers are not nearly so concerned with where they will eat their next Christmas dinner as with whether they will eat say.

ANYTHING FOR POWER.

The anti-conscription and anti-National Service agitations proceeding in Quebec leave no reasonable doubt in the public mind as to which of the political parties is allied with the Bourassa Nationalists. As was the case in the late Quebec Provincial elections, Liberal and Nationalists have joined forces and are daily meeting on the same platforms to denounce measures designed to throw the full strength of the Dominion into the war. Nationalist workers like Tancrede Marcil (who wants to see a French-Canadian Republic on the banks of the St. Lawrence) are cursing Canada's participation in the war with one breath and crying for the return to power of Sir Wilfrid Laurier with the next.

A recent meeting in Montreal to denounce National Service and decry against conscription, was presided over by one of the most prominent Liberal workers in that city and was addressed by a Liberal candidate for the House of Commons. Thus, while Liberal papers like the Toronto Globe and the London Advertiser are cursing the Government in Ontario for not doing enough in the war, a Liberal-Nationalist alliance is assailing it in Quebec for doing too much in the war. In Ontario Sir Robert Borden is attacked for not speeding up recruiting. In Quebec he is execrated for permitting recruiting at all. It is an unpatriotic, despicable game, and at the proper time will be suitably repudiated by the bulk of Canadians. Meanwhile, while Sir Robert Borden is representing the Dominion at the Imperial War Conference, called to help consecrate the whole strength of the Empire to the prosecution of the war, Sir Wilfrid Laurier is at home scheming to divide the Canadian people in a mad attempt to get back into office by using the "bloody key."

A HOPEFUL ATTITUDE.

Last Saturday's official outgiving at Washington was more than usually reassuring—indeed most satisfactory, in the editorial opinion of the New York Evening Sun, one of New York's staunch pro-Ally newspapers. "All the talk of passive war has disappeared," says The Sun, "and dollar war is at a discount."

The President's friends and mediums of communication with the newspapers all affirmed that preparations for "effective and aggressive warfare in addition to measures for the protection of shipping" are being planned comprehensively. It is common knowledge that in Ad-[illegible]istration circles resentment was [illegible] at the suggestion that the [illegible]ent hoped "actual warfare [illegible] be avoided and that he would [illegible] lightly and ineffectively even [illegible]ations by the military and [illegible] forces were undertaken [illegible] Germany."

[illegible] is a noble resentment, says [illegible]n," and it rejoices us as [illegible]e further assurance that the [illegible]nistration proposes "to con[illegible]ct a warfare of the most vigorous [illegible]t against Germany once hostili[illegible] are begun." This is the right [illegible]a. We must fight to win. We [illegible] not going to war to achieve [illegible]ce without victory. That we can [illegible]e by just keeping still. We are going to war to assert the rights and vindicate the honor of the United States of America and to punish the Government and the people that have outraged both. Our one salvation is to fight for and to a definite result. That result is the extirpation from the earth of Prussianism, of frightfulness, of that form of Kultur which consists of international brigandage and piracy exercised under the semblance of organized government.

"Whatever might be our attitude upon domestic operations and in seasons of peaceful struggle over social and economic principles and theories, it is our highest aspiration, as it is the aspiration of every loyal citizen, in the face of international difficulty to be one with the President in mind and heart in his leadership of the nation and his command of its military forces. It would be a pain and a deep anxiety to us if we should find the Administration guilty of aberrations of sentiment or judgment injurious to the national honor or harmful to the national welfare, which we should feel morally obliged to censure. In this way we should be compelled to regard any policy of war that was not real war. It is therefore with unfeigned and cordial joy that we welcome the most recent disclosures as to his state of mind and his developed purposes. We are with him and behind him heart and soul, and we invoke for him universal support in the course which his spokesmen say he has adopted."

Loyal supporters of the Allied cause, including many prominent Americans, have become impatient at the tardiness of President Wilson; but there is no doubt as to what will follow a clean-cut declaration of war against Germany and her allies.

Current Comment

Siir Thomas White's war loans are as popular as the Minister himself.

The Council of Agriculture which rejected the British offer for Canada's wheat crop of 1917 took the gambler's chance against a sure thing.

Some Liberal members at the recent session demanded that the Ross Rifle contract be cancelled under conditions which would leave Canada liable for a large amount of money by way of damages. The Government preferred to wait until that liability was non-existent.

W. D. Scott, superintendent of immigration, anticipates this season the biggest movement for several years of American farmers to the Canadian West. Settlers and their effects are now arriving at a rate which compares well with the boom days of nine or ten years ago. Most of them are buying land.

The Winnipeg Tribune is telling its readers that protection has depopulated the rural districts of Ontario, but gives no reason for the statement. But there has been even greater depopulation of rural districts in England under Free Trade. In the Mother Country they are now thinking of protection to restore agriculture.

With the purpose of offering his services to enable the coal miners and operators of this territory to reach an amicable agreement, Hon. T. W. Crothers, Dominion Minister of Labor, arrived in Calgary this morning. Mr. Crothers expressed the opinion that a settlement of the matters at issue will certainly be reached.

Letters and telegrams from western grain producers received in Ottawa show that not all the Western farmers are behind the Council of Agriculture which rejected the British offer of a flat rate of $1.30 a bushel for wheat. There are many who think the offer a fair one and that for patriotic as well as business reasons it should have been accepted.

If the so-called prohibition Provinces really want a "bone dry" state of affairs within their borders, all they have to do is say so and under the Doherty Act they will have it. It is significant that thus far not one of them has said so. These astute Liberal politicians in the West would prefer to have the onus of a "bone dry" measure shifted to the Conservative Government at Ottawa.—Calgary Daily Herald.

Of all overworked women probably the housewife is the hardest worked. She has so much to attend to, with very little help. Her work can be lightened if she knows the value of system and she should try and take a short rest in the daytime. A physician who became famous almost around the world, Doctor Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., the specialist in woman's diseases, for many years practiced medicine in a farming district. He there observed the lack of system in the planning of the work.

If it is a headache, a backache, a sensation of irritability or twitching and uncontrollable nervousness, something must be wrong with the head or back, a woman naturally says, but all the time the real trouble very often centers in the organs. In nine cases out of ten the seat of the difficulty is here, and a woman should take rational treatment for its cure. The disorder should be treated steadily and systematically with Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.

For diseases from which women suffer "Favorite Prescription" is a powerful restorative. During the last fifty years it has banished from the lives of tens of thousands of women the pain, worry, misery and distress caused by these diseases.

If you are a sufferer, get Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription in liquid or tablet form to-day. Then address Dr. Pierce, Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., and get confidential medical advice entirely free.

The man who at a recruiting meeting tells his hearers that the French-Canadians have grievances and that British rule in Ireland has been shameful is not really looking for recruits. He is thinking more of polling booths than he is of trenches.

The new scheme for organizing a force of fifty thousand men to relieve a similar force ready to go overseas furnishes a fine opportunity for the Quebec autonomists who have always averred they would rally for home defence but not for "foreign wars."

LIGHT ON SALONIKI

A MINGLING OF MANY RACES.

The Town Has a Slight Italian Flavor, and the Striking Costumes of Its Varied Peoples Form a Complete Exhibition of Balkan Fashions.

A striking picture of street life in Saloniki, Greece, is given in a bulletin of the National Geographic society compiled from a communication to the society from H. G. Dwight.

"Somebody had told me that Saloniki was rather like Genoa," writes Mr. Dwight. "My first impression, therefore, was of a disappointing flatness not in the least comparable to the lofty air—the piled, bastioned, heaven scaling air—of the Italian city. Yet Saloniki scales heaven, too, in her more discreet manner.

"And there is even something faintly Italian about her. This is most palpable on the broad quay of the water front, especially when a veritable row of fishermen from the Adriatic are drying nets or sails under the sea wall, just as they do in Venice. The crescent of white buildings facing the blue bay would not look foreign in any Rimini or Spezzia.

"The White tower, which is the most conspicuous of them, might perfectly have been the work of an Italian prince. Indeed, a doge of Venice is said to have built the first edition of it, and Suleiman the Magnificent employed Venetians for his own.

"Look a little closer, however, and this Italian appearing town has unfamiliar details. The white campanili that everywhere prick up above the roofs of weathered red are too slender and too pointed for true bell towers. Then, as you land at the quay you perceive that the electric cars are labeled in strange alphabets. The cafes do not look quite as they should either.

"As for the people in them, a good many would pass without question. Just such slight and trim young men in Italy would sit at little tables on the sidewalk. Just such young women, rather pale and powdered as to complexion, rather dusky as to eyes and hair, would sit beside them. And you hear a good deal of Italian. But you hear more of other and less familiar languages. And those red fezzes are another note.

"A more striking note is afforded by numerous dignified old gentlemen taking their ease in their bathrobes, as it were, slit a little up the side and tied about the waist with a gay silk girdle. Over the bathrobe they [illegible] wear a long open coat lined with yellow fur, which guards them from the cold in winter and in the summer from heat. And none of them is without a string of beads, preferably of amber, dangling from his hand and giving him something to play with.

"Such an old gentleman should be accompanied by an old lady, who contributes what is most characteristic to the local color of Saloniki. The foundation of her costume is a petticoat of some dark silk and a white bodice crossed below her throat—a very thin bodice, cut very low at the neck and unstiffened by any such mail as western women arm themselves with.

"Over this superstructure the old lady wears a dark satin bolero lined with fur and two striped silk aprons, one before and one behind. The latter is caught up on one side, some corner of it being apparently tucked into a mysterious pocket. But the crown and glory of the old lady is her headdress, a sort of flat frame tightly wound about with a stamped or embroidered handkerchief and crowned with an oval gilt plaque set off by seed pearls. Whatever its color, this creation invariably ends in a fringed tail of dark green silk, also ornamented by a gilt or gold plaque of seed pearls hanking halfway down the old lady's back. In this wonderful tail she keeps her hair, of which you see not a scrap unless at the temples. And about her throat she wears strings and strings of more seed pearls.

"She is, this decorative, this often extremely handsome old lady, a mother in Israel. The old gentleman in the gaberdine is her legitimate consort, while many of the modernized young people at the cafe tables are their descendants—very many. A dozen different estimates of the population are given, varying according to the race of the informant, but they all agree on the point that Saloniki contains not far from 150,000 people and that more than half of them are Jews.

"To loiter among the booths of Saloniki's bazaar, to explore the busy squares and markets beyond it, to stroll in the crowded street of the Vardar or to idle among the coffee houses of its western end is to take in something of the Macedonian question.

"Tall Albanians, variously braided according to their tribes and wearing white skullcaps on one ear, stalk through the crowd with that lordly swing of theirs. Bulgarians, less lordly, but no less indifferent to the opinion of the world at large, mind their own business in brown homespun. Kilted Greek peasants in tight white trousers tasseled under the knee, booted Montenegrins with hanging sleeves, lend the scene an operatic air.

"Women in hats, women in kerchiefs, women in embroideries that you want to buy off their backs—and sometimes do—women in the Turkish domino, offer a complete exhibition of Balkan fashions."

One of the sublimest things in the world is plain truth.—Bulwer.

Object of the Visit.

"Did the titled foreigner call on you to ask your consent to his marrige with your daughter?"

"I don't think so," replied Mr. Cumrox. "My impression is that he came to look me over and decide whether I was sufficiently good form to be invited to the wedding."—Washington Star.

He Got the Job.

"I understand that you told my clerk you were seeking employment?"

"Your clerk misinformed you. I told him I was looking for work."

"Take off your coat."—Houston Post.

CALLED BY DEATH.

SARAH JANE DONOUGH

After a brief illness Mrs. Sarah Jane Donough, widow of the late Mr. Richard Donough, passed away at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Samuel Levitt, 29 Bridge Street West, Belleville, Deceased, who was in her 78th year, was born in Mitchell, and the greater portion of her life was spent in the western part of the province. She had lived in Belleville for some time, and was much respected by all who knew her. Deceased had been for many years a member of the Methodist church. One son and two daughters survive. The son, John, who is a South African veteran, is at present serving his King and country in France. The daughters are Mrs. Samuel Levitt, at this city, and Mrs. Ed. Palmer of Detroit, Mich. A brother, P. D. Etue, of Kansas City, and a sister, Mrs. L. L. Bowling, of Colorado Springs, Col., are living.

OBSEQUIES.

MELVILLE P. HAGERMAN

At the family residence, West Bridge street, on Wednesday morning, services were held over the remains of the late Mr. Melville P. Hagerman, the same being conducted by Rev. J. G. Clarke, pastor of Holloway Street Methodist Church. Many were in attendance at the obsequies, and the floral designs were numerous and beautiful, showing the esteem in which deceased was held. The remains were taken to Stirling for interment in the family plot at the Stirling cemetery. The bearers were Messrs. Frank V. Buckley, R. C. Crook, and J. C. Waddell of the Post Office staff, and G. Brower, R. Bird and Dr. Dupras.

My First Valentine

Having Treasured It, I Came Upon It in Middle Life.

By WILLARD BLAKEMAN

I remember the first valentine I ever got. It is a big, good one, as I remember it, for it marked an important feature in my life. But this is not the reason for my remembering it. The true cause was the impression made upon me at the time, and that impression has remained with me and will remain with me so long as I live.

In childhood one feels keenly little things that would be of trifling importance in maturity. Child loves are evanescent, but while they last they are of paramount importance. And disappointments! I can remember one day when I was a boy that I was to have been taken to a show. I was away from home at the time and delayed going back till it was too late. I locked myself in my room and bewailed so loud that I could be heard all over the house.

But as to my valentine. I was past the age when children expect a valentine in getting a great number of these missives, but not old enough to discard them. At any rate, I received a valentine and was very much affected by it. The filigree work, the lacelike hearts, the attachment, within which was a beautiful Cupid with a bow and a quiver full of arrows, all appealed to thrill me with a delight that I had never felt before. And I took it for a certainty that the little girl who sent it to me loved me as she said she did in the verses that she composed.

And how my imagination pictured her in the flesh! She had such deep eyes and golden hair that hung in shining wavelets down her back. I likened her to fairies I had seen in picture books dressed in spangles and holding a rod with a star on one end. There was nothing beautiful that I did not liken her to. And of think that this fair being loved me—not only loved me, but had sent this dainty missive to tell me so!

There was nothing in the valentine to indicate who sent it. Indeed, I think if I had known from whom it came it would have destroyed this vision of loveliness I created. Perhaps it was a boy of more than ordinary ideality. I needed a subject for my adoration. Whether she seemed to me to endeavor to discover my valentine I don't now remember. What I do remember is dwelling upon her as an imaginary creature.

Thus did one error me of my love. I grew to mislabor, but I treasured my image, though it gradually faded into a fairy form, the whole being a delightful memory.

When I became a man I met a girl to whom I was drawn, not only on account of her physical attractions, but because she was one of those women on possessing that which we call character. There is no other word that expresses what I mean, but what it stands for is a great deal.

Margaret Rutherford and I became fast friends. Friendship—platonic friendship—is what I felt for her. There was another girl of my acquaintance who affected me very differently. Indeed, she was a very different girl. She was piquant, being also a bit of a flirt, and had brought her fascinations to bear upon me. I do not mean that she was to be blamed for that. It is a woman's province to flatter men. But there were times with every girl no matter how strong, when he needs to be flattered.

Lucy Tisdale's methods were very innocent. She was lovable, not only from a certain native feminine delicacy there was about her, but she had in her a certain romance. She loved poetry and pictures. Any voice in a woman is an important factor, and Lucy Tisdale had a very feminine voice. My friend, Margaret's voice was rich; Lucy's was like a child's. Another difference between the two girls was that when Margaret was displeased she showed her displeasure with a quiet dignity. Lucy, on the contrary, would cast down her eyes and seem rather hurt than offended.

Why I know not, but I sometimes associated Lucy with my imaginary valentine. I suppose it was that she was childlike. My valentine, being a creature of the imagination and perfect, had a great advantage over Lucy, who was a real being in the flesh. But, being one, a great deal of the reverence for the opposite sex that I had when a boy had dwindled. Alas, now that I am so old that I cannot, it has not died out, it has greatly changed. A woman is not a creature to be placed under glass and worshiped. She is to be valued in proportion as she fills the position in which Providence has placed her.

Margaret and Lucy did not belong to the same social set and did not know each other. This enabled me to keep them and enjoy the companionship of each as I wanted it. I confess that I wanted Lucy's more than Margaret's. After a hard day's work I usually sought Lucy in the evening. Her sprightliness took the tired feeling out of me. When anything troubled me I turned to Margaret. Why I was given a reason why when tired I wanted Lucy, but I am unable to say why when troubled I wanted Margaret. Lucy only say that I needed cheer, for what else supplied.

The world is constantly moving around us every day. Lucy's disposition seems to me a necessity now, and Margaret's a necessity also, as time goes on and runs its course. But there was a day when I felt I needed Lucy and Margaret not at the while, and I married her. She was by no means liable to accept me and I was very happy with her. But I missed that stimulating influence I had drawn from Margaret. When I was simply tired I got from my wife what I wanted, when I wished for some one to talk to I found my plans by talking them over, she helped me. She would tell me which to adopt them, but her suggestions did not tend to put me on the right track or draw me off a wrong one.

On this account I gradually refrained from consulting her about my affairs. Whether or not she noticed the change, she never took me to task for it; rather fancied that each mastered her. After my marriage my old friend Margaret became quite chummy with my wife. I think Margaret found in Lucy that child added as a sedative that she had good sense to leave in together without interruption. And I doubt if she was ever jealous of Jessie. I had strong proof that she was not as I am about to relate.

Lucy was fabulously rich for a girl. When we had been married ten years a waste of vitality set in, and after many trips and a surfeit of medicine I made up my mind that her health could not be restored. From this time on she sank gradually. Shortly before her death she told me that she had not long to live and that there was a matter of importance on which she wished to speak to me. I assented, and she said:

"Frank, why did you not marry Margaret Stanford instead of me?"

"Because I loved you and did not love her."

"Why was that?"

"Because—well, because you appealed to me as she did not."

"How?"

"Well, your sentiment fitted in with mine. Margaret is not an especially sentimental woman."

"I'm not so sure of that. You made a mistake, Frank. You should have married Margaret. She would have been a better helpmeet for you than I."

I confess I was astonished to hear my wife tell me this. I was impressed with her nobility in thus suggesting another woman above herself. I took her in my arms, but gave no verbal expression of my reverence for her.

"When I am gone," she said, "I want you to correct this mistake. I want you to marry Margaret."

"Oh, Lucy! I care all I could and—"

"I always believed that you needed a stronger woman than I, both physically and mentally, but I could not give you up. Now that I must give you you must let me choose a companion for you for what concerns after your life."

I told her that I had no reason to suppose that Margaret would marry me.

"She has always loved you," said my wife.

"How, then, is it," I said astonished, "that you have permitted me to be so much of her?"

"Because I knew you loved me and that she would never try to take you away from me."

My wife died, and in time I married Margaret. I was but thirty-three years old when I married the second time, and again of life as I had already lived. Contrary to my expectation, I did not miss the sentiment that I had thought she lacked so much as I expected. As time went on I found her companionship very satisfying, and from the time of our marriage our joint judgment guided our affairs.

One day Margaret said to me that she had, according to my wishes, been getting rid of a lot of accumulations of letters and papers that pertained to the past and were useless as a encumbrance. She had brought down some of these to show me before burning them, feeling them over, I came upon a valentine. As I continued to look at it I became impressed with the fact that it was my first valentine, the one that had affected me so deeply. I had treasured it as a boy, but when I grew older had forgotten it.

"Here is something," I said, showing it to my wife, "that gave me a sensation which can never be repeated. The image I conjured up of the child who sent it to me remained with me when I had outgrown the valentine age."

"What was your imaginary sweetheart like?" asked Margaret.

I smiled and said I did not remember; it had faded twenty years agone.

"Was it anything like me?" she asked, looking at me with a quizzical expression.

"You? Oh, dear, no! It was a child, a fairylike little thing, with blue eyes and golden hair."

"More like Lucy?"

"Come," I said, putting the valentine away, "Let us not bring up the past." Turning from the valentine to Margaret; I noticed a curious expression on her face.

"Why did you ask that?" I said.

"Because I was the fairylike child who sent it to you."

I stood looking at her in a bewildered condition of mind for some time without speaking. Was she in earnest? Something in her expression told me that she was. I folded her in my arms. There were no words to express my feelings.

Candor is always a good thing, but there is no room for it in official war reports.

MADE HIS WORKMEN RIVALS.

How Charles M. Schwab Secured Them on to Greater Efforts.

In telling how he increased the efficiency of one of his departments Charles M. Schwab, the famous steel man, says in the American Magazine:

"It was near the end of the day, while a few minutes the night force would come on duty. I noticed a workman who was standing idle on one of the red mouthed furnaces and asked him for a piece of chalk.

"How many heats has your shift made today?" I queried.

"Six," he replied.

"I chalked a big '6' on the floor and passed along without another word. When the night shift came in they saw the '6' and asked about it.

"That big boss was in here today," said the day men. 'He asked us how many heats we had made, and we told him six. He chalked it down on the floor.'

"The next morning I passed through the same mill. I saw that the '6' had been rubbed out and a big '7' written instead. The night shift had announced itself first. That's the way it went back. The '7' had been erased, and a big '8' appeared in its place. It was a fierce recognition of superiors. There is fine competition was started, and it went on until this department had the poorest producer, was turning out more than any other mill in the plant."

STING OF THE HONEYBEE.

About the Most Effective Infernal Machine in Existence.

In proportion to its size, the sting of the honeybee is probably the most effective infernal machine in existence.

The sting apparatus is smaller than that of a rattlesnake, yet a single sting has been known to kill a man. When one realizes that it is never visible and consider what it can do we cannot fail to be astonished. It seems the very quintessence of devilishness.

The honeybee's sting is complicated —so complicated that many words and much ink have been used in discussing its construction and use.

It is generally accepted that the sting consists of a shaft of three parts, the principal one being a hollow tube in which move two barbed lancets. Like the barbs of a fishhook, the lancets are usually entirely hidden from sight, for which they have been driven. The poison sac, in which the virus is discharged from a hollow tube through which the poison flows from the poison sac.

The hairy, self-protecting, evidently very sensitive, inform the bee when she is in contact with a sizable object.—Popular Science Monthly.

HIS SMUGGLING TRICK.

A Mexican Trader's Way of Evading the Customs Inspectors.

There are ways of evading duty down on the Rio Grande impossible to the port of New York. The Mexican found a way. He was a merchant just on the other side of the Mexican border. He had two vases which had caught the fancy of an American customer, but they were dear, and with the duty added—not to be thought of. The customer told the Mexican so. The Mexican fell flat. But the price was still too dear. The Mexican fell again. But still there was the duty staring the customer in the face. Then suddenly, without explaining how, the Mexican intimated that the vases should be delivered free of duty on the other side of the Rio Grande—next morning, if he had time.

"And," the Mexican add in a charming manner, "I will be there to collect."

At breakfast next morning, as the customer was eating leisurely, the Mexican appeared.

"Here are the vases?" the customer inquired.

"In the next room, senor," replied the Mexican, smiling blandly.

"And the duty?"

"There is no duty, senor."

"How in under did you manage it?" asked the American, amazed.

"I paid a greaser a dollar, senor. With the vases strapped to his back, he swam the Rio Grande. See, senor" —burying to bring in a vase from the next room and touching it gently with his fingers—"they are whole,"per-fect."

Courtesy and Work.

When I want to find fault with my men I say nothing when I go through their departments. If I were satisfied I would praise them. My silence hurts them more than anything else in the world, and it doesn't give offense. It makes them think and work harder.

Many men fail because they do not see the importance of being kind and courteous to the men under them. Kindness to everybody always pays for itself. And, besides, it is a pleasure to be kind. I have seen men lose important positions, or their reputations which are more important than any position—by little careless discourtesies to men whom they did not think it was worth while to be kind to.—Charles M. Schwab in American Magazine.

The Land of the Kurds.

Kurdistan appeals to the archaeologist. "It was ruled successively by the Persians, Macedonians, Parthians, Sassanians and Romans and is exceedingly rich in antiquarian remains, most of which are still unexamined. The Kurds are a wild, pastoral, partly nomadic people, are mostly Mohammedans and are very hostile to Christians, their cruel massacre of the Armenians being only too well known. Kurdistan belongs to both the Turkish and the Persian monarchies, though chiefly to the former.—London Chronicle.

THE SMOKE PROBLEM.

A prize of $500 was offered by Washington's administration for the best design for a house to serve as a home for the president in Washington' James Hoban, an Irishman from South Carolina, was the successful competitor. His sketch contained so many wings and colonnades that the public was horrified, and frills and gingerbread decorations were eliminated. The result was the two story White House as we know now. Washington laid the cornerone of the building in 1792. It was completed in 1799, the year of Washington's death.

What a Ragamuffin Did on Christmas Morning

By F. A. MITCHEL

Dr. Tourniquet, the famous surgeon, was sitting before his desk on Christmas morning looking over his accounts, though his principal work was making up his bank account when the door was opened a little ragged boy entered.

"How did you get in here?" asked the doctor.

"The door was open and I walked into the house. Then I opened the next I came to."

"Well, what do you want?"

"Me mudder is sent dood to dis." Me fadder sent me for a doctor. I seen the sign and came in."

The doctor pushed aside the pile of checks before him and, swinging around in his chair, said:

"Your father didn't tell you to come to me!"

"No, sir. He said to go to any doctor I could find that would come. I've been to three before from. They axed me if I had any money to pay, and when I said no they showed me out."

The doctor continued to gaze at the boy meditatively, then took up a tube transmitter and ordered his car brought to the door. Telling the boy to "come along," he got into the car and directed his chauffeur to drive to the address the child gave. He found a wretched hovel, a wretched one account of poverty, on account of the woman being ill, but especially wretched to the doctor, whose patients usually lived in luxurious homes. He pictured houses he had visited the day before and the preparations for Christmas he had seen.

"The woman was in a state of collapse, but a little treatment brought relief, and she was told that her trouble would disappear and was not likely to return, though the doctor left some medicine for her to take. This done, he took up his cases and was going out when the boy stepped up to him and, holding out a basketful of copper cents, nickels, said:

"Here's yer pay, doctor—yer's for Christmas. I reckon I'll have to let Christmas go till next time."

Again the prosperous man looked at the ragged boy. What was the doctor thinking of? Was he picturing children of his class who were loaded down with gifts on that Christmas morning, denied nothing, while this poor boy was handing him his savings for that anniversary which children love best? Did he call to his mind's eye the pile of checks he had left on his desk awaiting his advice? Did it occur to him that he was going back to his home to finish getting ready Christmas gifts for the family in the morning, to dine sumptuously, leaving this family without a morsel of Christmas comfort?

Diving into his pocket, the doctor brought out a roll of bills and, without counting them said to the invalid, her husband and the boy:

"Why it is that I am given so much and you so little is one of the great mysteries of the world. Take this," handing the boy the roll, "and buy whatever you need for your mother, your father and yourself. Remember this is Christmas morning. It's late to provide, but do the best you can."

"Oh, doctor," exclaimed the sick woman, "how good you are!"

"Good! Don't call me good. You don't know me. I'm selfish and mean. I've had more than my share of prosperity. I visit only those who are prosperous as myself. I'm not called on by the poor. I'm seldom called too high and mighty. Had not some one left my front door ajar your boy would not have disturbed me, and you and he would have gone away."

"We must all take care of ourselves, doctor," said the sick. "If we don't nobody will take care of us."

"Not so," said the doctor, rising to his feet and preparing to go. "We have more than we need and it is our duty to take care of those who are suffering. I will take care of you."

"But you are kind and generous with your children, doctor."

"What could be that? I once shot a bear's cub. The mother bear showed me the most grief at the death of her offspring as I ever saw in any one. Now and I have seen hundreds of parents act the part of mother bear. Good day."

"But you have begun to be good to the poor this Christmas day and will—"

The doctor turned away and went out without hearing what he would do in future. He knew he would do nothing. He believed it was his duty to do the work he was doing and was considered practicable. Suppose from that moment he should devote his time to those who could pay nothing for his services. Where would he be by, the following Christmas? His children were growing up in luxury. There must be a sudden cutting down of the family expenses. He would lose a great part of his palatial residence. If he told the real why he made these changes, it would consider him demented. If he did not, the world would infer that he had lost his grip. He would no longer be called to the homes of the rich. He would lose caste with his fellow medical men. In time not only he, but his family, would be reduced to poverty.

Nevertheless the ragamuffin's visit made a change in Dr. Tourniquet. "If I can't do these things myself," he argued, "there are others who can." After that the doctor was a liberal giver to those associations that do the

NICKEL COMPANY PROFITS DISCUSSED IN LEGISLATURE

Tax on War Profits on Basis Recommended by Nickel Commission Would Mean Big Revenue to Province

TORONTO, March 27—Special—If the Ontario Government brings down legislation based upon the recommendations of the Ontario Nickel Commission, a change in the method of determining ore values in order to get at net profits will bring into the Provincial Treasury in the future an enormous increase in revenue. The report of the commission, made after a year and a half of investigation on three continents was laid upon the table in the Legislature yesterday. Covering every phase of the mining industry of the province, and particularly the nickel industry, the report is of special value in its bearing upon the problems connected with nickel refining and taxation.

Upon the question of nickel refining the commissioners declare emphatically that nickel can be refined economically in Ontario, and that the deposits are of such a character that this province can compete successfully as a nickel producer with any other country. In supporting their opinion upon that important point the commissioners give the Legislature their conclusions under a number of separate heads. They declare that:

The nickel ore deposits of Ontario are much more extensive and offer better facilities for the production of nickel at a low cost than do those of any other country. Nickel-bearing ores occur in many parts of the world, but the great extent of the deposits in this province, their richness and uniformity in metal contents, and the success of the industry point strongly to the conclusion that Ontario nickel has little to fear from competition.

Any of the processes now in use for refining nickel could be successfully worked in Ontario and conditions and facilities are at least as good in this province as in any other part of Canada.

Man Killed In Train Wreck

Collision on C. P. R. At Moose Lake Engineer Reported to Have Overrun Orders

PEMBROKE, March 26—One man dead and two dangerously injured is the result of a collision which occurred this morning on the C.P.R. at Moore Lake, 40 miles from Pembroke, caused, it is said by an engineer overrunning his orders. Late this morning the two injured were reported doing well and will probably recover. The one victim so far is Robert Freeland, whose home was in Cobden, Ont. The two injured men are Engineer Brennan, of North Bay, and Jack McIntyre, of Osceola.

The collision occurred between a light engine going west and a way freight coming east. The engineer of the light train is reported to have overrun his orders, resulting in the collision.

Engineer Brennan, who was in the light train is suffering severely from scalding and a broken collar bone.

Robert Freeland, the man who has since died, was a jobber and was returning home with a carload of horses, and Jack McIntyre, a teamster, was in his employ.

Mr. Freeland had his leg taken off, one arm badly smashed, and some had scalp wounds.

Mr. McIntyre has both legs fractured and is much shaken up. Both Freeland and McIntyre were in the car with the horses on the eastbound train.

Mr. Leslie Sparling, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Sparling, of Pembroke, was fireman on the light train, but jumped before the collision occurred. Quite a number of the horses were killed and injured.

Would Loan A Billion

WALTHAM, Mass., March 26.—The United States Government should guarantee to the Entente Allies a loan of $1,000,000,000 at 4 per cent. interest, in the opinion of United States Senator John W. Weeks, expressed during an address here today. The Senator's statement was made in reply to a question from the audience as to his opinion of the proposal loan or gift to France in recognition of her aid to this country during the revolutionary war.

Postmaster-General to Work Hard to Raise Regiment

OTTAWA, March 26—The appointment of Hon. P. E. Blondin as a lieutenant-colonel is being made today by the Militia Council, and as soon as the necessary formalities are concluded there will be formal authorization for the regiment which the Postmaster-General is to command. Practically all of the returned French officers will be absorbed in the establishment of the new regiment.

Blondin contemplates a stumping tour of the province, with the triple object in view of emphasizing before Quebec people the grave situation which exists abroad; to secure men for his own battalion, and to appeal for the home defence and national service plans of the Government. He will be assisted by a number of officers and speakers. He is now in Montreal making preliminary arrangements. A second in command will do much of the organization for the battalion, leaving the Postmaster-General free for platform work, where he is particularly effective.

Mr. Blondin continues to receive scores of congratulatory messages from all over and his native province, offers to support, some of them from unexpected sources.

MERCHANTS WARNED SWINDLER AT LARGE

A Slick Cheque Artist at Work in Several Ontario Cities

Word has been received about a slick cheque artist, who has been operating in several cities, in Ontario, and the local merchants would do well to take a tip.

In one city, the report says that the man swindled two jewelers, one for $90, and another for $150 before he made his departure. The offender gave the name of George Bayne, and presented a business card, stating that he was a contractor. He called at a jewelry store and purchased a ring, and presented a cheque on one of the banks. He had deposited a certain amount in the bank, but before the jeweler had time to present the cheque the man had withdrawn his funds and left for parts unknown.

THE BROKEN SPIRIT OF GERMANY

"I lived to see the German spirit break, from the unspeakable arrogance of their first onslaught and threat toward the parish, until a few days ago an officer met me in the street and said: 'Father, we are lost. I have done much in this war that rests heavily on my conscience, but I have done it under orders. I dare not disobey.' I told him that he surely would be absolved, for he was not to blame. There were others of higher station who must make answer to their God."—From a statement by the parish priest in the village of Voyennes to an Associated Press correspondent.

NICHOLAS NOW SHOVELS SNOW

Former Russian Monarch in Dingy Quarters—Weeps in Confinement

TSARSKOE-SELO, March 27—Special—Penetrating today into and under the vast prison palace of Nicholas Romanoff, the deposed Emperor, the correspondent of the Associated Press today obtained from the jailer the first reliable statement of the former Emperor's condition, and later visited the desecrated grave of Gregory Rasputin, Russia's real autocrat for a decade and the unintending parent of the revolution.

Since the visit paid by the correspondent to the palace last week, severer measures have been taken to guard the prisoners. These grew out of rumors of an attempted flight, monarchist conspiracies against the temporary Government, and pressure by extremist forces.

Inside the second entrance is a small hall, crowded with soldiers. All these parts of the palace are dirty, dingy, ill-lighted and unimpressive, not at all such as might be expected of the surroundings of the great Monarch in captivity. He walks frequently with other prisoners, preferring the society of the former Empress, Count Benkendorff, former Marshall of the Court, Madame Narychkine, and Countess Hendrikoff. He is requested to converse only in Russian when in the presence of soldiers. The former Emperor's chief occupation is shovelling snow in the garden, which he enjoys greatly.

Lachine Canal To Be Emptied

MONTREAL, March 26.—Lachine Canal officials will very shortly be very busy preparing for the opening of navigation. On April 7, the water will be run off, and a thorough inspection made of the canal bottom and lock structures. This will probably occupy a week and it is the intention to admit the water again on April 15, in time for the opening of navigation.

As a result of the last few days' thaw, the water in the St. Lawrence channel has risen another foot, the gauge to-day registering a depth of 42.2 feet. There is still, however, no indication of any immediate break up, and the ice bridge to Longueuil is still intact. Last year the Longueuil ferry did not start running until April 22, but with a continuation of the present weather conditions, it is expected to start considerably earlier this year.

BRITAIN ORDERS DAYLIGHT SAVING

Italy and France to Move Clock On One Hour

LONDON, March 26.—All clocks in the United Kingdom, it is announced officially, will be moved forward one hour, at 2 o'clock in the morning of April 8. The clocks will be moved back again on September 17.

The Italian Government has issued a decree that all clocks shall be moved forward one hour for the period between April 1 and September 30.

France also will move its clocks forward one hour, beginning March 24.

CAUGHT WOMAN SMUGGLERS

Mrs. Mary White Makes a Sudden and Successful Round-up

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., March 26.—Mrs. Mary White, woman customs inspector, made a sudden swoop on the bridges Saturday afternoon, and every woman suspected of having anything dutiable about her was ordered into the office, where Mrs. White searched her. The search revealed silk stockings, shoes, gloves, and even Easter bonnets and bottles of whiskey. It is understood that duties running into the hundreds of dollars were collected; in some cases, it is said, goods were confiscated. Mrs. White is accustomed to getting on a car coming over from the other side, which gives her a fine chance to watch women secreting their parcels. She was up at Bridgeburg Friday, and, it is said, made a big haul on the G.T.R. train coming over in the evening. A lot of whiskey smuggling by women has been going on here, it is said.

ESTIMATE OF REVENUE TO BE DERIVED FROM NICKEL CO.

Legislation based upon the report of the Nickel Commission has been promised by members of the Government on more than one occasion. What that taxation may mean can be approximated by studying the recommendation of the commission that the profits to be taxed be an amount "based upon the value of the refined product," less actual costs of treatment, etc., in other words, based upon the net profits of the International Nickel Company. The present rate of 3 per cent. on the reported $16,000,000 of net profits last year would be $480,000. If the rate was increased to 5 per cent., as suggested, the revenue, under normal conditions, would be $250,000, and on the abnormal profits of the past year $800,000.—Mail and Empire.

Railway Man Fatally Wounded

Colored Butler Was Struggling With Wife in Her Chamber, and When Husband Interfered Shot Him in Groin

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., March 26—Harold E. Yarnall, treasurer of the Midland Valley Railroad Company, and widely known in railroad circles was shot and probably fatally wounded by a negro burglar whom his wife found in her room at their home here last night.

Mrs. Yarnall grappled with the intruder, and her husband, who was taking a bath, hearing the commotion, leaped from the bath tub and rushed to her assistance. The negro relinquished his hold on Mrs. Yarnall, and fired point blank at her husband, the bullet entering his groin and penetrating the liver.

Despite his injury, Mr. Yarnall succeeded in hurling the negro down which failed to take effect, the burglar fled, and has not been apprehended yet.

KILLED BY AUTOMOBILE

Boy Was Knocked Down Opposite City Hall

TORONTO, March 26—Edgar Jackson, 12 years old, 66 Lippincott street, who was run down by an automobile at Bay and Queen streets on Saturday, died of his injuries at St. Michael's Hospital last night. The driver of the car, Ica Gould, 409 Markham street, was detained by the police, but after eyewitnesses stated that the occurrence was purely accidental, the man was allowed to go. The car passed over the little lad's stomach and his death was due to internal injuries. The body was removed to the Morgue, where an inquest will be held.

NEW YORK, March 27.—A News Agency despatch from the Hague says four thousand German soldiers have crossed the border into Holland seeking food, and have been interned at Zwollo

FOOD IS LIMITED

Special to The Intelligencer.

LONDON, March 27.—Lord Robert Cecil told the Commons today the blockade against Greece has not been wholly lifted, although the importation of a limited amount of food was being allowed.

FIRE AT VLADIVOSTOK

LONDON, March 27—Special—A message from Russia to The Chronicle reports a serious fire at Vladivostok. The fire occurred among cotton stores, and is believed to have been the act of an incendiary. Part of the heavy losses incurred will fall on London underwriters and companies.

PROGRESS ON WESTERN FRONT

Allied Forces Make a Brilliant Night Attack—Surprise Attack Successful

Special to The Intelligencer.

PARIS, March 27.—Official statement—South of the Oise we continued to make progress in the lower forest of Couchy, all of the northern part of which we occupied. The enemy was driven beyond Barisis Servais line, south of Forest; our troops made a brilliant night attack and captured the Village of Coucy Le Chateau, which was defended energetically by the Germans.

In the region north of Soissons we captured a farm northwest of Margival and a point of support held in strength by the enemy.

In Argonne we made a successful surprise attack in the sector of Four De Paris, taking prisoners. In Lorraine enemy attacks on small French posts in the region of Leiricourt were repulsed completely. Elsewhere the night was in quietness.

PLANNING BIG SPRING DRIVE

Special to The Intelligencer.

ROME, March 27— Information reaching the Italian press from Switzerland has convinced Italian newspapers that the Central Powers have planned a great campaign against Italy for early spring. There is no uneasiness over it, but rather a general confidence that Italy is fully prepared, and can meet any blow directed against her. General Cadorna is quoted as saying he is acting on the supposition that they will come in force, and he is conscious of having neglected nothing that experience may have taught.

HAND OVER BELONGINGS

Special to The Intelligencer.

PETROGRAD, March 27—The Grand Dukes and Imperial Princes in a joint telegram addressed to the Provisional Government today not only formally associated themselves with an abdication of the Grand Duke Michael but also turned over to the new Government their official wealth, namely their holdings of the Crown Lands and other state grants heretofore attaching to their station.

No Fear Of Country Starving

Special to The Intelligencer.

STOCKHOLM, March 27—In an interview here with the Associated Press, Dr. Albert Suedekom, a prominent Socialist member of the German Reichstag said any one who thought the submarine warfare was going to cause starvation in England in six months was deceiving himself. Neither was there any danger he said, of food shortage affecting Germany's military strength, even if war lasted a year or two longer. Because of the large reserve of animals of which all but those necessary for breeding could be slaughtered.

Retired Before A Gas Attack

Special to The Intelligencer.

PETROGRAD, March 27—An official statement today from the western Front in the region of Darevolabuzy the Russians were compelled to retire before a gas attack by the Germans.

FELL INTO THE CISTERN

PICTON, March 26—What might have proved a serious accident occurred last week, when little Miss Dorothy White, of Gilead, accidently fell into the cistern in her home. Her father seeing her fall, plunged immediately to the rescue. She escaped injury of any sort from her plunge in the ice cold water, but her father was unable to get out until Mrs. White went to the barn and procured a ladder.

A QUARTETTE CHARGED WITH BEING INTOXICATED

Evidence of a Conflicting Nature Submitted by Witnesses—Four of the Accused Fined Ten Dollars Each

For the first time in many moons no less than four parties this morning faced Magistrate Masson charged with being intoxicated, and in each case a fine of $10 and costs, or 15 days in jail was imposed. Of the quartette only one pleaded guilty, namely John Belnap. The others charged were Joseph Carr, Thomas Cornell and Robert Burke, and they pleaded not guilty, Mr. D. M. Shorey appeared on behalf of Cornell and Burke.

In reference to Carr's case Police Constable Ellis testified that at one o'clock this morning he saw the accused as he came out of a restaurant, and he was staggering, and his breath also smelled of liquor.

Sergt. Harman, who was in the Police Station when accused was brought in, corroborated Constable Ellis as to the conditon of Carr.

He was found guilty, and a fine of $10 and costs imposed, after he had made a statement denying that he was intoxicated.

Burke and Cornell when arraigned, both pleaded not guilty, and the following evidence was submitted in their cases, which were tried jointly.

Constable Ellis testified that shortly before one o'clock this morning, he saw Burke and Cornell on Front street, and they were staggering. He arrested them on the market square. Both were under the influence of liquor, and the smell of liquor was upon them. At 5 minutes to one o'clock the two went into a gangway on Front street, near the old Victoria Hotel, and he (witness) heard a bottle smashed. He examined the pieces of the bottle and there was the smell of liquor. The broken bottle was labelled Gooderham & Worts. Witness heard Cornell say. What the H— are you going to do that for? Burke replied it might save them three months.

To Mr. Shorey—Burke, Cornell and Carr were arrested at once. He smelt liquor on them. It was not the smell of local option beer. They were undoubtedly under the influence of liquor. Witness did not see them break the bottle, but he heard a bottle smash in a gangway where Burke and Cornell entered.

Sergt. Harman testified that he was on duty in the Police Station shortly after one o'clock, when Constable Ellis brought Carr, Burke and Cornell into the station. All were staggering, and all smelled strongly of liquor. Cornell, while being searched, was so intoxicated he fell into a chair. Witness had a conversation with Burke after his arrest. He let Burke out of the cell, and he staggered then.

To Mr. Shorey—Carr and Cornell staggered more than Burke. They all smelled strongly of liquor.

Thos. Cornell being sworn, stated he did not have any liquor to drink last night. He never saw Officer Ellis until he arrested witness and Burke on the Market Square. He did not smash a bottle, and he did not see or hear Burke smash a bottle in a gangway. Witness denied that he was staggering. He was not under the influence of liquor when arrested.

To the magistrate—He did not hear Burke say that it would save us three months. Did not see a bottle on Burke and heard no bottle smashed. He had a drink of whiskey in the morning, and had several drinks of local option beer. He did not put any decoction in the local option beer.

Robert Burke testified that both Sergt. Harman and Constable Ellis were wrong in their statements about being intoxicated. He only had one drink of liquor during the day, but did not have a drink of liquor during the evening. He denied that either himself or Cornell went into a gangway and broke a bottle. There was no conversion between him and Cornell about saving them three months. Witness positively denied that he was staggering or had the smell of liquor upon him.

To the Magistrate—Had a drink in the morning at Cornell's house. What the officers state is absolutely untrue.

Magistrate Masson—I am satisfied the men were drunk. I do not doubt the officers' testimony.

Mr. Shorey—Will you not give the accused the benefit of the doubt?

The Magistrate—I have no doubt. I feel like imposing a heavier fine on Burke and Cornell. They are, to say, old offenders, but under the circumstances. I will only impose a fine of $10 and costs, or in default 15 days in jail. It is to a higher authority to investigate the matter of breaking a bottle.

The fines in all the cases were paid.

MORE U. S. TROOPS CALLED

Twenty-five Additional Corps to Protect Property

WASHINGTON, March 26—Twenty additional complete infantry regiments and five additional separate battalions of National Guard Troops have been ordered into the Federal service for the protection of property in the event of possible internal disorders. The troops have been called out in the eighteen western and middle western states not included in the list of similar orders made yesterday.

The new order makes a total of thirty-two National Guard infantry regiments called into the Federal service for police purposes, supplemented by six separate battalions and several detached companies.

WILL GIVE CARDS TO THOSE CROSSING LINE

New System to Begin May 1st Convenience to Frequent Travellers

WASHINGTON, March 26—For the convenience of thousands of persons who have occasion to cross the Canadian line daily at Detroit and other places and the Mexican line, the Department of Labor will initiate a new identification system, to go into effect with the new immigration law on May 1st.

A card like a railroad pass, on which will appear the name of the bearer, his signature, description and photograph, will be used. Those who have frequent need to cross the line will be provided with cards at once, 15,000 of which are now being prepared for immediate use.

IMPORTANT CLASHES OCCUR BETWEEN BRITISH AND GERMANS

War Correspondents' Headquarters, March 27.—Special.—Apart from outposts of infantry with machine guns and cavalry patrols, the enemy is now back on his new line of defence, popularly called the Hindenburg line, which, as everyone knows, now swings from Arras back past Cambrai, St. Quentin and Laon. Along the whole of this line as far as British troops extend, we are keeping in touch with his outposts by our outposts, and round St. Quentin the French are fighting heavily against the strong German defence and threatening to turn his line at that section. It is northwards round the village of Beaumetz-les-Cambrai, east of Bapaume, where the British and German forces have been fighting more important actions than mere skirmishes, and where the guns on both sides are most active. In this neighborhood there is high ground, giving a good and clear view of the position which the enemy wishes to hold while he is consolidating his main defences, and for this reason he ordered his men to attack and counter-attack in order to drive us back from this observation ground.

WARNED THE CZAR TO BEWARE OF EX-EMPRESS

Russian Paper Knew of Wiles to Betray Russia—Secret Meetings Held in Palace—Russian Armies Ready For the Final Blow At Enemy

The petrograd correspondent of the London Times cables:

It was present last night at a meeting of marines and sailors at the Admiralty. Officers attended in large numbers. An aged professor of the naval academy was elected to the elixir, and speeches were delivered by officers and men which breathed the spirit of enthusiasm and loyalty to the new Government. The men explained that they had elected officers whom they knew and trusted, and thereby had saved the city from the worst excesses of anarchy. They urged that the elections be not interfered with until the crisis was over. Neither officers nor men ventured to entertain the idea of adopting the principle of election of officers permanently.

As regards the supreme command, we may expect the resignations of all grand dukes who are unwilling to work with the Government. General Alexieff probably will become generalissimo. He has been, in fact, if not in name, the head of the armies at the front since the autumn of 1915.

Since yesterday there have been marked improvements in the situation in Petrograd.

Czar Lost Lit Matches

Grand Duke Nicholas Mickaelovitch, the well known president of the Russian Imperial Historical and Archeographical Societies, who is a first cousin of Grand Duke Nicholas Nicolaivitch, was banished to his estate last December for telling the Czar the truth of the situation and for denouncing the Rasputin scandal. He relates that he was more moved than the Emperor, who, during the conversation, politely lit matches for his kinsman. When the Grand Duke, fearing he had gone too far, said: "Now, call your Cossacks and have me killed and buried in your garden," the Czar merely smiled and thanked him.

A few days later the Emperor wrote him a note ordering and imploring him to retire to his country seat. Before retiring to the country Grand Duke Nicholas Mickaelovitch addressed to the Czar a letter, of which, by the courtesy of the Grand Duke, the Russkia Slovo is able to give the text. Extracts from this remarkable document follow:

Asks Czar Pointed Question

"You have frequently proclaimed that you will continue the war to a victorious end. Are you sure the present condition of the country permits this? Are you well enough acquainted with affairs within the Empire, particularly in Siberia, Turkestan and the Caucasus? Do you hear the whole truth or as much as you are concerned with? So long as your manner of choosing ministers was known only in narrow circles that things like you could muddle along, but when it became a matter of public knowledge with all classes in Russia who have talked of it, it is a senseless attempt to continue to govern Russia in this fashion. Often, you tell me, the country could put faith in no one, and you were being deceived. If this is so, then it applies particularly to your wife, who loves you, yet led you in terror, being surrounded by evil minded intimates. You believe in Alexandra Feodorovna.

This is natural, but the words she utters are the product of skilful machinations, not the truth. If you are powerless then at all events be on your guard against the constant systematic influence of influences who are using your wife as an instrument. If your persuasions are unavailing try other methods to rid yourself of them once and for all. I long hesitated to tell you the whole truth, but decided to do so after I had been received by your mother and sisters that it must be done.

On Eve of Troubles

You are on the eve now of troubles, on the eve of attempts on your life. Believe me, if I thus pave your emancipation from the shackles that shined you, I do so not from personal motives, but only in the hope of saving you and your throne and our dear country from dire and irreparable consequence."

Newspapers Full of Stories

The columns of the newspapers are filled with reminiscences of the Imperial family. Grand Duke Cyril describes the utter estrangement which latterly prevailed between the sovereign's kinsmen.

The Grand Duke Cyril's palace was the meeting place of numerous members of the Imperial family, public men, distinguished foreigners, who secretly discussed the coming peril, afraid of the activity of the Czar and the postponing of reforms. Grand Duke Cyril's wife, the Grand Duchess Victoria, the divorced wife of the ex-Empress' brother, Grand Duke Ross went to the young Empress and told her frankly of the danger.

Ready to Strike Final Blow

Prince Lvoff, the Prime Minister, told Russian journalists yesterday that, with the exception of a few excesses at the northern front, all the armies displayed a thoroughly loyal spirit, and were more than ever determined to strike a final blow at the Germans.

A Foreward In Explanation

Red Cross Penny Bag Collection to-morrow, Wednesday, please have your bags ready with as many pennies as you feel you can spare in them. This month we are again aiming at $200.

Last month some of the collectors in going their rounds, met the charge in a very few instances that "the Penny Bag people were too grasping, that they were doing very well indeed, and should be satisfied, instead of aiming at more each month."

Those in charge of this fund have been so delighted at, and grateful for the generous response of our interested citizens, and for the interest which has increased rather than diminished, as the months passed, in this simple means of raising money to expend for our brave soldiers.

The need is so great, the money so well expended.

We don't want one cent given grudgingly, but we would like to feel that every man, woman and child in our city, each month, trying to do their bit (no matter how small if 0 all they are able to give) towards supplying the needs of those who are suffering so much, for our safety and peace.

Many questions have been asked about the Red Cross Emergency Fund. About a year ago Miss Greene, Superintendent of the Belleville Hospital, inaugurated the plan of raising funds to ward providing material for the supplies, which a number of faithful workers met, twice a week, to make up into "hospital supplies" for the wounded soldiers in the hospitals overseas. The penny bags were at first used only by the nurses, doctors and their friends. The plan appealed to everybody as the simplest way of raising money. In a way in which everyone, down to the smallest child, who would sometimes forego a picture show, some candy or other treat, could participate in, without feeling any real pinch.

After the first month Miss Greene placed the matter in committee and form, ed, and the entire city was divided into districts, looked after by various committees.

Anyone who has ever done any collecting knows that it is by no means pleasant work and much gratitude is felt for those who have undertaken this part of the work.

Will anyone who has not already read the Secretary's last report of the Women's Red Cross and Patriotic Association in the "Intelligencer" of February 9th of the "Outario" of March 22nd please get one of these papers and read the list of contents to the last shipment of eleven boxes, to a Canadian hospital in France.

Every bit of material for these supplies (except for a few donations) was paid for out of the Penny Bag collections. The balance of the money has been used toward the buying of wool which has "chrysies" added making up into socks. From $200 to $300 are expended for wool every month. Since the beginning of the war Miss Greene and her workers have sent 8 shipments of hospital supplies overseas, and over 12,000 pairs of socks have been sent by the Association. 831 pairs of socks were handed in from the circles in January and the wool for these cost almost double what it did at the beginning of the war.

The socks are sent to our boys at the front, to the Belleville boys in all Battalions in Canada, and wherever located.

Bridge Street Church to Hold Special Meetings

The Pastor of Rev. Dr. Scott, the pastor of Bridge Street Methodist Church, must have been gladdened last evening by the large attendance at the special services.

Sunday evening the members of the Quarterly Official Board met in the Church parlors after service and spent an hour in earnest prayer for the success of the special meetings. Committees were appointed and arrangements made for good organization and effective work.

Prayer Service is held every evening before the regular service in the church parlors at 7.30, which is conducted by the officials of the church and to which everyone is invited. Song service is held from 7.45 to 8 o'clock and the regular service commences at 8 o'clock.

Last evening a large number of the business men of the city were present. The address of Rev. Dr. Scott was received with great interest and the prayers and singing added much to the success of the meeting. Mr. Ernest Ridley gave a splendid solo, Mrs. Sprague presided at the piano and when the meeting broke up a zealous spirit prevaded the assembly and many pledged themselves to assist in the good work. Prayer is offered every day at the ringing of the noon bell for the success of the meeting. Special prayers are being offered and everything points to a wave of increasing religious interest throughout this large congregation.

FELL TWENTY FEET TO CONCRETE FLOOR

Cuthbert Scott Had Lucky Escape From Serious Injury

OTTAWA, March 26.—Cuthbert Scott, the thirteen-year-old son of W. L. Scott, Stewart street, had a miraculous escape from death on Sunday afternoon, when he fell twenty feet, head first, to a concrete floor. While he suffered a severe concussion, no bones were broken, and hopes for his recovery are entertained at the Protestant hospital, where he was reported to be resting easily last night.

With several companions, the boy was playing in a house being built on Charlotte street for M. P. Davis, and he accidentally moved when he stepped through a door opening upon the wall for a staircase, which he thought had been built.

Dr. George S. McCarthy passed the scene of the accident a moment after it occurred, and was notified of the circumstances by Edward Anglin, a cousin of Cuthbert Scott. The doctor had the little fellow removed to his home, and after a consultation with Dr. Ernest Gibson had him taken to the hospital.

Glowing Tribute To Comrade

On Sunday night at Mark Street Methodist Church, Peterboro, a memorial service was held to commemorate the memory of Private Wickers of this city, whose life was sacrificed somewhere in France. Amongst those taking part in the service was Major R. E. O'Flynn, who in his remarks said he felt honored in being present to pay tribute to Pte. Wicker, who had joined the deathless army which, so long as the Anglo-Saxon race lives, will ever be held in memory. The speaker paid tribute to the young soldier as one of the gallant Canadians who had realized the need of the Motherland and had joined in the fight for freedom and for the weak against the strong. A fight that was a religious war just as much as in the day when the Hebrews fought the Philistines, and as such had God's blessing. Freedom, the speaker said, would live and posterity would always be protected by reason of the sacrifices being made today. He was surprised at having fought in France with the Canadians, with soldiers of the type of Pte. Wicker, for it was in the fighting forces that the truest type of brotherhood was exemplified.

Was Torn Off in Elevator Accident After Injury He Shouted "Get an Ambulance"

WINNIPEG, March 26.—Patrick O'Rourke, a returned soldier, working as elevator operator in the Ford Motor Company building, had his left arm torn off, and his right leg fractured today, when he was caught between the elevator shaft and the cage.

He is reported to be doing well, and probably will recover. No one witnessed the accident.

O'Rourke was found lying on a bench after he had attracted attention by shouting, "Get an ambulance."

SWEDEN DENIES PEACE QUIZZING

LONDON, March 26.—Stockholm correspondent cables that the Swedish Minister of Foreign Affairs has let it be known that no attempt at peace mediation has been made by Sweden. This denial was called forth by a New York dispatch published in a London newspaper in regard to alleged attempts in this direction by Sweden and Spain.

ANOTHER ARTILLERY DRAFT SOON

Another artillery draft of five hundred men from the Kingston batteries has been asked for and will likely proceed overseas next month. The battery will furnish two hundred men, the 22nd Queen's battery 150, and each of the other three Depot batteries fifty each. This will leave these batteries with a very few men. With this draft and the 235th, 236th and 208th battalion going overseas this spring the camp at Barriefield will not be very large this summer.—Standard.

SUDDEN DEATH OF BELLEVILLE RESIDENT

Mr. Owen Reid, a well known and highly respected resident of Belleville, whose home is on North Front street, died suddenly this morning at Orillia, where he had been visiting for some time. Just previous to his death deceased was in conversation with the Rev. C. W. Watch, a former beloved pastor of Holloway Methodist church in this city. Mr. Reid then appeared to be in his usual health, but a few minutes later the end came. Heart trouble was the cause of death. Deceased, who was in 83 years of age, had been for many years a resident of Belleville, where he had many friends. Mr. Reid was a consistent member of Holloway street church, and for years had been a member of the Official Board. His demise will be regretted by many relatives and friends. The remains will be brought to his late home here tomorrow, and on Thursday, after a service will be taken to Bridge cemetery for interment. A son and two daughters survive. One daughter married the Rev. F. L. Brown, who is engaged in mission work in Ontario.

OBSEQUIES.

MRS. SARAH JANE DONOUGHY

The funeral of the late Mrs. Sarah Jane Donoughy took place this morning from the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Samuel Leavitt, 29 Bridge Street West. A number of relatives and friends were in attendance. Rev. Dr. Scott, pastor of Bridge street Methodist church, conducted services at the house and at Bridge street cemetery. Upon the casket were placed a number of floral offerings. The bearers were Messrs. C. W. Adams, J. L. Sills, J. Coon, George Wess, Thos. George and J. L. Tickell.

LLOYD GEORGE'S TRUSTED AID IN NATION'S AFFAIRS A WOMAN

Miss Stevenson, His Private Secretary, Is London Born—Is First to Hold So Important a Post

(New York Sun)

Next to David Lloyd George, Prime Minister of England, Miss F. L. Stevenson, his private secretary, is perhaps the most important person in the British Empire. She performs duties for which men have been knighted amid the plaudits of the nation.

Everything that reaches Lloyd George necessarily passes through Miss Stevenson's hands. The private secretary of the Prime Minister is his chief confidant, his tactful counsellor and, in a sense, even the keeper of his conscience.

Some Prime Ministers, as for instance, Lord Beaconsfield, have caused peerages to be bestowed on their private secretaries. Herbert Asquith not only rewarded his private secretary with a knighthood of the Order of the Bath but with the hand of one of his daughters.

In view of the fact that many distinguished men have occupied the position of alter ego to the British Premier, Lloyd George overturned an almost prescriptive precedent when he appointed Miss Stevenson. The nomination created a sensation, being particularly welcome in the ranks of those who are working to broaden the estate of women in the realm. But Lloyd George has swept away so many precedents and time hallowed prepossessions in British political life that there has been a quick recovery from an innovation which was at first, to say the least, startling.

The woman who now occupies the spacious private secretary's room at No 10 Downing street, the historic official residence of the Prime Ministers of England, is London born, the daughter of a Scotch father and a French mother.

After serving him as private secretary in connection with his preparation of the national insurance act, she was continued as one of his official secretaries when he became Chancellor of the Exchequer in 1913. She was retained in the same capacity when he became Minister of Munitions two years ago. Of five secretaries she was second in rank. When Lloyd George succeeded to the War Office he took Miss Stevenson along in the secretarial capacity.

As the chief private secretary of the Prime Minister Miss Stevenson receives a salary of $4,000 to $5,000 a year.

She is a graduate of London University and the Royal Holloway College. Her only brother was killed on the French front in the battle of Guinchy last year.

Some of her best known predecessors have been Lord Rowton, private secretary of Lord Beaconsfield; the late Sir Schomberg McDonnell, who was the private secretary of Lord Salisbury, and Sir Algernon West, who was private secretary to Mr. Gladstone.

Goods Shipped By St. Julien Chapter I. O. D. E.

The St. Julien Chapter I.O.D.E. have shipped overseas 9 cases of hospital supplies and one box to the trenches containing:

27 pyjamas, 500 cakes of soap from Queen Victoria School, 22 flannel shirts, 17 night shirts, 31 wash cloths, 85 pairs socks, 12 sheets, 113 pillow cases, 68 towels, 25 books and magazines, pads, pencils, envelopes, candy, gum, handkerchiefs, soap, cigarettes, candles, chocolates, tobacco and bachelor's buttons, shoe laces. Since the above shipment Queen Alexandra School had a soap shower of over 200 cakes. Queen Mary also with 230 cakes and a miscellaneous shower from St. Michael's Academy of soap, tobacco, cigarettes, towels, chocolate, gum, tooth paste, tooth brushes, stationery, candles, soup, oxo, and cards; 460 articles in all. From the four schools, Queen Victoria, Queen Mary, Queen Alexandra and St. Michael's has been contributed over a thousand cakes of soap. A very generous response to the request made for some soap. A large consignment was received by the chapter from the Quinte Ramblers Patriotic on March 17—7 sets pyjamas, 2 rolls old flannel, 32 scrap books, 14 pairs of socks, 4 grey shirts and 24 comfort bags containing each: brush, comb, soap, towel, wash cloth, chocolate, tobacco, cigarettes, stationery, pipe and handkerchiefs.

COMFORT AND CURE FOR BABY'S SKIN TROUBLES

Dr. Chase's Ointment Cured When Baby's Body Was Covered With Distressing Eczema

If every mother could try Dr. Chase's Ointment for the chafing, skin irritation and resulting eczema which tortures so many babies, what a blessing it would be for the little ones.

This letter will give you an idea of what a wonderful work this Ointment is doing in the way of bringing comfort to children who are so unfortunate as to contract eczema. It is so easy for this trouble to develop from chafing and irritation caused by the clothing, and so difficult to get it cured, that Dr. Chase's Ointment is appreciated when once its healing qualities are known.

Mr. M. L. Duclos, Postmaster, Dugnayville, N.B., writes: "I believe it is my duty to recommend Dr. Chase's Ointment as a cure for eczema. My baby was seized with eczema and his face and arms were covered with this terrible disease. After trying all sorts of ointments the disease continued to spread until it covered the entire body. When the itching became bad he would scratch himself and was sometimes found in his cradle covered with blood. Hearing about Dr. Chase's Ointment I bought two boxes and before this was all used the child was cured. That was a year ago, and there has been no trace of eczema since. I recommend Dr. Chase's Ointment to all who suffer from eczema as being the best treatment in the world for itching skin diseases."

Dr. Chase's Ointment is for sale by all dealers at 60 cents a box. It is a good idea to keep it at hand along with the bath soap to be used for roughness of the skin, chafing or irritation. Prevention is so much better than cure. Powders clog the pores, but Dr. Chase's Ointment cleanses the pores and thereby keeps the skin soft and smooth. Sample box free if you mention this paper. A New Cattle Disease Prevalent

A new disease has very recently broken out in this country, and, although it is up to the present not very prevalent being nearly isolated cases, I thought it advisable to give the farmers a little light on it because forewarned is forearmed. I have met with about five or six cases and have heard of others and everyone fatal. As far as I can judge about two thousand dollars worth of valuable cattle, young and old, one or two thoroughbreds worth $200 each, have died, hence one can realize it is getting somewhat serious.

The symptoms are as follows: loss of appetite, more of less bloating, accelerated breathing, pulse 15 or 20 beats above normal the temperature averaging 103. The bowels are never costive, but rather softer than natural. The animal remains in this state for about one week and dies.

One is apt in the start to diagnose the case as one of acute indigestion and treat it accordingly, but the treatment does no good whatever.

Two cases I have seen the disease settled in the udder and in one case the udder turned purple. In this case there was no milk only a watery secretion, which in a few days turned dark red in appearance when the cow quickly died from blood poison. The other case the udder swelled to three times its natural size before she died.

Now up to the present I had believed the disease incurable because, although I had the government inspector here to hold a post mortem an a case that died at the Deaf and Dumb Institute, he could give me no light on the disease, but last evening I suddenly remembered being called to Henry Dunham's about five or six miles north of Campbellford about ten or twelve years ago. This disease broke out in fine herd of Holstiens and two died and the Veterinarys in that part of the country could not cure it and as four others were sick with it Mr. Dunham decided to hold a consultation and sent for me. I diagnosed the case as Black Murrin, a species of anthrax or Charbon due to malignant disease germs and gave a remedy for it that cured every one of the remaining afflicted cows and Mr. Dunham was saved from further loss.

Your truly.
D. H. ACKRILL, V. S.

235th Prepares For Overseas

OTTAWA, March 26—The 235th Battalion has been warned to prepare to leave for overseas. The unit will leave Ottawa in the course of a few weeks. When the announcement was made to the officers and men, the news was received with great rejoicing.

The battalion was organized late last summer by Lt.-Col. Scobell and the majority of the recruits were taken from the counties of Hastings and Prince Edward. Headquarters were established at Belleville. A few weeks ago the 235th came to Ottawa and here several men have been enlisted.

Yesterday the battalion mustered 500 strong and Col. Scobell hopes that by the time he takes his unit from Ottawa there will be an additional 300 men in the ranks. Serving in the 235th are many professional men. Six ministers deserted their pulpits, three lawyers, left the bar, two professors forsook the lecture room and joined the 235th in order to go forward quickly. The battalion is considered one of the foremost in Canada.

JACK PICKFORD SUPREME AT GRIFFIN'S LAST NIGHT

There was something doing without a moment's let up at this popular theatre last night, and particularly fine was Jack Pickford, representing a seventeen-year-old lad, who falls in love with a city girl, hires an automobile to elope with her, runs into a post, while she goes off with another admirer. Here Jack gets into a peck of trouble, being threatened with jail if he did not hand over fifty dollars for damages to the auto. He attempts to sell his body to some medical students with instructions to pay garage charges when he is dead. Then he attempts suicide, but before he succeeds his sweet little country sweetheart has sold her pet horse and paid the garage damages, reaching his room just as he is trying to "drink up all the gas," as his little sister declared. The play is entrancing and with other special screneic views will be repeated this evening.

MARY PICKFORD IN "LESS THAN THE DUST" AT GRIFFIN'S FRIDAY AND SATURDAY

Her First $300,000 Production Under Her Own Guidance

In her new play, "Less Than The Dust," Mary Pickford has the role of a little castaway of English birth who has been reared among natives of the lowest caste of India. Her father having become a social derelict and having no mother, she is given over to a native sword maker and here she grows up and becomes one of the people. The scenes are all laid in India and England and are remarkably faithful pictures of both lands in scenic sets of great beauty and wondrous effect. The East Indian environment is especially interesting and picturesque in that the splendid direction has brought to the screen an unmistakable atmosphere and understanding of the lives and customs of the British officers and the lower caste. It will be seen at Griffin's next Friday and Saturday with a matinee performance Saturday.

One of the scenes shows a street in an Indian city with its shops and bazaars and all of the color and ever changing views of an Eastern thoroughfare. Another shows the British garrison and still another the great stone temple and the pool of the sacred waters. The 9th chapter of "The Shielding Shadow" series will also be presented with a comedy, and the production will be accompanied by a special orchestra.

BLANCHE SWEET AND SECRET KINGDOM AT PALACE TOMORROW, GRIFFIN'S THURSDAY

The second episode of Vitagraph's romantic serial, "The Secret Kingdom," entitled "Royalty at Red Wing," which will be presented at the Palace tomorrow, matinee and night, and at Griffin's Thursday night, tells how after twenty years Phillip Barr, the rightful King of Alania, but entirely in ignorance of the fact, having been raised on Red Wing Ranch, Arizona, by "Peter Barr," whom he believes to be his father, rescues from the clutches of a frontier bad man, "Julia Simmond," who is in reality Princess Julia, only daughter of Simmond. Julia has been travelling in the United States incognito.

On the same program with the above popular serial, Blanche Sweet appears in the Lasky production of "The Unprotected." The story shows the conditions which convict labor creates in the southern states when leased to private corporations.

"PEG O' MY HEART," DELIGHTFUL COMEDY OF YOUTH AT GRIFFIN'S TOMORROW

The staying properties of that wonderful comedy, "Peg O' My Heartt," has justified the employing of a cast this season that has not been equalled since the first year that the play was put out. Among the first stars that Oliver Morosco featured as "Peg" was Miss Marion Dentler, she coming to this enterprising manager after a successful season as youth in Henry W. Savage's original production of "Everywoman." This Peg Company made a coast to coast tour of the leading cities both in the States and Canada, and her beauty, youth, grace and cleverness will be long remembered by many Canadians who saw the original company. She comes again, under the banner of the United Producing Company, and is given the highest class support obtainable as will be noted by the engagement for the role of Jerry of Mr. William Sauter, the well known English actor who was three years with E. S. Willard, two years with Forbes Robertson and was leading man with Eleanor Robson in "The Dawn of a Tomorrow." Manager Forhan has booked this attraction for appearance at Griffin's to-morrow night. This is the same company and production that appeared in Toronto and Montreal. The company closing their second record week's engagement in Montreal in six weeks last Saturday night, and they are booked for a return engagement in Toronto in April.

HOME RULE RESOLUTIONS.

One need not be an opponent of Irish Home Rule to take strong exception to the character and tone of the Cabbagram recently despatched to Sir Robert Borden by the Hon. Charles Murphy. Demands that Sir Robert adopt the role of political tutor to the people of the British Isles are not sensible. Requests that he protest "against Canada being Irelandized" are only be calculated to do mischief.

The present is manifestly a critical stage in the life of the Empire, a time of supreme moment when principles and precedents calculated to leave their impress upon coming centuries are being laid down. The deliberations of the statesmen meeting in London will be fraught with the gravest consequences if decisions are lightly made, as in a spirit of compromise or surrender to expediency.

This would appear to be the proper time to lay down the solid and enduring principle that public issues likely to excite and divide sincere opinion, to produce militant factions and to spread dissentions and misunderstanding, as may develop in any one section of the Empire should be localized. The British Empire spans the globe. Manifestly, it is impossible that public opinion in any one portion of the Empire can be sufficiently well-informed upon a political issue of domestic importance in another and remote section to possess any reasonable force making for settlement in the section directly concerned.

There are political questions of common interest, such as defence and foreign policy, upon which, no doubt, every self-governing portion of the Empire will feel a right to pass. These questions, as the war has shown, affect directly the vital interests of the various Dominions. But every section of the Empire has its own peculiar, local and characteristic problems in the adjustment of which no other people within the Empire or outside of it can fairly or usefully participate.

Hope, then, should be shared that nothing may be done in connection with the present representative and momentous Imperial Conference in London in disrespect of the reasonable and just principle of Imperial action outlined above, and thus that an example may be set calculated to dissuade from their pernicious policies, also, like the Hon. Charles Murphy, make a habit of importing from other sections of the Empire dangerous political issues for mischievous exploitation.

Every Dominion in the British Empire is burdened with sufficient difficult and embarassing problems of its own without being pushed by politicians into needless consideration of others. No enduring Imperial scheme can be founded upon reciprocity of quarrels or free trade in confusion.

ANOTHER LIE NAILED.

Hon. J. B. Lucas issued a statement characterizing as absolute misrepresentation The Globe editorials which represent him as saying in his Minico speech that people should stick to their party through thick and thin. The Attorney-General in the course of his speech pointed out that popular Government was necessarily Government by compromise on details, but he stated emphatically that there could be no compromise on dishonesty in administration or on important principles. It was useless for Mr. Lucas to give the lie to the statement. No one believed it.

QUEBEC LIBERALS DENOUNCE BLONDIN.

The action of the Hon. Mr. Blondin, in donning the khaki, is not relished or approved by the Quebec Liberal press. Le Canada, the Liberal organ of Montreal, says: "It is manifest that the decision announced by Mr. Blondin was taken by him as a result of consultations with his colleagues, who probably consulted him prior to such action, if they did not impose it upon him."

La Liberte, another Laurierite, declares that Sir George Foster, the Acting Premier, received him badly, "made him as welcome as a dog in a bowling alley." Mr. Blondin, the article continues, attempted to defend himself. "Alas! One who to-day is not Imperialist to the last hair, a saviour of Empires, or at least a militarist, must keep silence or else disappear." Accordingly, in the view of Le Liberte, Mr. Blondin had to disappear from the Cabinet.

So bitter is the hatred of Quebec Liberals for the Postmaster-General that the least generosity towards him in a French newspaper would never be pardoned. For month; they have denounced him because he is not in khaki. Now they denounce him for being in khaki. It will be interesting to know what Laurier thinks of him.

A WORTHY TRIBUTE.

The New York Tribune, one of the greatest of American newspapers, printed in its issue of March 20th, the following remarkable tribute to the achievements of Canada in the war:

"Canada's part in the war is one of the most brilliant chapters in the world's history.

"In two years and a half a nation of eight million, trained in the arts of peace, indifferent to the mercenaryings of war has become a big factor on the battlefield and in the financial operations on which military success is based.

"This peaceful energetic neighbor of ours decided to raise an army of 50,000, increased it to 100,000, and is now aiming at 500,000 with a certainty of success.

"A year before the war Canada's trade balance was $400,000,000 on the wrong side; its exports for the present year exceed its imports by $315,000,000. Though not fully developed industrially, the Dominion has been able to provide fully for its armies, to manufacture munitions for its allies, to finance the payments to raise millions for war relief and to participate in British loans.

"Starting out with a loan, on the mother country, Canada soon found as the result of interior reforms forced by the war that she could pay for her own way and this she is doing unbridgingly."

It will not belong, if the time has not already arrived, when United States will follow the methods not in military tactics alone, but in safe financing.

No man can be happy all the time, but we can all be happier more than we really are.

Current Comment

Figures just issued show that fires in Manitoba last year destroyed property worth $1,119,000. It is asserted that 60 per cent. of the fires resulted from carelessness. Ten lives were lost.

Intended paying $600 land cost. Frank Brown, a Joeligger, who conducted liquor transactions in a Queen street pool-room, went to jail yesterday to stay for three months. An easy way of earning $600.

A British official statement says that according to a German wireless announcement one Norwegian and ten British ships were sunk or captured by the German raider Moewe in addition to the vessels reported destroyed or captured on January 17 last.

In the Legislature it is argued that there are too many Deputy Ministers and other officials in the Department of Agriculture, and in the press and on the stump, the Government is denounced because it has not sufficient number of officials to look after the interests of the farmer.

Hon. Charles Murphy made a speech against Home Rule before a Reform Club in Montreal in which he spoke of the treason and treachery of Lloyd George. He ended up by demanding the return of Sir Wilfrid Laurier at the next election in Canada. Apparently he thinks the "honor ways" of compromise and conciliation will cement the two sections in Ireland. They might be tried out now in Canada in reconciling the Quebec view with that of the rest of Canada.

The Dominions at the British Empire will emerge from the war as important military powers. Canada, for instance, already has a much larger army of her own than Wellington commanded at Waterloo, and her name will be as surely associated throughout all time with the storming of the German defences at Ypres as will those of Australia and New Zealand with Gallipoli or that of South Africa with the great campaigns on her own continent—Manchester (England) Guardian.

TROOPS TO GUARD NIAGARA FALLS

Rumors of Plots Against Industrial Plants

ALBANY, N.Y., March 26.—The request of the Buffalo Chamber of Commerce, that the power plants at Niagara Falls be guarded by national guardsmen, has been granted by Governor Whitman. The executive announced that he had directed Adjutant General L. W. Stotesbury, now in New York, to order out enough troops to properly do the work. They will be selected from Buffalo units.

The request for troops was made to Governor Whitman yesterday by a delegation from the Buffalo Chamber of Commerce which came here for that purpose.

The action was taken after rumors of plots against industrial plants were circulated.

LOST TEETH AND LIBERTY

Old Soldier Had Liquor on Doctor's Advice

TORONTO, March 26—Joseph Regan, a toothless and gray-headed old soldier of 71 years, was sentenced in the Police Court today to spend the next three months at the jail farm for having liquor in a hotpitue house, on Chapel street 16 months his pelsid guns. Two bottles were found in the room. He said the doctor extracted his teeth the day before and advised liquor to help him bear the shock of being toothless. Regan seemed to have trouble about telling the truth about where he bought the whiskey. "The foot of a doctor is partly to blame for this," said Crown Attorney Corley.

SYNOPSIS OF CANADIAN NORTH WEST LAND REGULATIONS.

The sole head of a family, or any male over 18 years of age, may homestead a quarter section of available Dominion land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. Application must appear in person at the Dominion Lands Agency or Sub-Agency for the district. Entry by proxy may be made at any Dominion Lands Agency (but not Sub-Agency) on certain conditions.

Duties—Six months residence upon and cultivation of the land in each year for three years. A homesteader may live within nine miles of his homestead on a farm of at least 80 acres, on certain conditions. A habitable house is required except where residence is performed in the vicinity.

A certain district a homesteader in good standing may preempt a quarter section alongside his homestead. Price $3.00 per acre.

Duties—Six months residence in each of three years after earning homestead patent; also 50 acres extra cultivation. Pre-emption patent may be obtained as soon as homestead patent, or certain conditions.

A settler who has exhausted his homestead right may take a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $3.00 per acre. Duties—Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate 50 acres and erect a house worth $300.

The area of cultivation is subject to reduction in case of rough, stony or sandy land. Live stock may be substituted for cultivation under special conditions.

Coal mining rights may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 320 acres can be leased by one individual or company.

A KING CAN HELP HIMSELF

By H. QUAD

Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

His royal nibs of Paros, feeling that his treasury was empty as an and that a spine donut would soon visit his capital to sing for him and would accept a sombrero as big as a dinner plate, called Murphy, his royal treasurer, to him and said:

"Murphy, the finances of Paros have a fat failure. Your suggestions about how to raise money have not been worth peanut shucks."

"Now, listen, can a man make money out of nothing at all?" replied Murphy. "When I came here you had a fine treasury; you had horses and carriages, you had a few diamonds left. Where have they gone? Excuse my plain speech, but you have wasted them in spite of all I could do. If they are gone, is it my fault?"

"Of course it is your fault," said the king. "It was your business as treasurer to keep my coffers supplied as fast as I emptied them. I am a king and must live as a king, and my treasurer must be constantly planning new ways to uphold my dignity. As a king who is broke and broke out I have dignity? You know I can't. You don't seem to care a red cent whether I am humiliated or not."

"But I do care, O king. I care so much and have planned so much that my head is bursting all the time. Just how it would be a relief to part with it."

"But I rather like you, after all, Mr. Murphy, and I did not call you here to head on your shoulders for awhile and try to teach you something about finance. It is true that I spend large sums of money and that I have the reputation of being a waster, but I know how to finance and get the filthy beck. For instance, bring hither a poker deck."

Murphy disappeared for two minutes and then came back, bringing a pack of cards and a face that showed dejection and despair. He had had that trick worked on him before, and it was coming again.

"Now, then, Murphy, I owe you about $2,000 back salary, don't I?" asked the king.

"It's all of that, your majesty," was the reply.

"Well, I'll give you a chance to win some back, or dead. I take the first deal. How many cards do you want?"

"None, O king."

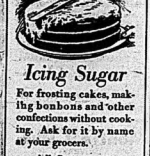
"Aha-ah! You have got a pat hand, eh? Well, I'll have to your bet."

Murphy replied that he would go $100, and when the king saw him and raised $100 more he had to call or throw up. It finally came to a showdown with $500 in the pot, and the king showed a straight, while Murphy threw down a flush.

"I take the pot!" exclaimed the king.

"Not on that hand, your majesty. I have a flush here, and a flush beats a straight every time."

"It used to, but I changed it some time ago. Mr. Murphy, don't look so amazed."



"Now, then, I have got a scheme to work. You ought to have thought of it long ago, but haven't enough wit to. I want you to issue a royal edict that on next Sunday evening all my subjects who can gather here will witness a strange phenomenon, at the time the moon rises a second moon will rise also and there will be two moons in plain sight at once and the same time."

"But how can you make a second moon?" asked Murphy.

"I can't," replied the king.

"Then the people who come to see it will call you a fool, won't they?"

"They may call me anything they like, but they will have to pay cash for it. My little scheme is this: The next day after the moonlight scrambled I will send for all who come here to let it be known whether they saw one moon or two. They will be glad

WEAL WHILE HE WILL HAVE SOME DAY some money, a part of them to flatter me will claim to have seen two.

"You are right there, O king," admitted Murphy.

"And I shall be right about other things, too, old has been. I want you to go about bottling up about 6000 bottles of clear water and labeling each bottle 'King's Eyewater.' I will proclaim to those who didn't see the new moon that something is wrong with their eyes and that they must bathe this eye water. The price will be $5 per bottle. I will also proclaim to those who say they saw two moons that something is also wrong with their eyes, and they must buy a bottle and pay the same price. Now, then, I've got me to the point after I have thrown it at you."

"By George, but it is great!" exclaimed Murphy.

"Well, not so very great, but it will do—it will do," said the king. "If it don't bring in at least $10,000 we will admit that I don't rule the sun, the moon, the stars and the whole caboodle. Now, Murphy, we will have another deal at poker. Poker is a very pleasant and instructive amusement. You may win back all you have lost and more with it. I sincerely hope you will, for you are good hearted even if you don't understand finance. I will take a deal, and I hope you get a straight flush the very first hand."

Murphy said he hoped not for going on in the street and that his presence was badly needed out there, or the palace itself might be attacked, so he scurried away and thus saved the balance of the little fortune that he kept locked up in his trunk.

Feathered Sifters.

A sailor recently stated that seagulls are very useful for betraying the whereabouts of a submarine. When the birds discern a periscope they rise in a flock from the water's surface, and circle round it uttering shrill cries. This performance attracts the attention of the crews of approaching vessels, and oftimes results in the submarine being discovered.

While seagulls are unconsciously aiding sailors, parrots are carrying out equally useful work for men. It had been discovered that parrots have an extraordinary faculty for anticipating the approach of aircraft. When an aeroplane has come within range of the human eye, but is not heard, alarm becomes violently agitated, and shrieks incessantly. In France wild birds often provide artillery observers with clues as to whereabouts of hidden batteries. Birds rise in flocks from trees in the vicinity of which guns are hidden, and from what then there is a lull in the activities of the concealed artillery many of them return to their former perches.

A trained observer can very quickly tell, from the erratic movements of flocks of birds, the approximate locality of gun batteries hidden from his view.—Tit-Bits.

How a Bullet Drops.

In what position does a rifle bullet return to earth? In order to solve the problem, a special study was erected in Europe recently, and experiments were carried on along the shores of a lake, the surface of which was frozen. The ice was covered with strong planks. It was shown that an infantry rifle bullet shot upward in a vertical direction passes downward in the same position in which it passed upward—in other words, it came back again to earth with its bottom first. Why was it not upset at its culmination point? The answer is that the propelling force ceases to act at the culmination point. But the twist has as yet not stopped, and therefore it starts its fall with a twist. Even an impact on the wrist has not stopped it, as was indicated by the warping of the wood three in the planking on the ice.

Buffalo Bill's Joke.

The Westminster Gazette is authority for the statement that upon one occasion when the late Buffalo Bill was exhibiting his Wild West show in London, the Prince of Wales was so delighted with it that he took four royalties staying in London with him to see it, and not only that, but succeeded in packing the whole party into the famous Deadwood coach for a ride around the arena. "Now," said he to Cody, whom he much liked, "you've got something big here for inside there than you ever had before." "Well, sir, I rather guess I have," responded the Colonel; "the great band I ever did hold yet—four kings and a joker."

Help Old Trees.

One who has tried it declares that old trees of all kinds may often be rejuvenated by digging a trench at a considerable distance from the tree in a circle, to a depth of one to three feet, and filling this with new soil made very rich with barn manures.

Hebrew Writer Declares Brave Armenian People Wear a Crown of Thorns

"FROM more than one area of the war zone, from Belgium, from Galicia, from Turkish Armenia the same story reaches us: the same dread saga of the wanderings of whole populations under the spur of massacre, rape, hunger. Little children fall like flies by the wayside and new children are born on the march. Mothers go mad. Girls throw themselves into the rivers. Men are killed and buried like dogs," writes Israel Zangwill.

"I saw all our women and my mother torn to pieces by the monsters who disputed for possession of them," says the old Princess in Candide, 'and I was left for dead amid a heap of corpses. For three hundred leagues around similar scenes were going on without any cessation in the five prayers a day prescribed by Mahound's."

"It is impossible in reading the evidence as to the treatment of the Armenians in the Ottoman Empire not to be reminded of this and other episodes by which Voltaire strove to disconcert the optimism of his Panglossian Episodes which, however, seemed to transcend the license of even satirical invention and to have no warrant in the actual facts of universal history.

"Alas, we now know that Voltaire's imagination fell below, not exceeded, the diabolism of human nature at these moments when madness, by war lust aggravated, let us charitably admit by war, paralyzed it. returns to that pre-historic animal nature through which the soul has slowly struggled.

"But Belgium has almost all the world for her friends and the faith in restoration goes before her exiles like a pillar of cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night. Even, in Asia of the pale, torn and tossed between the alternate victors, begin to find organization. Only and behold some faint gleam of Zion on the political horizon. Jos Israel stands alone as ever. For Armenia alone there is the silence without answer, 'Watchman, what of the night!'

"Only for a minority can there be political redemption; let us at least bring physical salvation to their agonizing remnant.

"Sister nations I have been accustomed to think the Armenian and the Jews. Both hail from sister-lands of the cradle of civilization. Both come trailing clouds of glory from the purple days of Herod and Babylon. Both have borne the shock of the ancient and medieval empires and of the militant migrations of their races, and both hold to their original faith, for if the one was the first preacher of Jehovah the other was the first nation to profess Him. And sisters, too, in sorrow, although exiled, scattered, persecuted, massacred.

"Sisters forsooth, yet not equal in suffering. Hitherto through the long centuries the crown of martyrdom has been pre-eminently Israel's. And as day by day during this war of wars there came to me by deed or letter or whisper the tale of her woes in the central war zone I said to myself surely the cup is full. Surely no people on earth has had such a measure of gall and vinegar to drink.

"But I was mistaken. One people has suffered more. Israel knows whose ancient realm held the legendary Eden has now for adding gloss the pit of hell. I bow before this sister majesty of sorrow. Hers is the crown—of thorns from Israel's head and I place it upon Armenia's."

What Japan Pays.

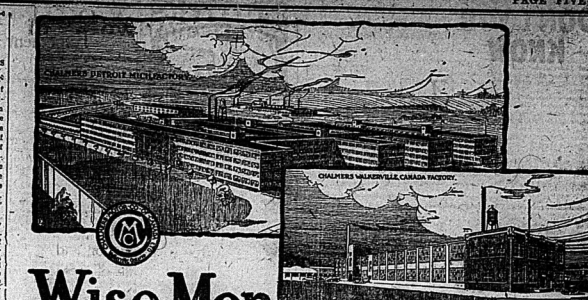
Japan's shipping is on the boom. New lines are reaching out for the trade with the continents and islands of the seas. Japan is the rival of Britain of the Pacific, the Phœnicia of the Far East. Heavy subsidies are pouring profits into the pockets of the ship-owners, and each vessel, from tug to liner, is paying for itself every day the war lasts.

Commercial connections are being made in new territory. Many say that these "markets" will revert to those who held them before the war began. But the Japanese are persistent and polite. A passenger on one of their liners knows what it is to be booked after. They are branching out in industry, and wages are almost as low as ever. Japan is sacrificing womanhood and manhood to win world markets. Other nations will be slow to pay the same price for gold.

Hungary's Crown.

The crown of Hungary was once within an ace of coming to London. When Kossuth struck his famous blow for Hungarian liberty in 1849 he obtained possession of the crown and when compelled to flee the country buried it at Orsova. Four years later a flood made him fear for the safety of the precious diadem, and he gave orders for it to be disinterred and brought to him in London. Unfortunately one of his messengers talked indiscreetly of his errand, with the consequence that the Austrian Government gained knowledge of the secret, and unearthed the crown on Sept. 8, 1853.—London Chronicle.

Making It All Right.



An old lady who had been introduced to a doctor who was also a professor in a university, felt somewhat puzzled as to how she would address the great man.

"Shall I call you 'doctor' or 'professor?'" she asked.

"Oh! just as you wish," was the reply; "as a matter of fact, some people use me as an old idiot."

"Indeed," she said, sweetly, "but then, they are people that know you."—Tit-Bits.

Retreat in France is said to be gaining in speed, but is not too rapid to prevent the Prussians poisoning the wells they can't take with them.

Wise Men of the East and West

The men who represent Chalmers are the Big Men in the business.

They are the WHO'S WHO of Motordom.

This list is the proof. And this is just Canada. In New York it's the same—Boston, Chicago, San Francisco, Denver, St. Louis.

Go where you will. Inquire out the big Motor Car distributor in the city. He is a Chalmers man.

Men whose ideas are broader than wheel-base, and whose vision carries them past to-morrow, join in—and form the field organization of Chalmers.

These men are not mere buyers and sellers of cars. They built success by serving well. The good-will of their customers is their stock in trade. "Brass band methods" are not on their list. The sharp corner knows them not.

They came to Chalmers. Chalmers came to them. Success attracts success.

They saw, Chalmers the car, the man, the institution.

They saw an institution rise from the building of a sensible car. They saw the result of ideal methods of making and merchandising cars. They saw an ideal of service to mankind.

In Canada, they saw created a Canadian Chalmers—a factory to build cars for Canada and the Empire—an organization cast in the Chalmers mold.

They saw the car—the Canadian Chalmers. From every sane standpoint the ideal car for the business man and his family.

On this Chalmers, big men staked their future in the motor car business. It built an institution broader than motordom—a pattern for all industries. It will build thousands of local successes in Canada and the United States.

Success drives to business in a Chalmers. For Chalmers knew the sort of car other business men would drive.

A car with everything a business man had learned to want in a car. Comfort, finish, fine appearance. A motor to put it through hard travel, up hills, and crowded traffic. Speed for emergencies and power to spare.

This much he wanted. Could it be made at reasonable cost? Chalmers efficiency said, yes!

The Canadian Chalmers was produced to Chalmers standards for $1625!

This is the Chalmers, big motor men saw. They saw it perform. They saw business men drive Chalmers cars to new records. A little booklet tells of them. Ask for a copy.)

It is seldom called just "a car." Men like to speak of "my Chalmers."

Chalmers is business, through and through. Chalmers, the car, the man, the institution.

What America's big motor men saw in the Chalmers is worth a visit from you.

PREMIER BORDEN BUSY

War Conference Meetings Involve Much Work

LONDON, March 26—Sir Robert Borden and his colleagues are occupied every day with the War Cabinet meetings. The conference duties involve a great deal of necessary preparation. A large mass of documents dealing with important subjects have been considered, and it is expected that the sittings will be continued until April. After a brief Easter intermission, in the course of which the Premier will visit Camps Bramshott and Whitley, he will leave for Edinburgh to receive the freedom of the city and a degree from the university. Later he will visit other centres. A large number of invitations to speak at various points in Great Britain have been received, but as the work in connection with the War Cabinet and conference is the first duty, the greater number of these invitations necessarily have been declined.

There would be less disposition to cavil about March weather if there were any assurance that much of it would not be carried over into April.

DON'T YOU KNOW that you can soon get rid of the agony of chapped hands by using Zam-Buk. Mrs. William Elstone, of Haliburton, Ont., writes:—

"Last winter my hands were very badly chapped. I used a lot of different so-called remedies, but my hands only seemed to get worse. Finally I tried the great herbal healer—Zam-Buk—which completely healed them."

Mrs. M. A. Bateson, of Souris, Man., writes:—"I have used Zam-Buk for chapped hands, and know of nothing to equal its wonderful soothing and healing powers."

Zam-Buk is also unequalled for chilblains, frost-bites, cold cracks and cold sores; as well as eczema, scalp sores, old wounds, ulcers, blood-poisoning, piles, burns and scalds, cuts and all skin injuries. 50c. a box. All druggists and stores, or Zam-Buk Co., Toronto.

TIN PAN BATHS NO MORE.

And "Best People" Never Bathe in Water.

In many European countries, "the best people," if you know what that means, never bathe in water, says Julius Chambers in The Brooklyn Eagle.

Spanish matrons have expressed much surprise at my complaints about the absence of bathing facilities in the Madrid hotels. One lady, wife of a distinguished member of the Cortes, told m: she "had herself rubbed down in oil once a week, but never had got into a tub of water, and never would!"

It is somewhat doubtful, for example, if Columbus had perfect table manners, or took a daily bath, even in the warm waters of the Sargasso Sea; but he achieved considerable notoriety.

Throughout Hungary, outside Budapest, baths are unknown in hotels or in castles of the nobility. An heiress of one of New York's wealthiest families—the Vanderbilts—married a Hungarian count, and when she reached the ancestral castle, which her family's American money was expected to restore, sought in vain for any means of taking a bath.

My memory of London hotels goes back to 1875, when there was not a single bathtub in any hotel in that city. A tin pan and bucket of warm water was the only "tub"—and you were lucky to get that.

And in that same period in New York City the Metropolitan and St. Nicholas Hotels, supposed to be models of excellence, were totally wanting in bathrooms.

Admittedly, it is as difficult to imagine life without motor cars as without bathtubs; but the former are less than a 20-year-old necessity, while the bath was an institution long before the times of the Roman emperors.

Alexander very nearly lost his life from pneumonia by bathing in one of the chilly mountain torrents of Asia Minor.

King George Good Democrat.

King George of England has won the hearts of his subjects by his character as displayed during the war. A writer in London Opinion is very sure that "King George is in a very real sense of the word a good democrat. He is the very opposite of the Kaiser in his perception of the change in modern sentiment towards kingship. He has never departed by a hair's-breadth from the constitutional doctrine of kingship. If anything, he has erred on the side of modesty, reticence and self-abnegation. He has pushed simplicity to its extremest point. If the British empire were a republic it could not possibly elect a president with a character more austere, more unselfish, or more averse from posturing in the limelight. The court of King George and Queen Mary is every whit as simple and as pure as the household of any republican president that ever breathed. The White Court of Britain need not fear comparison with the White House at Washington. In saying this, I am not using the language of the courtiers; I am saying what everybody knows to be true."

Scriptural English.

Those who listened to Mr. Lloyd George's speech at the Guildhall must have been impressed with the way in which the poetry of the Bible has permeated the English language. Nearly every metaphor used by the Prime Minister was one culled direct from the Psalms. Probably Mr. Lloyd George, with all the Celtic feeling for beauty, is particularly attracted to the rhythm of Seventeenth Century English. He is not, however, the only Minister in the British Cabinet with a feeling for Scripture. Mr. Prothero, the Minister of Agriculture, is, though it is not generally realized, "the Prothero of the Psalms"; the man who, fourteen years ago, sent out his book, "The Psalms in Human Life," into the highways and byways for the delight of wayfaring men.

Irish Saws.

"The priest was forty, but he lost his boots," Miss Katharine Tynan mentions in her engaging reminiscences as being the Irish equivalent of the proverb, "There is many a slip 'twixt the cup and the lip." To English readers the saying must seem as cryptic as that in a recently published letter from an Irish soldier, "The enemy has the knave, but we hold the fingers." They both find their origin in the card game beloved of Hibernians known as "forty-five." "The fingers" are the five of trumps, which is the best card in the pack, the knave ranking second in value. The object of the game is to score forty-five points, a piece of good fortune that seldom falls the player, reverend or otherwise, who has succeeded in making forty.—London Chronicle.

Italian Royal Family Is Greatly Influenced By British Governess

THE least known and yet one of the most influential women in Italy at present is Miss Margaret Brown, the English governess of three of the girls of the royal family. Since the discussion of the arrangement of a marriage between Edward Albert Prince of Wales, heir apparent to the English throne, and Princess Yolanda, eldest daughter of the King and Queen of Italy, the position of this governess as the domestic power behind the throne is said to have been greatly strengthened. Should the marriage between young Edward and the wealthiest royal heiress of Europe take place, as is expected, Miss Brown will receive due credit as the matchmaker. She has also exerted a great influence over the Crown Prince, who is still an impressionable and sensitive boy.

The mystery that has grown up around the personality of Miss Brown is one o: the sources of her influence. Also it is of the kind that pleases the King, who has a horror of the publicity which his position forces upon him. Those persons of the court life who dislike Miss Brown because of her confidential position, because of her power to hold her tongue, and her custom of standing beside the Queen's chair during receptions, have tried in vain to discover exactly who she is. To date, all they have learned is that she is a strong-minded person of some 45 years, who appeared on the scene at the birth of Yolanda, the first child, and who has been in charge of the children ever since. It appears that the King and Queen wanted their children brought up after the English fashion and that Miss Brown was recommended by some member of the English royalty.

The influence of Miss Brown in modernizing the education of Italian children of the noble families has been remarkable, and far wider than that of the more popularly known system of Dr. Maria Montessori. Miss Brown has introduced into Italy the English customs with the respect to the education of girls in particular. Her example with the royal children, who have been taught to lead an outdoor life, to swim and ride and play vigorous games, has been followed by the noble and wealthy families, who formerly brought up girls in the strictest indoor, nun-like seclusion.

Quite a stir was caused some time ago by the way Miss Brown let the girls run in athletic clothes about the beach and woods of Castle Porziana, the summer home of the royal family. The objecting court ladies, when they attempted to discuss the matter with the King, were asked if strong bodies were not to be preferred to showy clothing. The women of the royal nursery have also on several occasions discovered that this English woman's will was law. Once it was about the question of dolls. These playthings were ruled out and have stayed ruled out of the nursery.

Like the girls of the family, young Prince Humbert, the heir to the throne, is very fond of Miss Brown, whose influence has been extended to his education in some measure. She exerted her influence in securing the introduction of the Boy Scout movement into Italy, the Prince being its commander-in-chief and the King contributing a million dollars a year to its support.

During the war, though with her usual unobtrusiveness, Miss Brown has taught the girls the English methods of helping in charities. While the Italians are charitable as a people, their charities have not before been organized on the large scale made necessary by the war.

With the marriage of Yolanda, the work of the English governess will not be finished by any means, since there still remain Princess Fafalda, who was 14 years of age November 19, and Princess Giovanna, who was nine years of age November 13.

Why It Failed.

A certain chemist advertised a patent concoction labeled: "No more colds! No more coughs! Price 1s. 1½d."

A man who bought the mixture came back in three days to complain that he had drunk it all, but was no better.

"Drunk it all!" gasped the chemist. "Why, man, that was an india-rubber solution to put on the soles of your boots."—Tit-Bits.

Its futile for opportunity to knock at the door if we haven't saved up money enough to take advantage of her proposition.

A GALLANT SERB.

Serbian Army Mourns Death of "The Wolf."

The whole Serbian army mourns the loss of Voyno Popovitch, familiarly known as Voyvode "Vouk" or "The Wolf," commander of the Corps of Volunteer Irregulars, of Komitajis, which has played such an active and glorious part in the five campaigns that Serbia has waged since the autumn of 1914, says The London Times. Only 32 years of age, he established and maintained such a rigid code of drafting that his corps are to-day "irregulars" no longer but in name. Their drill and discipline are unsurpassed in any branch of the regular army.

It was in one of the desperate encounters that took place around Grunishta, while rallying his men against an overwhelming onset of the enemy, that this gallant warrior met his death. Though already wounded in the arm, with the wound yet unbandaged, he threw himself into the wavering line of Serbs and restored their courage by his example. But he was mortally hit by a Bulgarian sniper firing from behind a rock. His last words were: "Dead or alive, do not leave me to the Bulgarians." His dying wish was faithfully obeyed, and Voyvode "Vouk" was buried with all due honors by the victorious Serbs.

Australia's Trees.

One readily understands why the Australian loves his trees. The groves of giant eucalyptus form pictures never forgotten, and the scent of the wattle brings a homesick feeling like the smell of sage to the westerner. The flora is not only beautiful, it is unique, and has no counterpart in other lands. Of the 10,000 species of plants, most of them are purely Australian, and are unknown even in New Zealand. The general impression one gets of Australian forests is their total unlikeness to anything seen elsewhere.

The great forests of timber trees are not damp and shaded and all of one species, but are well lighted and filled with other forests of shorter trees. In places the woods consist of large widely spaced trees surrounded only by bunch grass, and even in areas where water is not to be found on the surface for hundreds of square miles true forests of low trees are present.

Forms which may be recognized as tulip, lily, honeysuckle, and fern take on a surprising aspect. They are not garden flowers, but trees, and the landscape of which they form a part reminds one of the hypothetical representations in books of science of a landscape of Mesozoic time, a period antedating our own by millions of years.

A Cutting Retort.

"I wish you were more like Mr. Green. He never has any business engagements downtown at night."

"That's so. But you don't see Mrs. Green riding around town in an automobile of her own, do you?"—Detroit Free Press.

Swearing on the Bible.

The method of swearing by the Bible came into use at a very early period, practically with the establishment of courts of law in Christian countries. It was the ordinary method of swearing when America was settled by Europeans and was naturally adopted here. Oaths were common before the Christian era, and any form may be used that conforms to the religious belief of the person to be sworn. Hebrews are often sworn on the Pentateuch, keeping on their hats, and their oath ends with the words, "So help me, Jehovah." A Mohammedan is sworn on the Koran.

He Made the Sale.

"Yes, the property is cheap enough. Why do you want to sell it?"

"You won't give me away?"

"No."

"Well, sir, it's because I'm the only man in this neighborhood that doesn't move in high society, and I'm lonesome."

Sample.

"George didn't keep his engagement with me last night," said the girl who was betrothed to him.

"I'd give him a piece of my mind," said her mother.

"Just a little sample of married life," suggested father.

A Biting Sentiment.

You have to be careful even about paying compliments. Bill Mixer, who used to write ads. for a tobacco house, got himself in bad when he started writing copy for a butter concern and wrote "Guaranteed not to bite the tongue."

A Real Autocrat.

"Hasn't he, though? I dare say that fellow wouldn't unbend for any tip less than a $100 bill."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

An Original Expedient

By ALAN HINSDALE

"Father," said Johnnie, "tell me a story."

"All right; I'll tell you a story about an elopement.

"When I was a young man I secured a position with a maker of artificial limbs. I traveled through the country selling legs and arms and other surgical contrivances to the small dealers.

"One day I was driving along a road with my wagon load of samples when I overtook a pretty girl walking the same way I was going. I asked her if I couldn't give her a lift. She accepted the offer and got in on the vacant seat beside me.

"Her name was—let me see, what was her name? Well, we'll call her Susie. That was the first girl who ever snuggled up to me, and I tell you I stuck to her like a kitten to a foot warmer. In truth, it was one of those cases o: love at first sight, and I couldn't tell you which fell in love with the other first. She was going to town to do some shopping, and I arranged with her to drive her back the same afternoon.

"I didn't go into the house with her when we reached her home. You see, it wouldn't look right that I had picked up Susie on the road. But the next time I went over the route I called with a letter of introduction"—

"Who from?" interrupted Eva.

"Well, I didn't intend to say anything about that, but since you want to know Susie gave me the name of a friend of hers, and I wrote the letter myself, signing the friend's name. I called on Susie, presented the letter, and she received me as a stranger. Of course that wasn't a nice thing to do, but Susie had told me that her father was a cranky old man and she couldn't make a young man's acquaintance without his asking innumerable questions about how, when and where she had met him."

"When does the elopement begin?" asked Johnnie.

"It begins right here. I visited Susie and courted her. From the first her father opposed me, and when I asked him for his daughter he refused me point blank. Susie wouldn't give me up, and there was nothing for it but to run away and be married. By this time winter had come on, and that winter there was a great deal of snow. After a big storm I started on a business trip in a sleigh. Susie had written me that her father had been called on to serve on a jury and was away most of the time. Her mother sympathized with Susie and me, so she didn't count against us. I drove up to the house one afternoon, and, the father being at the county seat, Susie and I concluded that it was as good a time as any to go off and get married. Susie's mother didn't object, and we started.

"We hadn't been gone long when Susie's father came home. He asked her mother where she was, and the poor woman looked guilty. He forced her to admit that Susie and I had gone off to be married and to tell him which way. Then he got into the sleigh he had come home in, and away he went lickety split after us to head us off before we could get married.

"Susie was looking back all the while, and presently, when we were on a rise, she saw her father coming some two or three miles away. Then I knew I was in for a chase."

"Did you lick your horse?" asked Johnnie.

"You bet I did, my boy. But he had no speed in him. I used him simply to jog through the country, carrying me and my samples, stopping here and there, and for this I didn't need a fast horse. The consequence was that Susie's father, having the best animal in his stable, gained on us.

"I was full of expedients, and as I drove on racked my brain for one to delay our pursuer. I remembered that there was a bridge ahead, a small, rickety affair. If I could have time to ruin that bridge behind me I could keep my pursuer from getting over it and in that way I might escape. Then an idea struck me how to cause the delay.

"Passing from a rise down into a place where there was a deep snowdrift beside the road, I pulled up, took a couple of artificial legs from my samples and asked Susie for her shoes. She took them off, and I put them on the wooden feet, got out of the sleigh and stuck the legs in the snowdrift, leaving only the feet and ankles exposed. Then I got back into the sleigh and started on again.

"'What's that for?' asked Susie.

"'He'll see the feet sticking out o. the snow, think you're buried head down and stop to pull you out. If he takes enough time doing it I'll be able to send that bridge sailing down with the current.'

"The bridge was beyond the next hill and, after crossing it, I got out and worked like a beaver till I had loosened the supports and dropped them into the stream. Of course they couldn't be replaced in a hurry, and when I had completed the wreck I breathed easy. I was driving away when I saw our pursuer on the rise behind us. But the race was over. He couldn't get across the stream, and I took my time in driving to a parson's, where Susie and I were married."

"John," said the wife and mother who had come in in time to hear the climax of the story, "you ought to be ashamed of yourself to make up such stuff for the children."

Teach the children the things they should know and then you'll know they have their information in the way you want them to have it.

OUR WEEKLY SERMON

THE FOOTSTEPS OF SORROW.

BY REV. A. M. HUBLY

Gen. L: 24-26.

This scene of a departing pilgrim, leaving behind him the path of earthly life marked by many "footsteps of sorrow," holds for us much important truth.

Joseph trod the way of trouble, sore ills; the "Heinous One" than any other of our fallen race, and came to its terminus, not lame, and halting with failure crippled by that discipline, bleeded rid the soul of its chaff which bind to selfishness and greed of gain, such as his father Jacob needed, and received when he passed over Jabbok.

When Jacob passed over Jabbok he passed into a new life and received a new name. He was no longer Jacob the "supplanter," but "Israel A Prince of God," yet, he goes halting upon his thigh, and in this reminded of his rebellious nature, and the wrestling power of sin that would not be subdued until severely touched by his covenant-keeping God.

Jabbok is the "little brook," the "narrow stream," which divides the things which are, from the things that shall be hereafter. So death is not a terminus but a transition. We lose sight of our friends and the shadows, but they pass through them, to bound onward and upward in the glory and strength of Him, that "turneth the shadow of death into the morning." It is clear, that when Joseph was about to cross over to the beyond, he was not so much concerned about his own future, as about the future of his brethren. He was on the borders of the everlasting world, with perfect trust in the "Lord of hosts, the God of Jacob," who had been with him in trouble, and had delivered him," according to His promise.

All was failing him on earth, but his long-tried faith held unto his God He felt within him, that which triumphed over death. His brethren, less acquainted with God, and more identified with sin, were filled with fear, that when this powerful prince, prime minister of that great Kingdom, was gone, disaster would come upon them and their kindred.

Let us learn how sin blinds from seeing the truth and purposes of God, and how the vision of faith bridges all time, and all chaotic overturning Providences. The sin-burdened brethren saw no rift in the gathering clouds, while the dying believer saw the promises of God as already fulfilled. "Ye faithful saints, fresh courage take, The clouds ye so much dread, Are big with mercy, and will break With blessing on your head."

The dying believer, having proven God, by trusting Him through many temptations and trials, lays firm hold upon the declarations of the Divine word which cannot pass away until every promise, and term of the covenant of God shall be fulfilled.

Though Joseph had spent the greater portion of his life in Egypt, and had attained to great social and political eminence, and had become surrounded by riches and honor, yet he considered Canaan, the land of promise, as his home. He had no misgiving concerning the promise that Israel should become a great nation, and would, "possess all the land from the Euphrates to the great sea." He was perfectly at ease concerning his own state, but he did what he could to encourage the faith and hope of his kindred, who looked upon his death as a great calamity, and sore bereavement.

To console them, he did not refer them to any new discoveries, or to any power invested in him by his promience as a statesman in Egypt. He simply directed their thoughts to the Divine promise made of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. Though there was no written word of God, His people, in all their affliction, had sufficient ground for faith and hope in the promises handed down from generation to generation. How superior are our privileges in having the precious volume of inspired scripture filled with promises as the sky at night is filled with stars.

"Holy Bible, Book Divine!
Precious treasure thou art mine!"

"Joseph said unto his brethren, I die: and God will surely visit you, and bring you out of this land unto the land which He swore to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob." And Joseph took an oath of the children of Israel, saying, "God will surely visit you, and ye shall carry up my bones from hence." The dying man, with such a vision clear, bridges centuries of time, and chasms of human disbelief, cruel slavery, and horrible misery and beholds Israel in the land promised to the fathers: "How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, and thy tabernacles, O Israel! As the valleys, are they spread forth as gardens by the rivers side, as the trees of lign aloes which the Lord hath planted, and as cedar trees beside the waters."

So Jacob died, being an hundred and ten years old: and they embalmed him and he was put in a coffin in Egypt." "in a coffin!" Yes, he lives! And in the portion and strength of his people, when their hearts and flesh fail them.

The uninterred coffin was a silent, but forcible witnesser of God, of His promise, and of man's indomitable faith for nearly four hundred years. "He being dead, yet speaketh." The coffin spoke loudly, though it gave no sound, of the exemplary life of him whose body was within its keeping. Having considered, at some length, the peculiarly successful ending of this "full, and eventful life, in connection with the "footsteps of sorrow," that marked its path of earlier years.

For seventeen years the boy lived his life in Egypt. Then for 13 years he was a slave in the household of Potiphar in Egypt. Three years he spent in an Egyptian prison. For eighty years he held office next to the king of the world's greatest kingdom at that time. He was not without sorrow in childhood, but no doubt wept bitterly, when his beloved mother was buried in a hastily dug grave by the wayside, near Bethlehem, as the family were on the way from Padan-Aram, to Hebron. He was a gentle and nobly boy, beloved by his father, and envied by his ten older brothers. Their jealousy of their young brother led them to prove him with many sorrows. Their scandalous behavior, when out of the sight of their father, was reported at home by Joseph which made their treatment of him still more unbearable.

The crowning sin of these men against their father, and the most crushing cruelty perpetrated against their brother took place when both father and son were exercised in showing them kindness.

The ten were pasturing their flocks at Shechem seventy miles away from home. Joseph, a boy of seventeen, was sent by his father that long journey to enquire of their welfare. It was there they plotted murder and they stripped him, and put him in a pit, and regardless of his suffering, his sorrow, and his cries they sat down to feast and make merry, eating and drinking. But God sees both the good and the evil. His eyes are upon the righteous, and His ears are open to their cry, and He delivereth them out of all their troubles."

A company of trading Ishmaelites, passing made bartering possible, and Joseph was drawn up out of the pit and sold into slavery for twenty pieces of silver.

No words can describe the "footsteps of sorrow" trod by Joseph, as captive and slave, he marched from Dothan to Egypt, but the light breaks through the cloud, and he raises his bows in the tears, when we read: "And the Lord was with Joseph." If the Lord is with us, we can bear all hardships, and endure all sufferings.

Some men can discern the Lord Himself with them, though their brethren are not. It is worth while being our friends and having all men forsake us, if by this we learn more fully what it is to have the Lord stand by us. His presence gives value to the "footsteps of sorrow," and we know that we are treading the appointed high road of the cross—suffering and sorrow first, then within the kingdom, abiding, with the King, His glory and honor.

Terrible indeed, must have been the chasm and gulf that these young man of high ideals, when Potiphar's wife Master whose unstinted confidence he had enjoyed, believed the false accusation of his temptress, a vile infamous woman.

"And Joseph's master took him and put him into the prison, a place where the King's prisoners were bound." "They hurt his feet with fetters!" But the iron entered not into his soul." "entered his soul." Here again, we find a halo of light amid the blackness of horror. The Lord was with Joseph, and showed him mercy."

How good for us to know that prison walls cannot shut God out from his witnessing servant within. With God's presence, a prison becomes a palace; the fiery furnace a place of sweet fellowship with the Lord; the dungeon with its stocks may be a music school, from which ascend "songs in the night." From such a school the Philippian jailor learned the song of salvation.

There is many a sanctorious minstrel
Among the sons of light,
Will say of his sweetest music
I learned it in the night.
And Many a rolling anthem,
That fills the Father's home,
Sobbed out its first rehearsal
In the shade of a darkened room."

Sure Way To Get Rid Of Dandruff

There is one sure way that has never failed to remove dandruff at once, and that is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this just get about four ounces of plain, common liquid arvon from any drug store (this is all you will need), apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning, most if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find all itching and dig ging of the scalp will stop instantly and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

You can get liquid arvon at any drug store, it is inexpensive, and four ounces is all you will need, a little spoonful may has never been known to fail.

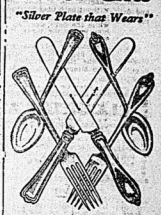
PEN-PICTURE OF CHRIST BY ROMAN GOVERNOR

An ancient manuscript recently acquired by Charles L. Freer well-known art-let and archeologist of Detroit, Mich., gives what purports to be a pen-picture of Christ.

The manuscript, it is said, was found from an original letter of Publius Lentulus at Rome, and is an exquisite word-picture. It was the usual custom of the Roman Government to advise the Senate and people of such material things as happened in their provinces in the days of Tiberius Cæsar, and Publius Lentulus, procurator of Judea, wrote the letter to the Senate. It reads: "There appeared in these, our days, a man of great virtue named Jesus Christ, who is yet living amongst us, and of the Gentiles is accepted as the prophet of truth. He raises the dead and cures all manner of diseases. A man of stature somewhat tall, and comely, such as the beholder may both love and fear. His hair is the color of a chestnut full ripe, plain to his ears, whence downward it is more orient and curling, and waving about his shoulders. In the midst of his head is a seam, a partition, in the hair after the manner of the Nazarites. His forehead, plain and very delicate, his face without spot or wrinkle, beautiful with a lovely read. His nose and mouth so formed that nothing can be reprehended. His beard is in color like his hair, not very long, but forked. His look is innocent and mature with eyes grey, clear and quick and luminous. In reproving he is terrible, his eyes piercing as with a two-edged sword. He greatly, the selfish and the oppressor, but look with tenderest pity on the weak, the erring and sinful. Courteous and fair-spoken. Pleasant in conversation, mixed with gravity. It cannot be remembered that any have seen him laugh, but many have seen him weep. In proportion of body most excellent—a man for his singular beauty surpassing the children of men."



AGED WOMAN FOUND DEAD

OWEN SOUND, March 26.—Leslie Penner (Dan) Cummings and Robt. Lee yesterday went to the residence of Mrs. William Brown, sixty-seven years old, and found her body kneeling beside her bed in her night clothes. Her face and head were bruised and blood was on the floor. Dr. Dow, Coroner, has ordered an inquest. Mrs. Brown resided alone, and was last seen on Wednesday evening. It is believed that she had been dead two or three days. Her brother, John McKerran came up from Toronto.

M'GRAW SIGNS FOR SALARY OF $40,000

May Reach $50,000 Yearly When Profits Are Shared—Highest Paid Man in Game

John McGraw, manager of the Giants, became the highest salaried man in baseball late Saturday night when he signed a new five-year contract with the New York club on terms that will make his income from the game between $40,000 and $50,000 a year.

Under the contract McGraw virtually becomes a partner with the stockholders of the club, as a straight salary is guaranteed to him, said to be $40,000. In addition to this, he will share in the profits of the club over a certain figure. In this respect the contract is really a bonus arrangement, as the profits will be regulated by the standing of the Giants in the National League championship race.

Although this new contract had been discussed for some time, McGraw had not expected to sign so soon. President Harry Hempstead, however, saw no reason for delay. Hempstead was in New York when McGraw brought the Giants here Saturday. They talked business last night and the announcement was made after a late dinner given by McGraw at the St. Anthony Hotel.

The new contract becomes effective at once, although McGraw's old agreement covered this season. After the season of 1912 he signed a five-year contract at a straight salary of $30,000 a year.

Even then he was the best paid man in the game, but he now ranks above any club or league official. Ban Johnson, President of the American League, gets $25,000 a year, but there are some club owners who draw larger stipends. It is understood that President Hempstead, who represents the majority of stockholders of the New York club, draws a salary of $40,000.

"I am not at liberty to state the terms of this contract," said Hempstead last night, "but if the Giants have a good year their manager will earn and get more money than the President of the club."

It is understood that McGraw will acquire a certain amount of stock in the club each year by charging it against his salary, and by the time the contract runs out it is possible that he will be an officer of the National Exhibition Company, the corporation name for the New York club.

By continuing his relations with the club McGraw now insures his record of a longer period of continuous service as manager of a big league baseball club than any other man in the game. He came to the New York clubs in 1902 in midseason. He has therefore been manager of the Giants for fourteen seasons and part of a fifteenth.

In all those years he has never finished only once in the second division. That was in 1914, when they were fifth. They have won four pennants and one world's championship, captured another pennant that they did not get credit for and last season broke the record for a run of victories in the major leagues.

AFTER MONEYED STAKES

DETROIT, March 26—The entries for the stake events of the local Grand Circuit meeting, which was announced Saturday, will be of more than usual interest to Canadians, owing to the latter having entries in several of the stakes.

The Maxwell-Chalmers and Manufacturers' Stake Nat Ray, of Toronto, has entered Chilcoot, the good Can. Pacific trotter that he is training for C. A. Burns of Toledo. Twenty-four are entered in this stake, including Wilkes Brewer, the champion trotter of the Canadian circuit last year, and who is in the Jamison stable.

Two Canadian, or rather, Ontario, entries are in the Board of Commerce stake. Nat Ray has staked his good pacer Dayspring, while Hal. B. Jr., who had a new lease of life last summer, is also entered.

FOOTBALL LEAGUE MEET

TORONTO, March 26—In accordance with the ruling of Secretary Sing, of the Ontario Football Association, that a list of the Provincial Leagues executive, and the leagues in that the members of each league should belong, those interested in the league met on Saturday night, and agreed everything in shape and officers appointed executive were given full power to draft the constitution, which will be presented to the annual meeting of the Ontario F. A. U. Saturday week. Owing to the decreased train service from Hamilton to other parts a suggestion has been made that this meeting be held on Good Friday, when all delegates will be on holiday. Under war conditions President Cluff might have power to make such an alteration, but is all likelihood in order to make the proceedings in every way constitutional, the date fixed by rule will be adhered to, and some means devised of overcoming the transportation difficulties.

At least, if the Czar took to his garden he has the knowledge that his new job is a profitable one.

N. H. A. MAY DISSOLVE

Professional Circuit to be Remodeled And a New Name Taken

MONTREAL, Que., March 26—It is stated on the authority of a man prominently connected with professional hockey that as the result of the charges made by E. J. Livingstone of Toronto, the National Hockey Association may disband shortly, since a majority of the clubs seem convinced that it would be better to have the whole professional hockey situation remodelled, to drop the name which has been considerably dragged through the mud and to build up a new body. It is even estimated that should the N. H. A. so dissolved the body that succeeds it would have a French-Canadian team no longer directed by George Kennedy but by a real French-Canadian organization and that the Quebec team would be taken over by the Quebec Arena. The Wanderer and Ottawa teams are to remain under the same management as at present, but tentative negotiations, it is said have been on foot to take in probably two teams from the United States.

VETERAN RINK MAN ... LAID TO REST

MONTREAL, March 26—The funeral of the late Joseph Rogers, for more than forty years rink man at the Montreal Curling Club took place this morning from the home of his sister, Mrs. Patrick Nelligan, 115 Fulford street, there being many relations and friends present. O. N. Evans, president of the club with which Mr. Rogers had so long been associated, and Andrew Shepherd his successor at rink man, were also amongst those who attended. The service was conducted by Rev. Father Donnelly, at St. Anthony's Church, and from there the cortege proceeded to Cote des Neiges Cemetery.

New Government Facing Danger

STOCKHOLM, March 26—There is no longer any chance of a counter-revolution in Russia, in the opinion of Professor Paul Wiuogradoff of Petrograd University, but the radical pacifists are still a source of danger for the new Government, Prof. Vinogradoff, who is on his way to England to lecture at Oxford, in an interview at Haparanda, said.

"There is no reason to expect an uprising of the Republicans. As to the form of Government to be adopted, there is nowhere any desire to anticipate the decision of the national convention. Naturally the question of peace or war is the most acute, but that faction of the Socialists, which desires a separate peace does not appear to be numerically important. One may be easily deceived in this matter. During the first days of excitement there were some ecstatic demands that the slaughter should cease, but many who joined in the demand have preached a different conclusion after riper consideration.

"I shall not attempt to deny that genuine danger threatens from the radical element, but on the other hand, I desire that the provisional Government is the master of the situation. Prince Lvoff (the Premier) is a wonderful organizer and the Government, thanks to his efforts, is winning more and more stability every day. Any coup from any side whatever is extremely improbable."

PRELIMINARY HEARING AT TRENTON

James M. Boyle of Trenton, who is at present in the County Jail in Belleville, having been arrested on a warrant charging him with being implicated in originating the fire which occurred in the King George Hotel at Trenton on March 28 last, will on Saturday afternoon have a preliminary hearing at Trenton, before Police Magistrate O'Rourke of this town. Mr. W. D. M. Storey of this city, has been retained to defend the accused.

BLOCKADE HAS NO LEAKAGE

British Cordon Around Germany Tighter Than Ever—Neutrals Get in Line

LONDON, March 28—Special—William A. S. Hewins and Carlton W. Balfour, Unionists members of the House of Commons, Tuesday afternoon raised the question of the effectiveness of the British blockade and the difficulties of enforcing it, during a debate in the House. Mr. Belfairs said the difficulties had been largely removed when the United States, "the most powerful and most critical neutral," came in on the side of the Entente allies.

In the Lords the statement was made by Lord Charles Beresford today that thus far in March the war measures of the Central Powers had resulted in the loss of 255 vessels, aggregating 320,000 tons. The public ought to have the facts brought home to it.

Lord Robert Cecil, Minister of Blockade, assured the members of the Commons that the closest co-operation existed between the Admiralty and his department. Admiral Sir Douglas de Chair, formerly in command of the blockading squadron in the North Sea, having been appointed to advise his territory and a Russian protectorate as to the views of the Admiralty and the Admiralty as to the views of the Foreign Office.

KINGSTON MAN ASSUMES MAMMOTH TASK ABROAD

Will Undertake to Make Every Available Foot of Soil Produce a Maximum Amount of Food—Will Introduce Skilled American Farmers to Expedite Work—American Machinery to be Installed

Special to The Intelligencer.

LONDON, March 28—Sir Arthur Lee, formerly instructor at Kingston Military College, Canada, and later military attache to the British Embassy at Washington, who is now charged with the gigantic task of making every available foot of soil produce it maximum amount of food, told the Associated Press he hoped to attract to Britain five thousand skilled American farmers to help make employment of American agriculture machinery fully successful. He would also get some skilled farmers from Canada, besides those already in England with the Canadian forces. The introduction of American farm machinery would, he said, witness more universal employment of women in the land.

ROME, March 28.—General Diroux, commanding the Montenegrin troops serving with the Italian army, writes: "A terrible and desperate attack is in preparation against our lines. Every one foresees it and even the enemy announces it in order to intimidate us by threatening Italy with the fate of Roumania and Serbia."

ADMIRALTY ANNOUNCES LOSS OF HOSPITAL SHIP

Said to Have Been Torpedoed Without Warning — Red Cross Signs Visibly Illuminated—Thirty-One Dead and Twenty-One Missing

LONDON, March 28—Special—The loss of the British ship Asturias was announced by the British Admiralty today. Between 40 and 50 persons perished.

It is understood that when the Asturias was torpedoed she was carrying no wounded. She had disembarked a considerable number of wounded at a certain British port and was on a return voyage with some 300 persons aboard.

The Admiralty statement says:

"The British hospital ship Asturias, while steaming with all navigating lights and with all proper distinguishing Red Cross signs visibly illuminated, was torpedoed without warning on the night of March 20. The following casualties occurred: Military dead, 31; missing, 21 including one female nurse; injured, 17. Crew, dead 20; with 9 missing, including one stewardess; crew injured, 22."

"The torpedoing of this hospital ship is included in the list of achievements claimed by U-boats as reported in a German wireless message yesterday."

The Press Association says that the Asturias was torpedoed about midnight. The torpedo damaged the rudder and passed into the engine room breaking the machinery, including the electric plant. The Asturias had landed about 900 sick. Those aboard consisted of the crew, members of the medical corps and nurses. The distress signals were answered, and several boatloads of survivors were towed ashore; between 300 and 400 were brought in. Many of them were utterly clad, and some were wounded, three of whom died after they were landed.

RUSSIA WILL NOT SHEATH SWORD UNTIL COMPLETE VICTORY IS WON

Special to The Intelligencer.

PETROGRAD, March 28—Social Democracy has published a declaration favoring a vigorous prosecution of the war, leaving the demands of Social Democracy for Agrarian and Social Reform in abeyance until the country is safe from danger of a return of monarchy. "Victory of the Central Empire, says the statement, "would bring ruin and reinstate the old regime." Several Duma deputies who have been to the front have returned to Petrograd convinced that the spirit of the army is excellent and that all are convinced of the absolute necessity of continuing the war.

BRITISH PREMIER BUSY ON IRISH QUESTION

Has Been Almost Constantly Occupied During Past Week

LONDON, March 27—The Government is bending every energy toward settlement of the Irish question, according to information revealed in the House of Commons yesterday.

Responding to an appeal by the Irish leader, John Dillon, warning him of the necessity for no delay in such a settlement, Chancellor of the Exchequer Bonar Law, said the Government was "deeply concerned and was working hard."

Sir Henry Dalziel, an intimate friend of Premier Lloyd George, said the Prime Minister had been almost constantly occupied with the Irish question since last Thursday.

TO RETURN IN SPECIAL SHIP

Women and Children in England to be Brought Back Early Next Month

LONDON, March 28.—Special—It is announced that a ship will early next month, be placed at the disposal of the Canadian women and children who have been stranded in England since the unrestricted submarine warfare was put into effect. The new plan is a great relief, and a special office has been opened to deal with applications already pouring in.

PLOT TO BLOW UP BUFFALO

BUFFALO, March 28—The Buffalo News says: A widespread plot to destroy the municipal waterworks, and a number of factories in the city particularly those which are in any way connected with the manufacture of war supplies, has been discovered in Buffalo by United States Secret Service Agents. The information they have gathered during two and a half years' work in the city was laid before the directors of the Chamber of Commerce.

The secret Service agents are said to have discovered here in Buffalo a well-organized anti-American war party, said to number between 20,000 and 30,000 men.

NATIONALIZATION OF THE G. T. P. AND C. N. R.

Commission to Recommend This—Other Alternative Would be Receivership

OTTAWA, March 27.—The report of the Drayton-Smith-Ackworth Commission on Canadian railways is not yet in the hands of the Government but is in process of completion. Sir Henry Drayton and F. W. Ackworth favor nationalization of the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Northern systems, but A. H. Smith favors corporation control wit hits continuation of financial assistance until the roads are in a position to stand on their feet.

The report that one hundred million is required to place the two systems on an economic running basis is believed to be substantially correct.

A receivership or nationalization would seem under the circumstances to be the two alternatives.

"Petticoat Army" Makes Big Gains

Miss Smith Reports Much Success in Campaign

NEW YORK, March 27—Following a whirlwind campaign through upState cities, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, chairman in this State of the National League for Woman's Service, returned to this city today. In her trip Miss Smith addressed a number of mass meetings and organized branches of the league.

Her plans call for the practical aid of women in the army in case of war. To that end an appeal has been made more to the self-supporting woman than to the woman of leisure. In case of war Miss Smith believes that such specialized work as motor car driving, wireless, cooking and nursing can be competently handled by women.

The self-supporting woman has been asked to contribute her services in two ways either her entire time if thrown out of employment by war, or her spare hours. The efforts of the woman of leisure will also be employed, but directed to less specialized work.

"A petticoat army," Miss Smith said today, "behind the fighting lines would double the efficiency of the fighting forces. Specialized training also makes for women more self-reliant and makes better wives and mothers. Feminine sympathies become constructive instead of merely sentimental."

Stole Belgian Relief Supplies

Escaped Englishman From Belgium Exposes Treachery of Germans

Special to The Intelligencer.

LONDON, March 28—J. P. Whitaker, an Englishman, has just escaped from Roubaix, Belgium, where he lived thirty months without Germans suspecting his nationality. He declares the Germans stole Belgian relief supplies and substituted them for bread, made of rye and sawdust, which caused illness and high death rate.

Peace Offer To Russia By Foe

LONDON, March 28.—Special.—A despatch to the Exchange Telegraph from Amsterdam says:

"Reuter's and Berlin telegram received by the Amsterdam Bourse, Berlin is filled with rumors that Germany has offered a separate peace to Russia. The terms offered are said to be complete autonomy to Poland, the internationalization of Constantinople, the evacuation by Russia of Austrian territory an da Russian protectorate over Armenia.

Motorman Killed In Oshawa Smash

Baggage and Express Car Crashes at High Speed Into Passenger Car

OSHAWA, March 28—Special—A shocking accident occurred here last night by which Matthew Burrows, a motorman on the Oshawa Street Railway was instantly killed. A baggage and express car was going south to meet the 5.40 o'clock C.T.R. train, and, when on Simcoe street south, ran headon into a northbound passenger car driven by Burrows. Both cars were going at a high rate of speed, and Burrows was smashed up and killed instantly. Four passengers in the car were shaken up but not badly hurt, and the motorman of the other car escaped injury. An inquest has been ordered.

Burrows was a trusted employee of the Oshawa Street Railway, and had been with it for ten or fifteen years. He was about fifty-five years of age, and leaves a wife and family here.

SHOT BY FACTORY GUARD

Member of Party Crossing Across Ice Bellieved Hit

MONTREAL, March 28—Suspecting that an attack was about to be made on the works of the Vickers Company here by five men, apparently armed, who were seen creeping towards its shipyards of the company across the ice on the River St. Lawrence early this morning, the plant guard was called out. Volleys were fired at the five men who were seen to run across the ice. One man seemed to fall between the cakes of ice, into the water and to disappear.

EIGHTY-ONE CANADIAN OFFICERS ARE PRISONERS

LONDON, March 27—Statistics of prisoners, presented in the Commons tonight, show that Canadians taken prisoners in France number 81 officers and 2,137 other ranks; British in France, 1,920 officers; 28,876 others; Australians, 21, and 827; New Zealanders, 11 and 72; Indian natives, 9 and 610; total for France 1,131, and 32,519. No Canadians are mentioned for other war theatres. Australians taken in the Dardanelles and Egypt, total 12 officers, 130 others, making in all threatres 33 officers and 976 Australian ranks.

BRITISH DESTROYERS ARE REPORTED SUNK

LONDON, March 27—Two British torpedo boat destroyers have been sunk, one by striking a mine, and another after a collision with a steamer, it is officially announced tonight.

The Admiralty statement reads:

"A British destroyer recently struck a mine in the Channel and sank. Four officers and 17 men were saved.

"Another of these vessels sank today after a collision with a steamer. One man was lost. There were no other casualties."

TURNING MOVE BY THE FRENCH

Nivelle and Haig Reclaim Seven More Villages for France

LONDON, March 28—Special—A turning movement around the Plateau of Vauquois, on the southern bulge of the "Hindenburg line," is being pressed by the French with great energy, despite the rainy weather, and last night the forces of General Nivelle, after having taken the town off Coucy-le-Chatau during the day, wrested all of the lower Forest of Coucy from its German defenders, together with the villages of Petit Barisis, Vernueil and Coucy-le-Ville.

Berlin admits this French victory. The German official statement says: "In the woods between the Oise and Coucy-le-Chateau stronger French forces encountered our protecting troops, which inflicted losses on the enemy and then gave way before a threatening outflanking movement."

WILL CARRY HUN OFFICERS

Reprisal That May be Adopted as the Result of the Sinking of Asturias

LONDON, March 28—Special—It is assumed by the press that the sinking of the hospital ship Asturias will be met with prompt reprisals, in accordance with the declaration issued by the British Foreign Office at the end of January, when the German threat to sink hospital ships was made on the allegation that such vessels were being used as transports.

The form that the reprisals may take has not been indicated officially, but the suggestion was then made that several of the highest ranking German officers among the British prisoners should be carried on all hospital ships.

Italians Ready For Hindenburg

WESTERN HEADQUARTERS OF THE ITALIAN ARMY, March 28—Special—The shortening of the German line in France is regarded as one of the many indications that the enemy soon will have fresh divisions available for use on some other front, and, as a General remarked to me, "there are signs that the Italian front has been selected."

Perhaps the most significant of these signs is the rumored appointment of General Hotzendorff to command here, with the inherent implication that the old prejudice in favor of a descent upon Brenta has been revived favorably by the Austrian high command. The Italian officer also said that the increasing force of artillery were an unmistakable sign in this latter connection.

BORDEN AT OXFORD

Visits Canadian Wounded and Addresses the Officers

LONDON, March 27.—Premier Borden returned today from Oxford, where he visited Canadian wounded also those in the officers' training corps. He inspected and addressed Canadian units at Balliol College and Christie Church, and later, after visiting the wounded in the city hospitals, addressed the officers at Somerville College. The physician here is a United States citizen who came here to render help to the allied cause. Premier Borden spoke of the occasion as unique and described it as a happy augury. He found the wounded receiving every care at all the hospitals he visited. With his colleagues he today attended the Imperial war conference.

Enemy Forces Leaving Alsace

LONDON, March 28—Special— A Daily News despatch from Rotterdam says that persistent reports are being received from Switzerland that the Germans are evacuating Muelhausen and other places in Alsace.

The whole of the Baden bank of the Rhine, as well as the district of Lauterenburg, has been declared a war zone. It is generally believed that here, as on the Somme, the German front will be withdrawn.

Grave Fears in Germany That Potatoes and Food Stuffs Will Run Short

Special To The Intelligencer.

COPENHAGEN, March 28—The British Government says the result of recent stock-taking of grain, potatoes and other food stuffs in Germany was so unfavorable as to cause genuine apprehension. It revealed the fact that last year's harvest was not so much better than the calamitous harvest of nineteen hundred and fifteen, as had been supposed.

AMERICANS SUPPORT LOAN

Subscriptions Exceed Twenty-five Million Dollars

OTTAWA, Ont., March 27—It is not possible yet to estimate the amount of American subscriptions to the war loan, but the impression appears to be that they will run to twenty-five or thirty million dollars. This means that Canada has itself oversubscribed the loan and that the American subscriptions form a valuable surplus which will give stability to the issue. The Minister of Finance is much pleased at the friendly attitude of citizens of United States in the issue.

OVER-SUBSCRIBED BY HUNDRED MILLIONS

Sir Thomas White Thanks Those Who Contributed to Loan's Success

OTTAWA, March 27—Sir Thomas White, Minister of Finance, who returned to Ottawa last night, expressed himself as delighted with the reception of the Canadian War Loan, which is to be oversubscribed by at least one hundred million dollars. It has been an anxious three weeks for the minister, as the floatation was made contingent to the advice of financial experts in both Canada and the United States. The loan is a remarkable triumph for Canada.

SPIRITED FIGHTING ON SOMME ALLIED FORCES MAKE PROGRESS

Special to The Intelligencer.

PARIS, March 28—Official statement—Between the Somme and the Oise there were no important events during the night. Artillery fighting was rather heavy in the region east of the Lower Forest of Coucy. North of the Ailette we made further progress, and also in the sector east of the Leuilly, Neuville, Sur Margival was calm.

Lancashire is Scolded

Many of the speakers expressed the grateful thanks of the country to Mr. Austen Chamberlain, Secretary of State for India, and his "firm and just action" in the matter of the cotton duties. They said that the attitude of the Lancashire cotton manufacturers in opposing the Indian tax on imported cottons showed a want of knowledge of Indian affairs.

All the speeches contained expressions of patriotism and loyalty, and voiced the willingness of the people to share the burdens of the Empire. Sir William Mayer said he hoped the war loan would soon exceed £10,000,000

Lord Chelmsford in closing the session, said he was glad to find that the offer of £100,000,000 to the Imperial Government had met with practically the unanimous accord of the Council.

INDIA HAS $500,000,000 READY TO HAND OVER TO EMPIRE

LONDON, March 28—Special—A special despatch from Delhi reports the final meeting of the session of the Legislative Council of India, at which stirring speeches were delivered by the Viceroy and members of the Council, in reference to the new taxation measure and the participation of India in the war. The despatch says:

At the Legislative Council's closing meeting today several members declared that the manner in which the new taxation proposals had been received was proof of the enthusiasm and patriotism of the people. Great satisfaction was expressed that no further burdens were placed on the poorer classes of the country, although some members declared the raising of railway rates and urged development of the general industries of the country.

REMAINS ARRIVE HERE

The remains of the late Mr. Owen Reid, of Belleville, who died suddenly yesterday at Orillia, were brought to this city today and taken to his late home on North Front Street.

RIVER CLEAR OF ICE

The large field of ice which came down the river the past few days is now all clear of the river having been carried beneath the ice in the bay. The anticipation of many that Belleville would this year experience a flood, was fortunately not realized.

ARRESTED AS TRESPASSERS

At an early hour this morning, Mr. J. M. Trulasch, C. T. R. Constable for Belleville district, arrested two young men at the station here on charge of trespassing. They gave their names as John Wade and Phillip Beltontaine, aged 17 and 19 years respectively.

DRAMATIC SCENE AT BIG RECRUITING MEETING

Earnest appeals from the platform for volunteer recruits for the British Navy had been made to the great gathering which crowded Loews' Theatre, Toronto, Sunday night. Three lads had responded, but the audience thereafter sat silent. Then, unexpectedly, a young woman rose in a gallery box. She was weeping and apparently a bit hysterical.

"Oh, men, men," she cried, "how dare you sit still, content, when your brothers are bleeding for you at the front. Four of my brothers have been killed fighting for you. How dare you, young men, sit there content. It isn't fair! It isn't just! Get up there and join." The interruption created a momentary sensation.

"Push them along. Make them some Sergeant!" she pleaded, pointing to several rows of men in the body of the theatre below. "They're cowards, cowards, cowards, or they wouldn't let my brothers all die for them.

"Come along, if you're British," she cried again. And, as none moved she continued almost hysterically: "What, don't YOU go and fight them." The young woman who is English was finally escorted to be seated.

"Bring on conscription," broke in another feminine voice in the gallery just at this point. Then there was a wild, long-sustained outburst of cheering.

REV. MR. BAMFORTH AT BRIDGE STREET

Subject of Prayer Was the Topic at Special Service—Rev. Dr. Scott Speaks Inspiringly

The subject of prayer was the topic at the special services in Bridge Street Methodist last evening. Rev. Mr Bamforth, of Colborne, gave a very inspiring talk, interlarded with apt illustrations and telling application to the place and power of prayer in Christian life, dwelling especially on the conditions of persistence in petition, and the assurance that every prayer uttered in faith and submission will be abundantly answered. Dr. Scott followed with a most earnest appeal to all to make a daily season of prayer the habit of their life as this was the true test and essential condition of a vital Christianity. He especially emphasized the importance of family prayer, which he feared was being more and more neglected in a great many Christian households.

Despite the unfavorable weather there was a good attendance at the meeting which throughout was of a most helpful and stimulating character. There is every evidence of a growing interest in these meetings to which every one is invited.

NO MORE COMMISSIONS

It is published in district orders that there are in Canada many lieutenants who are qualified and awaiting appointment in the Canadian Expeditionary Force, who have no chance of going overseas unless they are either seconded or resign their commissions, and if they select the latter, they will not need to serve with units in Canada, but will be collected at convenient centres and sent over to England for training as soon as troop ships are available. On their arrival in England, arrangements will be made, if possible, to allow them to be posted to any unit they prefer (subject to the exigencies of the service) and with the qualifications they possess, their advancement should be rapid.

Star Course Entertainment A Pleasing Success

The last of the four Star Courses was held last evening in the Y. M. C. A., before an excellent audience, and equally came up to the standard set by the previous attractions. The artists last evening, were Miss Gwladys Jones, Mr. Marley Bloeris and Miss Florence Galbraith, and it is the general opinion of the audience that seldom has a better trio appeared in the city. Miss Jones rendered a number of soprano solos, which were very much appreciated, and warmly applauded. Mr. Bloeris, who has a splendid baritone voice, was induced to answer to several encores.

Miss Galbraith as an elocutionist, was excellent. Her inimitable manner in the rendition of her dramatic, humorous and patriotic readings, and her portrayal of various characters was so realistic that encores were generally demanded of her. The Belleville Star Course this year has been a decided success. The four attractions, the last of which took place last evening, have all been of high order, reflecting great credit on the local Star Course promoters.

KINGSTON COUNCIL TO HELP PRODUCTION

At a meeting of the City Council of Kingston on Monday evening, the following resolution was unanimously adopted: "That no pavements would be laid this year; that no unnecessary work would be undertaken; that the Council help in every way the cause of increased production of foodstuffs, and that advertisements be inserted in the newspapers calling upon all owners of vacant property to notify the mayor or city clerk if they would be willing to give the use of their lots for the planting of vegetables."

There is evidently an object lesson which all cities, including Belleville, might follow with profit.

LIEUT. E. O. WALLACE KILLED IN ENGLAND

Was Connected With Flying Corps When an Accident Occurred Causing Death

Another well known and popular Belleviteian has sacrificed his life for King and Country and in consequence the inmates of a home are in sorrow over the loss of a beloved one.

Yesterday Mr. and Mrs. Robert Wallace, residing at 132 South John St., received the following cablegram:

London, March 27, 1917.

A. A. A. Regret to inform you, Lieut. Ernest E. D. Wallace killed in aeroplane accident this morning. A.A.A.

Aeronautics 40 Reserve Squad. B. F.C. at Oxford.

The victim of the unfortunate accident was one of Belleville's most popular young men and was widely known throughout the city and vicinity. He was born in this city 29 years ago and virtually all his life was spent here. After passing through the public school he graduated from the High School with honors. In early life he evidenced a military spirit and for four or five years was connected with the 15th Regiment, A. L. I. of this city. Lieut. Wallace was for some time in the local office of the Bell Telephone Company and owing to his business capabilities succeeded in obtaining promotion and at the outbreak of the war was Manager of the Bell Telephone Company's office at Port Perry. He immediately resigned his position and took out a commission and enlisted in the 46th Battalion at Port Hope and was transferred to the 34th Battalion. He went overseas with the 2nd contingent and was transferred to the 1st Canadian Motor Machine Gun Brigade, and was in the trenches with that unit for a period of thirteen months. Desirous of joining the flying corps he was allowed to do so and had been in training in England and Scotland and was on the last part of his course when the accident occurred, the particulars of which have not yet been learned.

Lieut. Wallace was connected with a patriotic family. Two brothers of deceased are at present in France, Fred being with the artillery and Sergt. Chas. Wallace is connected with the Army Service Corps. A third brother Capt. Harry L. is connected with the 254th Battalion of Toronto. One sister Miss Wallace of curnive, namely Frank D. of North Bay and H. B. of Winnipeg. A cousin of deceased, Flight Lieut. Alcock, also Earle of Picton, was killed when the machine he was on fell to the ground.

The heartfelt sympathy of all citizens will be extended to Mr. and Mrs. Wallace and the members of the family, who have been called upon to mourn the loss of a faithful son and loving brother.

BETTER METHODS OF CULTIVATION.

Increased farm production must come largely by shortening labor, and attended this year by better methods of cultivation, rather than by increased acreage. Such is the decision of the sub-committee of the Organization of Resources Committee which has been holding sessions in Toronto recently. Some of the definite suggestions submitted are: that farmers double their poultry flocks, sow only large plump seed and raise to maturity every foal, male calf, pig and lamb. As a remedy for the shortage of labor it is suggested that high school boys be induced to undertake farm work; and that men in other lines of life, give a week, or a month, or a year to assist farmers with their work.

The members of this sub-committee are authors of the foregoing wisdom are as follows: W. J. Maney, Toronto, chairman; Dr. G. C. Creelman, Guelph; W. J. Bell, Sudbury; Fred Cook, Ottawa; G. A. Gillespie, Peterboro; Walter Rolls, Hamilton; Norman Sullivan, W. E. Rundle, Dr. W. A. Riddell, Dr. Abbott, Toronto; and Arthur Little, London.

GIRLS FOR FARMS

Miss Harvey, in charge of the trades and labor branch of the department of Public Works, Toronto, who for some time has been working on the arrangements to place university girls on the fruit farms of Niagara district, has succeeded in arranging the placing of between 200 and 500 girls in a group at different points.

One group, the largest, consists of 75 girls, who are to be stationed near Hamilton. The Y.W.C.A. has made registrations for certain buildings to be used as hostels, so that girls will have proper and safe accommodations. Letters from high school principals all over the province indicate that a hearty response is being made for boy labor on the farms. Some principal have been opposed to it, as they claimed it interferes with the examinations and the whole winter's work was knocked out.

WORLD'S BIGGEST POLICY

In a very real sense this is the age of Big Business and nowhere has it been shown to a greater extent than in the writing of a $250,000,000 on the life of Mr. J. P. Morgan. This is the largest policy ever written, and thus it provides a new incentive to the ambitious agent and also sets a new standard among business men.

In the olden days an insurance agent was looked upon more or less of a nuisance and when ever tolerated was regarded as a sort of necessary evil. In the last decade or two big business men have grown to look upon insurance as a business asset and the status of the poor solicitor has risen accordingly. Today many of the largest and shrewdest business men on the continent insure their lives for a further safeguard for their business. The passing of a man who has been the centre of a great organization is often the cause of failure, so to guard against that they insure their lives in favor of their business associates. The loss of their personality is offset in a measure by the added capital which comes into the business.

J. P. Morgan is a shrewd business man and knows values as well as any man on the continent, and when he "signed along the dotted line," under the gentle persuasion of Mr. Harold Phelps, of the New York Life, he realized that he was getting good value for the premiums he expected to pay.

BRITISH MUNITIONS OUTPUT

"In England, something like 3,000,000 people, of whom more than a million are women, are employed in munition-making," says Sydney Brooks, in the March number of Everybody's Service magazine. "We are now turning out in eight days as much 18-pounder ammunition, in six days as much field howitzer ammunition, in a week as many medium-sized shells, and in four days as many heavy shells as we were turning out in the whole of the first year of the war. The enormous British armies overseas up to last August—and it may be the same today—had been equipped with rifles and machine guns solely from domestic sources. Every month we are manufacturing twice as many heavy guns as the entire army possessed in May, 1915, the production having multiplied sixfold in the past year and being still rapidly on the increase. For every machine gun we were making twenty months ago we now make 17; for every 18-pounder we now make 65; for every pound of high explosives we now make 60; for every bomb we now make 40."

THE VALUE OF OLD TUBS

A United States steamship company purchased some vessels eighteen months ago at a cost of about $1,250,000. One of the lot had been in service for twenty years and it was planned to discard it as soon as possible and to replace it with a larger, up-to-date boat. This vessel was carried on the books of the purchaser at $30,000, and because of the shortage of the ocean tonnage as put back into service to earn its keep. It has since turned into the owners profits amounting to more than $800,000, and it has recently been sold to another line for $750,000. It is not worth anything like that sum except under the extraordinary conditions which now prevail, but it will be put into the Atlantic trade carrying munitions, and if lucky enough to survive a few round trips will repay the new owners many times the exorbitant price paid. On this basis the earning possibilities of the tonnage tied up in New York harbor almost stagger the imagination.

SPEEDING UP SHIPBUILDING

It is said that British interests have placed orders with American yards for a total of thirty-two vessels, of which seventeen are for the Cunard line. Companies which had boats on the stocks when the demand for ships began to fill up the builders' books have been offered very large premiums on their unfinished vessels. In the case of one steamship line which had two ships well along, an offer was made to take them over at $2,000,000 for their cost. All of the American yards are being pushed to their utmost and some of them are now working two or three shifts for the first time in their history.

While the country is waiting for word from President Wilson, Theodore Roosevelt has gone South to bust devil fish.

STOMACH WAS DERANGED BY CHRONIC CONSTIPATION

Got So Bad That Hospital Treatment Was Resorted to—Cure Finally Effected by Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills

EGANVILLE, Ont., Mar. 28—In this letter is well described the important place by Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills in many thousands of homes where their value as a regulator of the vital organs is known and appreciated.

Constipation of the bowels is usually accompanied by sluggish liver action, and sooner or later by derangements of the kidneys. The digestive system is entirely upset and pains and aches result from the consequent poisoning of the system. On this account it may be said that constipation is the cause of the great majority of human ills and by keeping the bowels regular by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills these many ailments are avoided.

Mr. D. J. Maney Eganville Ont. (R. R. No. 1), writes:

"Allow me to tell you what Dr. Chase's Kidney Liver Pills have done for me and mine. For years I was troubled with constipation and stomach trouble—had tried dozens of remedies, and even went to the hospital to get built up at different times. The terrible constipation caused the stomach trouble. One day a friend asked me why I didn't try Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. I immediately purchased a 25c. box, took it home, and it gave me such grand relief that I went back and got six more. I can truthfully say that after I had finished using them I was completely cured. If I ever felt an ache coming on, one or two would always fix me up all right again. My boys never think of going away from home without having some of them in their suit case, in case of a sudden attack of sickness. If any person wishes to write me, I will gladly answer them."

Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, one pill a dose, 25c a box, 2 for $1.00, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

The programme of the Epworth League last Tuesday evening took the form of a debate on the following subject, resolved "That a High School education should be made compulsory, the Government to defray the expenses. The papers given by the four contestants showed a great deal of thought and preparation and the points were so evenly divided that the judges had a very serious time in coming to a decision. However, they decided in favor of the negative and the Leader Mr. Stanley Prest immediately moved a hearty clap for his opponent, Mr. Arthur Wood in which all responded.

Speeches were made by some of the prominent men present some patriotic readings were given and also some patriotic music. After the singing of the National Anthem" all repaired to the Orange Hall where a lunch was provided. The sum of $17 was realized.

Miss Anne Rollins has returned to her home after spending several weeks with friends at Cooper and Tweed.

Mrs. A. B. Reid is visiting Mrs. John Wallace of Crookston.

Miss Maggie Prest spent a few days of last week with Miss Jessie Rollins.

Our heartfelt sympathy is extended to Mrs. Alex. Reid and family in the death of her only son, Sergt. Adam Haggerty, who was killed in action in France.

On Wednesday morning last, Miss Elizabeth Prest died at the family residence, Ivanhoe, in the sixty-seventh year of her age. Deceased was a daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. John Prest and the greater part of her life was spent here excepting a few years spent in Crookston, where she conducted a store and boarding house, and one year in Manitoba, with her brother, John. Miss Prest has been ailing for the past year. She became worse about two months ago and has since gradually declined until the end came. The funeral service was conducted by the Rev. Grundy at the Holiness Movement Church last Friday afternoon. Interment taking place in White Lake Cemetery. The pall bearers were Messrs Robt. Stomach Troubles Due To Acidity

So Says New York Physician

So-called stomach troubles, such as indigestion, wind, stomach-ache and inability to retain food, are in probably nine cases out of ten simply evidence that fermentation is taking place in the food contents of the stomach causing the formation of gas and acids. Wind distends the stomach and causes that full, oppressive feeling sometimes known as heartburn, while the acid irritates and inflames the delicate lining of the stomach. The trouble lies entirely in the excessive secretion of acid and the fermentation of food. Such Fermolve harmful consequences if not corrected. To stop or prevent fermentation of food contents of the stomach and to neutralize the acid, and render it bland and harmless, a teaspoonful of bisurated magnesia, perhaps the best and most effective corrector of acid stomach known, should be taken in a quarter glass of hot or cold water immediately after eating, or whenever wind or acidity is felt. This stops the fermentation, and neutralizes the acidity in a few moments. Fermentation, wind and acidity are unnecessary. Stop or prevent them by the use of a proper antacid, such as bisurated magnesia ,which can be obtained from any druggist and thus enable the stomach to do its work properly without being hindered by gas and excessive acids.

AUSTRALIAN ELECTIONS

Success of Nationalist Party in N. S. W. Good Augury for Hughes

SYDNEY, Australia, March 27—Commenting on the victory of the Nationalists and Labor in the South Wales state elections, where the issue was much the same as it is in the Federal elections, the Sydney Daily Telegraph says that Premier Holman, who is a supporter of Federal Premier Hughes, has now the first opportunity in his experience to use his gifts of statesmanship, not for one class, but for the whole community, for he is now the unfettered leader of an unfettered party. "The result," adds the Telegraph, "ensures sane and stable government for at least three years."

The Sydney Morning Herald regards the result as a victory for ordered and progressive movement. It points out that industrial centres such as Newcastle and Wickham were loyal to the Nationalists, while the party farming constituencies, which had previously been successfully wooed by labor, refused to take account to accept the dictation of extremists.

TAKE COUNT OF PROPERTY

Canada Preparing for the Day of Reckoning—Sir Thos. White Acts

OTTAWA, March 27—An inventory is to be made in Canada of all enemy property held in the Dominion, and of all Canadian property held in enemy countries. The information, which will be collected with similar information secured in other parts of the Empire, is required in connection with the balance of accounts which may later have to be struck on the day of reckoning comes for the enemy. Sir Thomas White has been appointed Public Custodian of Enemy Property in Canada, and circular letters are being sent to him to banks, financial institutions, etc., asking for statements under the following four heads:

(1) Property, real or personal, in Canadian territory belonging to enemy subjects.

(2) Debts, including bank deposits and bank balances, due to or held on behalf of enemy residents resident or carrying on business in enemy territory, or due to or held on behalf of enemy subjects resident in Canada.

(3) Property, real or personal, in enemy territory belonging to British subjects resident or carrying on business in Canada.

(4) Claims of British subjects resident or carrying on business in Canada against enemy Governments.

The law requires the return of such information. Forms will be provided whereon precise statements may be made. The information will be transmitted to the Public Trustee in England.

It is already known that there are balances in Canadian banks credited to men who had no time to withdraw them when the call came from the Fatherland. There are also dividends due to German, Austrian and other stockholders from Canadian companies, etc., together with rents from properties. These and other accounts will be placed to the credit of the Finance Minister until the balancing time comes.

Social & Personal

DEAD WITH RIFLE BY SIDE

Body of Evan Evans Found in the Basement of Rooming House

TORONTO, March 26.—With a bullet wound in his head and a 22 calibre rifle lying by his side, the body of Evan Evans, aged 35, was found in the basement of his rooming house at 29½ Ann street this morning. The discovery was made by his landlady, who, missing Evans, searched the house and finally found the body in the basement. The police were notified and the remains were removed to the morgue.

"Movies" in the Schools.

The sum of $1,000 was recently voted in Toronto for the purpose of purchasing the moving-picture apparatus to be used in the schools for the demonstration of various subjects. It was pointed out that the "movies" could be used to illustrate mining in British Columbia, farming in the West, and lumbering in the north country. Production in various factories could also be shown. The machines will cost about $125 each, while each picture would cost about $500. Two pictures could be used in different schools, the film being passed around from school to school.

There is a Tide

in the affairs of men which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune!

This truism from Shakespeare was never so true as in these twentieth century days of unexcelled prosperity in business and industry.

This prosperity, however, will not continue indefinitely, and, if you are wise, you will not delay in preparing for the inevitable "rainy days" to come.

NEWRAY
as an investment

is the most attractive issue in the Porcupine list to-day. It is just commencing to come into its own, and the indications are that the company will join the list of big producing mines within the next few months.

Newray shares are selling to-day in the open market at $1.32, which, in consideration of the low capitalization of the company, and the enormous acreage of the property, is far below their intrinsic merit.

We confidently believe Newray is now on the way to $2.00 a share, and recommend the immediate purchase of the stock for big profits.

A SPECIAL WAR TAX.

Receipts from the special war taxation, enacted shortly after the outbreak of war, have so far greatly exceeded expectations. Under the Special War Taxation Act the Canadian banking institutions are obliged to contribute one million dollars annually to the country's revenue, and loan, trust and insurance companies are also called on for substantial amounts. Other special levies such as the postal war tax stamp tax on drafts and cheques and the tax on railway tickets have also produced large sums for the public treasury.

The Excess Profits Tax has proven particularly successful and returns from this source have been much beyond what Sir Thomas White first estimated. When he imposed this tax the Finance Minister estimated it would produce about thirty-five million dollars during the full period of three years over which it extends—an average of twelve million dollars yearly. The tax being retroactive, this year's taxation was collected upon the actual profits during the corresponding roughly to the first year of the war. At that time business was very much depressed and dislocated. Such normal business conditions not prevailing, it is estimated that the tax will produce for this first year period at least fourteen million dollars, and possibly fifteen million dollars. The first two years of the taxation will thus produce an amount equal to what it was estimated would be secured in the three years. The third year, 1917, is expected to produce another twenty-five million dollars. The final results will thus be almost double the original estimate.

THE THIRD CALL.

Sir Thomas White, Canada's farsighted financier, has made another splendid success in launching his third domestic war loan. After devoting a great deal of time to details, and favoring the smaller purchasers of bonds, it is a pleasure to note the liberal overplus in response to his call.

The first domestic war loan was floated in November, 1915. The first order-in-council was for $50,000,000 five per cent. bonds maturing December 1, 1925, at 97½. On the closing of the subscription list on November 30 the Department of Finance found that from 23,862 individual subscribers a sum aggregating $78,729,500 had been offered. This amount taken with the amounts subscribed by the various banks totalled over one hundred million dollars. The amount of the issue was raised to one hundred millions, the subscriptions of the banks being cut down accordingly.

The second war loan was issued in September, 1916, very much on the same lines as the previous war loan and was as great a success. It carried five per cent. interest for fifteen years and was issued at the price of 97½. The prospectus was issued on September 15, and on the closing of the list it was announced that from 34,326 subscribers the Department had offerings of $207,444,800.

In view of the present issue some details regarding the first two loans will be of interest. The Finance Department has no statistics showing how many subscribers were of each sized bond, but it has figures showing how many of each sized bond were issued. In the case of the first loan there were issued 131,345 bonds to the 23,862 subscribers. The difference in the figures is explained that many subscribers took say three one hundred dollar bonds, etc. In the case of the second loan there were applications made for no less than 247,507 bonds. Owing to the above-subscribed condition and the fact that the size of the loan was not increased the allotment had to be cut down and there were issued 140,349 bonds. An examination of the figures show that contrary to the general impression the thousand dollar bonds and not the cheaper one hundred dollar or five hundred dollar bonds were the most popular. In both loans half the total number of bonds issued were for the thousand dollar variety. In the case of the first loan there was issued 63,413 thousand dollar bonds out of 131,345. In the second loan there were applications for 129,108 thousand dollar bonds out of 247,507 applied for and there were issued 69,384 thousand dollar bonds.

The bonds issued for the 1915 loan were as follows:

Hundred Dollar Bonds	43,870
Five Hundred Dollar Bonds	20,280
Thousand Dollar Bonds	63,413
Five Thousand Dollar Bonds	3,581
Ten Thousand Dollar Bonds	365
Hundred Thousand Dollar Bonds	17
Loans applied for	Loans issued
Hundred Dollar Bonds 78,186	29,126
Five Hundred Dollar Bonds 36,736	15,453
Thousand Dollar Bonds 129,108	69,384
Five Thousand Dollar Bonds 2,138	1,506
Ten Thousand Dollar Bonds 1,167	551
Hundred Thousand Dollar Bonds 61	30

In addition to the war loans there have been sold by the Department of Finance 1,297 five per cent. Dominion of Canada certificates worth $8,455,000. Of the war savings certificates there were sold up to March 3rd, 38,046 certificates through the Finance Department and 7,320 through the Post Office. By denominations they were as follows:

$25 Certificates	9,203
$50 Certificates	4,367
$100 Certificates	33,796

A large, oppressive Western man
Entered a Standard Bar.
His back was like a big tonneau,
Broad as a trolley car.
I warrant that his boots were Tens,
He had a mighty chest.
I must have taken yards of stuff
To make his fancy vest.

His jaw was massive, square and strong,
Undoubtedly his nose
Was modelled on the Roman plan
Like Tullius Cicero's.
His eyes were keenly terrible.
His well-shorn beard was blue,
I thought: "If he demands a drink
What will the Barkeep do?"

He slowly swaggered to the Bar,
Pushed back his big slouch hat,
Put one great foot upon the rail,
And trustlessly spat.
Then, he remarked—in tenor tones
Of thunder and of hail—
"I hope you can provide me with A flavor of buttermilk."

—Prince of Wales Lives

Busy Life of a Soldier
At the Front in France

BEING "at the front" is not, as many people think, just one big joy-ride for the Prince of Wales. For, on a recent day, a Canadian correspondent met an officer, who for six months had come daily in contact with the heir to the throne, and who gave an interesting sidelight upon the character of the King's eldest son.

"The Prince is a very decent chap," quoth the officer, a sturdy, democratic, independent Scot. "There's no swank or nonsense about him. He was with my department at the front for six months. The Prince had a good job on hand, and he went at it knuckled to, learned the details, and did his work very well. It was just the making of the Prince coming to us.

"You know, the Prince had always been very anxious to get over to the front or somewhere, from the very beginning. So after he had completed his cadet course, the King, whom he had been worrying, told him he had better go and see Kitchener about it. Well, the young chap took about fifteen of the best, that he was quite prepared to take his chances of being wounded or killed. "All right, your Royal Highness," Kitchener had answered, 'you may go, and good luck to you.' Now, I don't mind if you are wounded, or even killed, it does not matter to anyone who goes to the front must take, but for heaven's sake don't let the Germans capture you,' said they, for I love the Prince hate and loathe the Germans.

"When the Prince first arrived at the front he was never allowed to forget that the watchful eye of his personal escort, a certain estimable but fussy staff-major, who felt efforts for his comfort and safety as his young protege irritated everyone, not even excepting the personages in whose honor he was suspended. The Prince chafed under this "personally conducted" existence and yearned for some real work.

Finally the royal "sub" requested a transfer. "Our general replied that he would not, as there was his Royal Highness," continued the lieutenant, "but on condition that he be leave the major behind. We were fortunate to have that fussy gentleman about. The Prince would just have fun some on his own hook, take a regular job and go about his work unattended, like any other young man in the officer corps, and quite unknown to the rest of us. The Prince agreed, and the general put him to work looking after the transmitting wireless for the entire Corps.

"The morning I got for countersignature, an order for ammunition signed 'Edward,' second lieutenant,' I couldn't understand it, and I wondered who this new officer was, and how he meant by signing only his Christian name. When I refused to sign it and sent it to the general, the general just laughed, and nodded me through to the end of the room to where a youth in khaki was seated at a desk checking off what looked like long columns remaining idle. 'There is Edward; didn't you know that the Prince of Wales is now with us?'

"But at six o'clock every morning and often coming into the Section Captain's room for instructions before the officer had crawled out from his blankets, the Prince had no cosy nook.

"Although most informal in most ways" he stated the narrator, "the Prince is, of course, hedged about with considerable state. His Royal Highnessing' expected from his officers considerable deference, and he is required to salute his subordinates but on the other hand, although I have seen him shake hands with men, he, in fact, I only saw him do so once, never offers or during his entire visit. Shaking hands is left entirely to royalty, whatever their personal inclinations, are considered to have only on certain occasions and not promiscuously. I was never allowed to introduce anyone to the Prince of Wales before leading. If he wished to know anyone, he merely asked for the name of officer!' That was the introduction, and the officer, when the Prince was with us, the Prince called him by name."

Marking Lucky Days.

In the early days of chalk after his open for luck as they poured into the country by trenches, the Irish colonel was but one of many who marked which dates back to the ancient days of Thessaly and Rome, the custom originated of marking lucky days with a white stone and unlucky with a black one. In his early youth Rome adopted this custom, and although many days being indigenous, was chiefly known in its pure Creta implies, as an import from Crete, it was generally used for the marking of lucky and unfortunate days. Hesiod advises us was done with chalk for good and really for bad luck.

Economy is Cost Divided by Time

The reason why the Studebaker Four is the most economical four is because of the extra quality, the extra safety, the extra power, the extra low upkeep.

Extra safety means the extra feature of strength which takes the strain of the shock which wrecks the small cheap car.

Extra power means smooth, vibrationless operation, not the jarring jerking, racking strains of over exerted power.

Extra low upkeep is the sum of the advantages mentioned above, and it is the sum of economy, and that is why Studebaker believes it is better to put a little more money and a great deal more quality in manufacturing a car like the Series 18 at $1375, and at the same time give you genuine leather upholstery and the same quality of fittings and equipment that you find in cars costing more than twice as much as the Studebaker Four.

We repeat that the Studebaker Series 18 is the most economical four in the world.

Come in and ask for demonstration.

Justice Righted

How Abraham Lincoln Reversed the Decision of a Court Martial.

By F. A. MITCHEL

President Lincoln is admired and respected for his handling of the ship of state during that four years' storm of war when he so often kept her from going on the rocks. To this admiration and respect is added an affection begotten of his tender heart, especially as evinced in his sympathy for those unfortunates who were for one cause or another condemned to die.

The following is one of those many instances wherein Mr. Lincoln interfered to save the life of a deserter, and happily in this case it was he and not a court martial who did justice to the delinquent. The family name of the parties concerned in the narrative is not at hand, therefore for convenience an assumed name will be used. But the story is none the less an actual happening, nothing having been added or taken away.

Shortly before the stirring days of 1861 John Atwater and his wife were living happily together, interested in the education of their two sons, John and Arthur. The boys had arrived at that age when their mother needed a father's guidance—that is, they were in their teens—and the parents were looking forward for them to an honorable career. Then the father died, leaving his widow to shoulder all the responsibility for the completion of their education and giving them a start in life. They resided in the east.

It seemed impossible under the circumstances to keep the family together. An uncle in Missouri offered to take one of the boys and do what he could to pave the way for him to make a living. It was deemed best to accept this offer, and the older son was sent to Missouri. Another uncle, a brother of Mrs. Atwater, offered to take the younger son and release his mother of the responsibility of finding employment for him. It was a sad parting between the mother and her two boys, especially since one of them was to go so far away. But this plucky woman, considering the interest of her sons rather than her own desire to live them with her, consented to the separation.

This dividing of the family turned out very unfortunately. The war between the states came on not long after John Atwater reached his new home. Missouri was a slave state and had largely been settled by southern people. The sympathies of the inhabitants were largely with the south, and a vigorous attempt was made to hold the state to the Confederacy. Those who were in favor of the north were either compelled to leave for federal territory or take sides with the Confederates. This resulted in Atwater's being forced, against his inclinations, into the Confederate ranks.

There was a big fight between Federals and Confederates, the one endeavoring to carry the state out of the Union, the other to retain possession of it. Both sides raised troops, and a number of battles were fought, resulting finally in victory for the Unionists, which was to have been expected, for Missouri is geographically considered a northern state. In one of the battles John Atwater was severely wounded and was taken to the home of his uncle. His mother, being informed of the circumstance, went to him and nursed him back to health and strength. Mrs. Atwater's sympathies being with the north, she used her influence to persuade him to go to her brother in Boston, with whom Arthur had been before joining the northern army. In this she succeeded.

These events were too much for a delicate woman, and Mrs. Atwater's health broke down under them. Suffering from a fever, she was delirious. During this delirium she was constantly calling upon her younger son, Arthur, to come to her.

Arthur was at that time serving with his regiment in the Federal army at the front. Mrs. Atwater's neighbors, pitying the poor woman's distress and thinking that her life might depend upon seeing her son, sent word to him to come to her at once.

When the message reached Arthur he applied to his captain for leave to go.

"Leave of absence!" sneered the captain. "You ask for leave of absence of the enemy and on the eve of a battle! What you want is to skulk away and avoid a fight."

Stung to quick, the boy replied:

"Here is a letter saying that my mother is dying and calling on me to come to her."

"Your mother is a scheming rebel and is trying to get you away from the post of duty."

"You lie!"

"You gave me the lie! That's mutiny. I'll attend to your case. Go to your quarters!"

The captain reported that Private Atwater had been insolent to him, and Arthur knew that he would be tried for mutiny. Night came on, and while under arrest he thought of his dying mother, who was calling on him to come to her. The strain was more than he could bear. Stealing out, he made his way through the camp without attracting attention and, dodging the pickets, was making for home when a foraging party coming with supplies met him and took him back to camp.

What course the boy had been obliged to take to avoid being arrested by Federal troops does not appear, but the report of the officer in charge of the foraging party was that he was heading for the Confederate lines. The fact that he had had a brother in the Confederate army also told against him. He was tried by court martial for desertion and sentenced to be shot.

One morning while Mr. Lincoln was talking with a visitor at the White House an attendant entered and handed the president a card. A pained expression crossed Mr. Lincoln's face as he recognized the name of Mrs. Atwater. The papers in the case of her son's court martial had been forwarded to him, and his signature was necessary before the death sentence could be carried out. The visitor offered to give way to the newcomer, but Mr. Lincoln signed him to remain where he was, at the same time giving an order that the woman was to be admitted.

Presently the door was opened, and a pale faced woman entered.

"My son has been condemned to die," she said, "and will be executed unless you will save him."

"What is he charged with, madam?" asked Lincoln.

"Was he not regularly tried by court martial?"

"Yes, but"—

"And was he not arrested pending trial on the Confederate lines?"

"Yes, but there is another side to the story."

I have heard the story, and I am sorry to say to you that I cannot possibly interfere with the sentence of the court."

Mr. Lincoln turned away from the woman, but was recalled to her by the sound of a falling body. She had fainted.

The president hastened to her, raised her and called an attendant. Together they worked, and after till she was restored to consciousness.

At the time the secretary of war, Mr. Stanton, and the generals in the field were complaining bitterly of Mr. Lincoln's interference with their efforts to maintain discipline by pardoning those who were sentenced, especially for desertion. Mr. Stanton declared that he had moved him to put a curb on his sympathies and refrain from interference. Papers in the case of Arthur Atwater had passed through the war department, and Mr. Stanton had forestalled any action on the part of Mr. Lincoln in the doomed man's favor.

When the woman had recovered she begged so hard that the president would hear her side of the story that he had by consented to do so. "If you really wish to come here for justice," he said, sitting down beside her, "you shall have it, and it will make no happy to give it. But if you merely wish to work on my sympathies in order to blind me to my duty you will make me miserable without making yourself less miserable."

"God bless you, Mr. President!" was the reply. "I only ask that you will hear what I have to say, and if you can be convinced my story is true that you will interpose in my son's behalf."

The widow then told Mr. Lincoln the story as it has been told here. When she had finished Mr. Lincoln said to her:

"You may go now, madam, with a good heart. I promise you that proceedings shall be stayed and that you shall have an opportunity to prove the truth of your statement. If you do so you have nothing to fear."

The president repressed the expression of gratitude of the woman he had made happy, interrupting her to say that he was only doing his duty, and she went out weeping tears of relief and joy.

Arthur Atwater was preparing himself to meet death when a telegram was received by him that his executioner had been appointed by the president for an investigation of his case. His mother made good her statement, and he was released on duty. His life was saved by the appeal of his mother to one who showed a kindly nature with a sense of justice.

There is no record at hand of what Arthur Atwater did after that. It was announced to him, that a stay had been granted in the case of Private Arthur Atwater. It is quite likely, however, that he frowned and muttered, "Another case of children's tenderness on the part of the president."

There is a sequel to the story which gives it a fitting ending. When the truth came out that the officer to whom Arthur had applied for leave had in face of the evidence at hand accused the boy of cowardice and had called his mother a scheming rebel, the captain was taken to task by his superiors, who preferred charges against him. While the case was pending the captain got on a spree and while drunk was thrown into the lake and killed.

If Mr. Lincoln's tender heartedness was a weakness it was the kind rather of a weakness that his lieutenants in the big war attributed to him. It was not the kind of a weakness that led him to do an injustice for fear of displeasing some one. Mr. Lincoln himself said:

"I do not mind crossing or even defying the whole world when I can do so as a champion for the wronged. In that case I feel as if I had the strength of a giant. No, my cowardice comes in when I allow my sense of humanity to obscure my sense of duty. Then I am a veritable coward and only hold myself together by the thought that such will be forgiven a man in doubt who errs on the side of mercy."

And yet with all this tender heartedness and his modesty in giving his orders Mr. Lincoln held the rudder of the ship of state in his own hand for the whole period of his incumbency.

At last we know that winter is here —the annual announcement that the crop of peaches has been killed by the hard winter, has been made.

The fact that a large number of "peaches" are concerned as ministers, plant workers, hand in overhands in railway shops, gives color to the story.

A CLOUDLESS MOON.

Surface of the Pale Satellite Never Obscured by Mists.

The first suspicion of the airless and waterless condition of the moon seems to have been awakened by the fact that no clouds were ever seen hiding the permanent lunar features. Imagine yourself looking at the earth from the distance of the moon. It is evident that the outlines of continents and oceans would often be more or less completely obscured when great storm clouds were drifting over them. Not the slightest indication of the presence of similar expanses of condensed watery vapor floating over the moon were ever detected.

The invention of the spectroscope furnished another proof of the practically airless condition of the moon. An atmosphere, especially if it contains watery vapor, abstracts from the rays of light passing through it certain portions of the light, whose absence is easily detected by the spectroscope.

But when the sunlight reflected from the moon's surface is thus examined it shows no evidence of having passed through an atmosphere like ours. This shows not only that the moon has no perceptible atmosphere, but also that it contains no liquid water, because if there were water on the moon it would evaporate and form vapor, which would act on the light.

It was long supposed that the air and water which the moon may once have contained had disappeared by absorption into its rocks, but another modern discovery in physics has made it probable, if not certain, that the moon's original atmosphere and as well as its supply of water, flew away from it because the moon had not sufficiently powerful grip to hold them.

Its force of gravity, which is only about one-sixth as great as that of the earth, was too feeble to retain such lively and rebellious subjects as the molecules of air and watery vapor.

These molecules, we now know, are in continual vibration, and their speed of vibration varies at a maximum from more than seven miles a second for hydrogen, and two and a half miles a second for watery vapor, to more than a mile and a half a second for carbonic dioxide.

By a way found by calculation based on the laws of gravitation that part of the moon's air away from the moons' surface with a velocity of a mile and a half a second would escape, never to come back.

In the case of the earth, this critical velocity, as it is called, amounts to nearly seven miles a second, so that the earth can easily hold an atmosphere which would as easily fly from the moon.

Notwithstanding all this, it should be said that there may still be on the moon the remains of an atmosphere, say a thousand times rarer than ours, and, in some places, even in a solidly frozen state. But these would not seem to furnish life to any of the forms with which we are familiar.

NOTICE TO SICK WOMEN

Positive Proof That Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Relieves Suffering.

Bridgeton, N.J.—"I cannot speak too highly of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for inflammation and other weaknesses. I was very irregular and would have terrible pains so that I could hardly take a step. Sometimes I would be so miserable that I could not sweep a room. I doctored part of the time but felt no change. I later took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and soon felt a change for the better. I took it until I was in good healthy condition. I recommend the Pinkham remedies to all women as I have used them with such good results."—Mrs. MILFORD T. CUMMINGS, 322 Harmony St., Penn's Grove, N. J.

Such testimony should be accepted by all women as convincing evidence of the excellence of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as a remedy for the distressing ills of women such as displacements, inflammation, ulceration, backache, painful periods, nervousness and kindred ailments.

The HOWLAND ESTATE

How the Owner Acquired a Piece of Property Needed to Complete It

By F. A. MITCHEL

The shortest day in the year had been passed, and the sun started on her northward journey. Winslow Howland had come into the enormous fortune that had been accumulating for him for years, and he was laying his plans for his future. He took no thought as to a career. His mind was bent upon how he should enjoy life. His city residence was an accomplished fact. His father had made it as elaborate and beautiful and luxurious as could be desired. But no country place had been prepared for him, and this was the problem that occupied his mind when the sun started back to warm the earth and bring forth a new season.

For two months Howland devoted himself to the house he would build in the country. Then in the early spring he started on a tour to find a location. He preferred his country place should be within a short distance of his city home. There was one district and one alone to the northwest where a succession of hills formed beautiful views. Howland looked over this region and selected an eminence on which he decided to build his house.

He did not own this site nor any of the surrounding acres which he intended should form his estate. He was so rich that he believed he could buy any property he wished. But he had enough business sense to realize that it would be unwise to let the owners know of his intention. While he was ready to pay any price he did not care to pay three or four times the intrinsic value of the property purchased.

Howland determined to buy up the land he wanted himself, not that he wished to save the expense of having it done by an agent, but he thought the diplomacy required would interest him. He would not enter the field as the multimillionaire Howland, but as an unknown person of limited means. He managed the matter very well. He first bought a few acres at the base of the eminence on which he would build, through which ran a brook, and gave out that he intended to dam the stream for water power to run a glue factory. This enabled him to purchase the site above at a fair price, for a glue factory has not an agreeable odor and the value of the hill would be greatly reduced.

Having made this beginning, Howland, who by this time had come to be known as Mr. Jernegan and wore the plain clothes of a small manufacturer, met with excellent success in picking up all the different properties that he wished, except a few acres which would lie within the very heart of the estate. He was irritated to learn that this bit of ground had changed hands since he began to make his purchases. The owner, a small farmer, had sold his land for double its value to some one living in the city. An examination of the county records revealed the fact that the purchaser was one Samuel Jones. Howland at once started an employee on a hunt for Mr. Jones and for information as to what he intended to do with the land, if he would sell and, if so, at what price.

The person employed to obtain this information reported that he had been unable to find Mr. Jones, and he had heard that the actual owner of the property was a woman, who intended to use it for some kind of agricultural purposes. Howland directed his emissary to learn the name and residence of this person, but after a long search he had not succeeded.

Howland, not doubting that in time he would be able to buy the only property he needed to complete his estate, was on his hilltop one morning directing the marking out the lines of foundation for his residence when he saw wagons carrying building material on to the tract he did not own. This troubled him. Any building put up on the property he would eventually have to pay for. He went to where the unloading was going on and asked questions, but no one there seemed to know what was intended.

During the next three or four months Howland was obliged to look upon a line of glass and iron buildings erected on the property he desired. Every effort to learn who was the owner of the land and was erecting the buildings failed. When the glass houses neared completion the erection of a very pretty bungalow was begun on a site near them, a site which Howland had intended for a purpose of his own. There was also every evidence that the grounds would be laid out in landscape gardening fashion, and the whole, instead of being an eyesore, would be a thing of beauty.

This fact instead of satisfying Howland only irritated him. When the plant was completed he was informed that a woman had moved into the bungalow.

Howland at once sent a person to have a look at the newcomer, find out what he could about her and report. The spy on his return said that the owner of the plant was a graduate of an agricultural college and was preparing to enter upon the cultivation of roses. The lady was about twenty-two years old.

Howland, still deeming it unwise to treat with the party direct, sent for a friend, George Winslow, who had made agriculture a profession, and commissioned him to buy the rose plant ostensibly for himself. Winslow was told to endeavor to persuade the owner to put a price on the property, which he was to agree to pay, no matter how much the amount.

Winslow visited the bungalow and was told that Miss Edgerton, the rose cultivator, was in the office of the conservatory. He went there and found a very different person from what he had expected. He supposed he would see a young woman of plain exterior, serious, businesslike, and whose costume would be suitable for her work. Miss Edgerton was a very pretty woman, dressed in excellent taste and in fashion. Her assistants, who were all of her own sex, were the only indication that the owner was of the new woman order. She received Mr. Winslow with an engaging smile and listened to an introduction to his subject, which was an account of his preparation for the agricultural profession and his having settled upon the branch of rose culture. From this he explained that he desired to purchase a plant ready for production and ended by suggesting that he would like to buy hers.

Miss Edgerton listened to what he had to say, then told him of her own ambition, adding that her property was not for sale. An effort to get her to put a price on it was not successful.

There was nothing left for Howland to do but tackle the lioness in her den himself. Upon Winslow's report of her personality he resolved first to attempt to win her favor, then adopt such a plan as might seem best to buy her property. As to concealing his identity as a multimillionaire, this was now beyond hope.

Howland had by this time got into his country home. He sent her some strawberries from his garden—great, luscious fellows—with a note of welcome to his new neighbor. He received a note of thanks in return and an invitation to call. The call was made in due time, and the visitor devoted himself to pleasing the hostess. He said not a word about buying her plant. On the contrary, he expressed his satisfaction at having so attractive a property near him. He left with the belief that he had made a very agreeable impression.

It was not in Mr. Howland's plan to

WHY SUFFER WITH BACKACHE, KIDNEYS OR RHEUMATISM NOW?

Letter Tells of Long-looked-for Prescription.

Dear Readers—If I can do any good in the world for others, I wish to do it, and I feel that it is my duty to write about the wonderful results I received from the use of "Anuric." I was suffering from kidney and bladder troubles, scalding urine, backache and rheumatism, and feet and ankles swelled so that at times I could not walk without assistance. Had taken several different kinds of kidney remedies but all failed. I sent for a box of Dr. Pierce's newest discovery, "Anuric," which I received by mail in tablet form. I soon got better and am convinced that this popular new medicine is good. I wish to recommend it to my neighbors and everybody suffering from such troubles.

MRS. M. J. SARGENT.

NOTE: You've all undoubtedly heard of the famous Dr. Pierce and his well-known medicines. Well, this prescription is one that has been successfully used for many years by the physicians and specialists at Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, of Buffalo, N. Y., for kidney complaints, and diseases arising from disorders of the kidneys and bladder, such as backache, weak back, rheumatism, dropsy, congestion of the kidneys, inflammation of the bladder, scalding urine, and urinary troubles.

Up to this time, "Anuric" has not been on sale to the public, but by the persuasion of many patients and the increased demand for this wonderful healing Tablet, Doctor Pierce has finally decided to put it into the stores, or send 10 cents for large trial package or 50 cents for full treatment.

Simply ask for Doctor Pierce's Anuric Tablets. There can be no imitation. Every package of "Anuric" is sure to be Dr. Pierce's. You will find the signature on the package just as you do on Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, the ever-famous friend to ailing women, and Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, proven by years to be the greatest general tonic and reconstructor for any one, besides being the best blood-maker known.

lead Miss Edgerton to believe that she had made a conquest of him. This would rather hinder than facilitate his purchase of her property. He wished merely to secure her good will, hoping that she would accept two or three times its value, or that he might place her in a position of standing in the way of a friend. While he lavished upon her every favor she would accept, he neither looked, spoke nor hinted love. His aim was merely to play the good neighbor.

When he had fully established a kindly entente he one day told her that he wondered that she had not selected a site for her rose plant where she would have had better facilities for transporting her goods to market. To this she expressed herself well satisfied where she was. Later he informed her that he owned a splendid site for her plant nearer the city and on a railroad by which she could ship her goods. If she wanted it he would exchange it for her property, build new conservatories for her and give her triple the value of her present property to boot.

She appeared to take the matter into consideration. But she never came to a decision—at any rate, no decision that she revealed to the would be purchaser of her property.

Disappointed in this move, Howland resolved to try what virtue there would be in lovemaking. He would try to win the property through the heart. If he must wound the heart he would heal the wound with gold, for he had no doubt that if there was enough gold bestowed any such breach would be stopped by it. But Howland had been so beset by women to marry him for his fortune that his ideas on this point had been somewhat warped.

So he began by first looking a little love, then acting a little love and finally speaking a little love. A beginning having been made, he doubled the quantities. Miss Edgerton received his attentions coyly. She was always a trifle behind him in this lovemaking. Nevertheless the affair developed.

Then one day Miss Edgerton told Howland that she was thinking of taking a partner in her business. Howland took fright at once, and when a swell from the city came to the rose factory and hobnobbed with the owner Howland discovered that the factory had become of small importance to him in comparison with the owner. The moment the swell departed Howland went to Miss Edgerton and told her that if she would not marry him he would commit suicide.

That's the end of my story. The two were married, the conservatories were taken down, and the land on which they stood was made a part of Howland park. But there is an explanation as to how all this came about.

Miss Edgerton was one of those brilliant women who from modest beginnings climb to the top of the social ladder. Getting wind of Howland's plan for a large country estate, she bought in the name of another a bit of property he must have. She had never studied agriculture and knew nothing about it. Her object from the first was to marry the immense fortune owned by Howland. How she succeeded has been told in the body of the story. She is now one of the principal leaders of the fashionable world.

Howland was satisfied with the way the matter turned out. Having no fortune to make, he lived for comfort and social prominence. For this his wife was well fitted.

Artificial Feet of Paper Pulp.

In spite of the fact that there is little fiction in the stories of the soaring price of paper, the uses to which this product is being put are constantly increasing in number. We have paper furniture, paper cloth, paper silks and clothes, and even paper legs. Now Dr. Svindt, of Denmark, who is responsible for the artificial leg of papier mache, has brought forward a paper foot, intended to meet the needs of the crippled soldiers. These feet are said to be strong enough to withstand ordinary usage, and they have the added advantage of being cheap. A model of the foot is made of wire gauze, and upon this is poured a specially prepared pulp which entirely fills the interstices of the wire gauze.

The Riversham Heir

He Stood Between a Title and a Rascal

By ETHEL HOLMES

When the Earl of Riversham died his entailed estate fell to his oldest son, Ralph. He left his second son, Martin, a house with the ground on which it stood contiguous to the family manor house. Ralph married late in life a woman near his own age, and it was not supposed his wife would bear him an heir. But, contrary to expectation, a son was born to her several years after her marriage.

Martin Riversham, who had expected to come in for the entailed estate at his brother's death, was greatly disappointed at the birth of an heir to it. There was still one hope for him—the child was delicate, and there was a chance that he would not grow to manhood. If he died there was but slight chances of Lady Riversham having another.

Four years passed, and little Richard Riversham still lived, though he was very delicate. He was kept indoors by his parents, and Martin, who was much interested to know of his condition, seldom caught sight of him, for whenever he was taken out it was in a close carriage.

Martin Riversham was a family black sheep, and after many efforts to get him to leave the dissolute life he led his brother felt constrained to forbid him his house. Martin had seldom occupied the house left him on the property adjoining the estate of his brother, but after little Richard's birth he went there in order to watch the child who alone would stand between him and the title and estate in case of the earl's death. From a window in his house Martin could see the family mansion something like half a mile away, and with a strong glass he could get a pretty fair view of what was going on there.

One day he was walking on the road when he saw a carriage coming which he recognized as belonging to his brother. When it passed him he saw that it contained Lady Riversham, her son Richard and a dog, the dog being a pet of Richard, to whom he was devoted. Lady Riversham shuddered as she passed her brother-in-law, but he did not notice her, his eyes being fixed on the boy, who, he noticed, was very pale and thin.

A few days after this Martin, while watching the manor house, saw evidences of a commotion on the part of its occupants. Servants were running about, and there was every evidence that something dreadful had happened. Martin took it all in till quiet came again; then, laying aside his glass, he said to himself:

"I believe the boy is dead."

That night he noticed lights in the manor house later than usual. Thinking, under cover of the darkness, to learn something by a nearer view, he left his house and, entering his brother's grounds, stole near enough to the house to see anything that could be seen from the outside.

Suddenly a rear door was opened, and by the light within Martin saw a servant, bearing an oblong box, issue from the house, followed by the earl and another servant, the latter carrying a spade and a lantern. The trio made their way to a little patch of ground a short distance from the manor house set apart for a family cemetery. Martin followed as near as he could without being detected and saw the lackey with the spade dig a grave, and he was about to place the box in it when suddenly Lady Riversham appeared on the scene.

There was some conversation between her and the earl, but before Martin could steal close enough to hear what was said the party returned to the house, taking the box with them.

Martin returned to his home, congratulating himself that he had been in the nick of time for what he had seen. An explanation of this night scene was as plain to him as the sun in the heavens. Little Richard had died, and his father, in order to conceal his death, had taken his body to the family cemetery when no one was about to see the interment. A live child was to be substituted for the dead one.

But there was one unfortunate occurrence connected with the affair. If the body had been interred in the cemetery Martin could have had it exhumed, and it would have been very easy for him to expose this fraudulent attempt to deprive him of his inheritance. Lady Riversham's following the burial party and the change of plan were easily explained. It had occurred to her that the body should not be interred where Martin could reach it. But he did not believe that this would avail, since he could compel them by law to produce what they had buried.

Nevertheless Martin was at a loss just what to do in the premises. Even if Richard was dead the earl would be in possession of the estate and title so long as he lived. But if a boy were substituted for the legitimate heir Martin should get possession of the required proof of Richard's death when it was obtainable. The courts were not likely to serve him until a pretended heir laid claim to the inheritance, and by that time it might be too late.

There was evidently a very weak point for the earl and countess in the fact that two lackeys possessed their secret. Martin wondered why they had trusted any one but themselves. There were several explanations. First, these lackeys might be paid a good sum for holding their tongues; second, the countess might have seen at the last moment the impropriety of trusting them and concluded to bury the body where they would know nothing about it.

Martin waited till one morning he saw a little boy in the grounds of his brother in charge of a nurse. Then he was sure that a substitute for the legitimate heir had been found, who would eventually claim the estate. Then Martin laid his plans. His first move would be to learn whether the lackeys knew of the burial place. If they did his next would be to learn if they could be bribed to reveal it. But the earl had doubtless paid them well or had, more likely, promised them installments, to be paid over a term of years so long as they would keep the secret. If either of them were dishonest he might be successfully bribed, but the matter would be difficult. However, Martin could see no other way to proceed, and he must do so on those lines.

He learned that the two lackeys in the secret were the only ones at the time of the burial in the manor house, the other servants being women. He found a means of communication with them in one Higgins, who kept a public house.

One day James Healey, one of the lackeys, went to Lady Riversham and confided to her the fact that he had been offered £50 if he would reveal the burial place of the box he had carried out and brought back on the occasion described. He wished to be informed whether she would object to his earning the money.

The countess was puzzled. She asked the man many questions, but could not learn from him who desired the information or why it would be worth £50. Healey told her that Higgins had offered him the bribe, but the countess did not believe that Higgins was acting for himself. She told Healey to put off Higgins for awhile and she would think the matter over. She believed that her brother-in-law was up to some deviltry, but she could not imagine what it might be.

The next day she told Healey that he might accept the bribe, provided he took whoever paid it to the grave himself and informed her when he was to do so. But she advised him to stand out for a larger sum. Healey was quite up to this work and told Higgins that he had been paid £100 to keep the secret. Nothing less than £200 would tempt him to divulge it. This being reported to Martin he went to London and put a mortgage on his house as security for the money.

The loan agent happened to inspect the property while Lady Riversham was about to enter her place in her carriage. The man asked her some questions about Martin's property and revealed the fact that it was to be mortgaged. Then she slipped a five pound note into the man's hand and asked him to send her the name and address of the mortgagee. Within a few days she had bought the mortgage, paying a bonus.

Healey having been offered the amount he claimed for his secret, instructed by the countess, agreed to pilot the briber himself and no other to the burial place at midnight on a certain date. Before the grave was opened Healey was to be paid the £200. His terms were accepted, the going to the grave at night being especially agreeable to Martin, who desired to make his investigation unseen.

The appointed night proved to be very dark. A few minutes before midnight Healey and Martin met at an angle of the Riversham estate. Martin had a dark lantern, which he hid under his coat, and a spade, which he held in his hand. Healey piloted him to a sort of bower a few hundred yards from the manor house, a vacant space shut in by trees on all sides. Martin knew the place well. It had been a favorite spot with him when a boy. In its center the ground was heaped, indicating that a grave was beneath.

Healey demanded his money, and Martin counted it out to him. Healey holding the lantern directed upon the bills. After counting the bills Healey took the spade and began to dig. The box had not been deposited far below the surface, and was soon reached. Martin took from his pocket a screwdriver and, as soon as the box had been lifted from the grave began to loosen the cover. Then he removed the lid and, taking up the lantern, brought it to bear on the contents.

There lay the body of the dog Martin had seen driving with the countess and her son.

With an oath Martin asked Healey why he had sold him out in that fashion.

"I didn't sell you out, sir. You offered me the money to show you where the box was buried. There it is."

Martin demanded a return of the bills, and Healey refused. Martin seized him, but a couple of Healey's friends started from behind the trees and beat him off.

The explanation of the story is that Richard's dog had been stricken with hydrophobia and been killed, Richard knowing nothing about his pet's death. After the starting of the burial party it had occurred to the countess that the boy must be told the truth, and it would be preferable that the dog should be buried in a spot in which the child played when out of doors.

Richard is now Earl of Riversham.

The countess got rid of Martin's espionage by foreclosing the mortgage on his house.

Fill Whatever Job You Hold to the Best of Your Ability.

"In climbing the ladder of success what have you learned that you could pass on as aid to other struggling young men?" I asked H. P. Davison of J. P. Morgan & Co. "Did you conceive any shining goal and bend everything to getting there?"

"No," he replied emphatically. "Whatever job I had was to me always the very best job in the world, and I tried to fill it. I made no elaborate plans for the future. If I had any system in my labor it was first to do my own work; second, to teach the fellow below me how to take my place; third, to learn how to fill the position ahead of me.

"Boys and young men should not imagine that their work is so unimportant that nobody takes note of how they do it. It does not take long to find out whether a boy is on his toes watching how he can best be of help in a situation or whether he merely sits down and waits to be told what to do. The simple virtues of willingness, readiness, alertness and courtesy will carry a boy farther than mere smartness.

"Perhaps it will not be out of place for me to describe an incident which may carry a lesson for the young men you are anxious to help. One day when I was teller a customer offered me a very fine gold pen. I went right into the office and asked if this man had any loan from the bank. I explained that he had asked me to accept the gift. The bank promptly acted, and it was not long before the fellow was in bankruptcy. The simple course I took saved the bank a good deal of money."—B. C. Forbes in Leslie's.

Where Eating Is a Trade.

"Maccheroni" eating is a trade with the street beggar of Italy and apparently a satisfying one to men and boys gifted with copper interiors immune to heat. One of the most familiar cries of the beggar is, "Signore, dame cinque soldi, mangia maccheroni!" ("Mister, gimme a nickel for macaroni!") And usually the plea ends with a lugubrious whine, "Oh, muori di fame!" ("Oh, I am dying of hunger!")—National Geographic Magazine

Machine Plants Trees.

A machine has been devised that will plant from 10,000 to 15,000 forest tree seedlings in a day. It is about as large as a mowing machine and keeps three men and two horses busy. One man drives, while the other two handle the seedlings.

First, the machine makes a furrow, into which the small trees are dropped at regular intervals. As each one is put in place, a pair of rollers replaces the dirt about the roots. As the machine journeys along a marker draws a line, which shows just where the next row of seedlings is to be planted.

Never Again.

A recruiting sergeant stationed in the south of Ireland met Pat and asked him to join the army. The latter refused, whereupon the sergeant asked his reason for refusing.

"Aren't the King and the Kaiser cousins?" asked Pat.

"Yes," said the recruiting sergeant.

"Well," said Pat, "begorra, I once interferred in a family squabble, and I'm not going to do so again."

"UNPROTECTED" AND "SECRET KINGDOM" AT PALACE TO-NIGHT, GRIFFIN'S TOMORROW

In the second episode of Vitagraph's romantic serial, "The Secret Kingdom," by Louis Joseph Vance, entitled "Royalty at Red Wings," which plays at the Palace to-night and at Griffin's Thursday night, the male star, Charles Richman, gives a splendid account of himself as the horseback.

Mr. Richman is seen dashing over the great hills of the west on the back of a fiery stallion. Needless to say this favorite's friends all over the globe will be delighted with his characterization of this virile role.

It does not matter in the fabulous whether or not Mr. Richman was able to ride but after the hero mounted, all doubts were dispelled and he put the animal through all sorts of stunts, much to the delight of his fellowplayers, who had never thought of him as a boy of the wild West.

The horse which he rides, in fact, was hardly broken in, but he chose from a large stable in preference to others who were more tame, so to speak.

Throughout this serial, Mr. Richman offers his audience one surprise after another—this being the first link in a long chain.

"PEG O' MY HEART," AT GRIFFIN'S TONIGHT

Perhaps the most interesting of the many dramatic events promised for this season, is the engagement of the United Producing Company's "Peg O' My Heart," with Marion Denlier in the title role, supported by a company of excellent all-round ability. Miss Denlier was heartily greeted on her last visit to the Eastern States, the Morosco production of the play, and it is hardly necessary to mention that the play is clean and refreshing with lots of comedy and pathos mingled in, just the right proportion to make it human. The play is from the pen of J. Hartley Manners, and the United Producing Company have more than done their share towards making "Peg" the success it is, by their careful casting of each role and artistic stage settings. This is the same company and production that appeared in Toronto and Montreal. The company closed their second record week's engagement in Montreal in six weeks last Saturday night, and they are booked for a return engagement in Toronto in April.

MARY PICKFORD IN "LESS THAN THE DUST" AT GRIFFIN'S FRI. AND SAT.

First $200,000 Production Under Her Own Guidance

John Emerson, who was chosen by Mary Pickford to direct the first picture reproduced by her own film corporation, has shown masterly work in "Less Than the Dust," which is the title of the play written by Hector Turnbull, and which is announced for presentation at Griffin's Grand Friday and Saturday with a matinee performance on Saturday. One of the scenes is a street in an East India city in which the director has shown wonderful skill for his detail.

The 9th chapter of the "Shielding Shadow" series will be shown at the end, also a comedy and the production will be accompanied by a special orchestra.

DESIRE OF WIDOWS TO REMARRY, SHOWN

California Statistics Reveal Interesting Tendencies in Cupid's Activities

Vital statistics compiled by the California State Board of Health shows a general but steady decrease in the number of marriages of persons where both parties were single. While brides and bridegrooms of this class are still about five times as numerous as those who take second mates, the relative falling off in the number of marriages of bachelors and spinsters stands out as clearly indicative of the growing desire of those who had formerly experienced the blessed state of matrimony to test its bliss the second time, to the extent of the severing of marital bonds by death or divorce.

The ten-year average from 1906 to 1915 of the first marriage of both parties was 74.1 per cent. In the latter year it fell to its lowest level, or 68.8 per cent. Of the participants in those marriages for this period the average percentage of bachelor bridegrooms was 88.9, while that of spinsters was 80.7. For the last ten years, the average percentage of bachelor bridegrooms had fallen to 82.5 and that of spinsters to 78.2.

While the proportion of widowers among bridegrooms and of widows among brides varied only slightly throughout the ten-year period, yet the percentage of divorced persons remarrying, averaging 7.3 among bridegrooms and 8.2 among brides, increased amazingly to in 1915 to 9.1 per cent for bridegrooms and 11.7 per cent for brides, proving the assertion that a second venture on the sea of matrimony is quite popular and becoming more so every year, despite all clerical preachment against the remarriage of divorced persons.

The great increase in the number of persons bent upon marriage is not due to those who have lost either partner by death, as the records clearly show. The year 1915 is the first since 1906 the number of divorced men exceeded the number of widows remarrying, the excess being 146 or 1,864 divorced men, as compared with 2,716 widowers. In each of the last four years the divorcees marrying the second time exceeded the widowers, the excess for divorces in 1915 being 532. Similarly in divorces outnumbered the divorced men in 1915 by 318, or 28.6 per cent.

Statistics indicate bachelors find divorcees attractive, as during the last six years the number of such weddings has constantly increased, until now 71 per cent of all men marrying for the first time in California select women who previously have been freed by divorce. Similarly, for the last four years of union of single women with divorced men has also steadily increased, and in converse ratio it is apparent men who have been divorced seldom select divorced women for brides, preferring widows for their second attempt. Divorcees are quite like the men, showing no preference for men who have had their ties severed law, the majority taking widowers for their second husbands.

BASEBALL BRIEFS

Al Schweitzer, veteran outfielder, whose last engagement was in the Western League has been signed for a trial with the Rochester International League Club.

Silk O'Loughlin and Hank O'Day will travel with the Red Sox and Dodgers on their spring tour as umpires. This added feature should alone be worth the price of admission.

An Eastern writer remarks that if Jack Barry on his title has been heard from Ty Cobb the past winter. The answer to this is that T. Cobb plays his baseball in the summer time.

Branch Rickey is quoted as saying that "Scrappy" Moore, the St. Louis Brown outfielder lined batting average a "seemed Kid Elberfeldt" For Mr. Rickey's information we say there ain't no such animile.

"Grouchy Gus says: It is a wise pitcher who puts his hops on the ball instead of taking them internally.

George Kelly's, high-class pitching for the Giants has made him a favorite of the McGraw squad sit up and take a second look.

A tour of Mexico by Tigers and Giants during the spring of 1918 is under consideration by Jennings and McGraw.

Latest story from the South is that Christy Mathewson will come back. He has been going great guns on the Long line for his team, the Cincinnati Reds. Many claim that he may pitch now and again.

Infielder McGarigan formerly of the Pacific Coast League, has accepted Bert Nichol as the regular second baseman of the Philadelphia Nationals. He has been doing wonderful work in the spring training games.

In and About The City

INMATES OF JAIL.

There are at present confined in Hastings County Jail five inmates, two of whom are on remand awaiting for trial.

ENCLOSURE BLOWN DOWN

A board enclosure, which was built partially on the sidewalk in front of the old Dominion Hotel premises, where alterations are in progress, was last night blown down by the wind. No damage resulted.

QUIETLY MARRIED

A quiet wedding took place Sunday afternoon at Christ Church, when Miss Grace Hutton and Pte. Arthur Andrew Sharpe were united by the Rev. Dr. Bigsbye. The happy young couple left for Ottawa, where the bride will remain until the departure of his battalion.

RODE WITHOUT TICKET

Before Magistrate Masson this morning two young men named John Wade and Philip Bellefontaine, pleaded guilty to riding upon a G. T. R. train without a ticket. They claimed to have come from Collingwood and were endeavoring to reach Montreal. Neither had any money. They were each fined $25 and costs, in default six weeks in the jail cells.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

Winnipeg, March 26.—The last hour took wheat down about two cents on sale of resulting sales. May wheat closed the lowest, July 3c and Oct. 2½c down for the day. The local May market opened at $2.06½ to $2.06¾ and retired gradually during the hour to $2.04¾ to $2.04¾. Sales down to May, $2.04¾; July, and Sept. $2.00¾; Oct. $1.97¾. Cash wheat was unchanged. May was 4c down for May and 4c down for July.

Moderate buying by the floor crowd in spite of the bearish news caused a fairly active tone in the morning, but at the top prices the market was dull and easy. Prices declined on the realizing and profit-taking and short covering. Crop news provided the main feature of the day but some of the big firms were turned to the bear side.

Cash demand was only fair, with premium unchanged to 1c high. Wheat—

Miners Buried in Slide.

VANCOUVER, B.C., March 27.—Nine men were buried in the slide on the Pueblo Copper Mine, five miles west of White Horse, on a spur of the White Pass and Yukon route, according to telegrams reaching Vancouver. The slide took place Wednesday. Mining crews are driving through 75 feet of hard rock in an effort to reach the ore. Telegrams from White Horse say there is little hope of rescuing the buried men. The Pueblo mine is owned by the Yukon Copper Company, of which Dr. Alfred Thompson is president.

More Clocks Forward.

LONDON, March 27.—All clocks in the United Kingdom will be announced officially, will be moved forward one hour at 2 o'clock in the morning of April 8. The clocks will be moved back again on September 17.

The Italian Government has issued a decree that all clocks shall be moved forward one hour for the period between April 1 and September 20. France also will move its clocks forward one hour, beginning March 24.

Special to The Intelligencer.

LONDON, March 29—An official statement says British troops have advanced for a distance of fifteen miles along the southern Palestine coast of the Mediterranean. The British forces have pushed forward from Rafa to Wadighuzen, a river five miles south of Gaza. Gaza is twenty miles north of the Egyption-Syrian boundary.

SILENCE COST TERM IN COUNTY JAIL

Maxwell Richardson Would Not Say Who Gave Him Liquor

PETERBORO, March 28.—In the Police Court this morning Maxwell Richardson, whose home is in Hastings, refused to disclose to the police where he procured the liquor that made him intoxicated, and the magistrate sent him to jail for two months or until such time as he is ready to give the desired information.

Richardson had pleaded guilty to a charge of being drunk and was fined $10. He was then placed in the witness box. He declined to tell who he was who supplied the liquor or how he got it.

This is the first time a witness has been sent to jail here for refusing to answer questions.

Warrant For Arrest of Her Aunt is Issued

ST. THOMAS, March 28—Winnifred Swick, aged 12, adopted daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. Swick of Vienna, Bayham township, was kidnapped on Monday.

While at school she received a message to call at Kirk Bartlett's for a parcel and she followed the request. From there she was driven to Aylmer by her aunt, Mrs. Alice Yorke, and it is believed she was returned to her mother in Detroit.

A warrant has been issued for the arrest of Mrs. Yorke.

HEAVY ENCOUNTERS BY BRITISH-FRENCH TROOPS

Notable Gains by Allied Troops on the Hindenburg Line—Two Villages Fall To British Troops—Germans Make Vigorous Counter-Thrust in the Champagne Region

LONDON, March 28—Special—Heavy pressure by advancing French and British forces along the whole Hindenburg line continued today and last night, while General Nivelle evidently arranged a concentration of heavy guns in the Soissy-Benay sector, below St. Quentin, where Paris reports the development of a violent artillery duel. The British cavalry occupied the villages of Villers-Faucon and Saulcourt, north of Roisel, after stubborn fighting, and forced the Germans back south and west of Cosmilles, farther north. French forces made important progress north of the Aisette River and east of the Lecilly-Neuville-sur-Margival line, in the County region, north of Soissons.

The Germans, vigorously counter-attacking to maintain the Hindenburg line along its present length, also delivered a powerful blow in the Champagne, where they report having taken several French trenches and 200 prisoners. Paris admits this attack, but declares the Teutons were merely able to reach a footing in the first line trenches, while their attempts against Madame de Champagne were frustrated, with bloody losses.

SECURE AIM IN EACH RAID ENEMY KEPT ON QUIVIVE

LONDON, March 29.—Special—The following communique covering the operations of the Canadian corps, from March 1 to March 25 was issued by the Canadian War Records Office yesterday:

If it be said that a week has passed without Canadian front without incident it must be understood that the term is used only in a comparative sense. The minor operations carried out by the Canadians, any one of which in itself would make a thrilling story if the full details could be told, have been overshadowed by the important successes scored by our troops in other regions.

The Canadians have not had the luck to capture a "Espagune" or a "Pernoux" during the past week, but there has been no slackening in our activity which keeps the enemy perpetually on the qui vive, or in our own vigilance.

The best evidence of the unfailing watch kept by the Canadians is the record which each of enemy attempts at aggressiveness which end in disaster to themselves.

German Sailors Taken To Georgia

700 Members of Interned Crews Removed South Under Heavy Guard

PHILADELPHIA, March 28—The seven hundred members of the crews of the German auxiliary cruisers Kron Prinz Wilhelm and Prinz Eitel Friedrich, interned at the Philadelphia Navy yard since last October started yesterday under a heavy guard of marines for Fort Oglethorpe and Fort McPherson, Georgia, where they will be kept until further orders from Washington. The first section of fourteen cars left shortly before 9 o'clock and another section of an equal number of cars departed later. A large crowd, held back by a cordon of marines and five hundred Philadelphia policemen, saw the departure of the sailors. In each car one of the section there was a marine guard of fourteen men.

Capt. Thierfeldt, of the Prinz Eitel Friedrich; Capt. Thierfeldt, of the Kron Prinz Wilhelm, and Lieut. Berg, who brought the British steamer Appam, to Chesapeake Capes a year ago, were among those removed from the ships.

There were no incidents during the entraining.

SUITCASES HELD $20,000 IN OPIUM

OGDENSBURG, N. Y., March 28—Henry Holland, collector of customs of the port of Ogdensburg announced last night that two suitcases containing $20,000 worth of opium had been seized by deputies at Malone and confiscated by the Government. Samuel Long, who expressed himself as from New York, was arraigned before United States Commissioner Lawrence, and his case continued until tomorrow.

CONSTITUTIONAL GUARANTEES ARE SUSPENDED IN SPAIN

Special to The Intelligencer

LONDON, March 29—The official gazette at Madrid publishes today a decree suspending constitutional guarantees in all provinces of the Kingdom, a Reuter's Madrid correspondent cables. No information has been received early this afternoon in explanation of the suspension.

A despatch to Havas Agency says the Spanish Government has declared "An appeal to the people," issued in Spain, to be seditious and the signers have been arrested.

Murder Suspect Hanged Himself

Body Was Found Suspended With a Sheet in His Cell

BROCKVILLE, Ontario, March 29—Special—Arthur Free, who was on Monday committed to stand trial for the murder of Mrs. Hattie Hill, at Seeley's Bay on March 2, committed suicide by hanging himself to the bars of his cell with a bed sheet during the night in the county jail here. No extra guard had been placed on the prisoner and last night he retired about seven o'clock apparently in good health and his customary spirits. This morning about seven o'clock he was found by the turnkey hanging from the bars and was before the aid of Coroner Harding and Dr. Horton, who were called in. An inquest was ordered to be held at noon today.

Free disappeared from his home at Seeley's Bay 25 days after the crime, on the day the inquest was held, and as he did not appear at the inquest Coroner Young issued a warrant for his arrest. After a 12-day chase through the district and in Northern New York he was captured in a barber shop at Cape Vincent, N.Y., on March 17 and on the following Monday was brought to Brockville by Provincial detective Boyd of Toronto, and Constable Brady, of Seeley's Bay. During the preliminary hearing Free did not appear to realize the gravity of the situation. He made no statement. He was about 25 years old, and his wife and parents reside near Seeley's Bay.

ENGINEER'S LEG BROKEN

KINGSTON, Ont., March 28—Jas. Collins, engineer, suffered a fractured leg in an accident about four o'clock this afternoon on the C. P. R. near Folger station. The train from Kingston for Renfrew ran into a washout. Between Folger and Lavant station are overflowed creek had undermined the roadbed and the engine, baggage and mail car went into the hole. No passengers were hurt.

HUNS ARE DISMISSED FROM OIL FIELDS

SAN LUIS POTOSI, Mexico, March 28—More than 1,000 Germans who have been working in the oil fields at Tampico and Vera Cruz have been dismissed by the oil companies. Many of these men have arrived here. They are without employment.

TURKS DEFEATED IN MESOPOTAMIA

British Drive Army of Twenty Thousand Men—Take 900 Prisoners Including a General

Special to The Intelligencer.

LONDON, March 29.—The British army in Mesopotamia has defeated a Turkish army of twenty thousand men, capturing nine hundred men, including a general, the War Office announces. The entire divisional staff of the Fifty-Third Turkish division was captured.

These figures include four Austrian officers and thirty-two Austrians and Germans of other ranks. We also captured two Austrian 4.2 inch howitzers.

All troops behaved splendidly, especially the troops of Welsh, Kent, Sussex, Dublin, Inniskeep, and Scots Fusilier regiments, and Anzac and yeomanry mounted troops.

SHIPS SUNK IN MARCH TOTALLED 420,000 TONS

Lord Beresford Says Losses Will Be Greater in Calm Weather

LONDON,(March 28—Losses of merchant vessels amounting to more than 420,000 tons thus far in March have resulted from war measures of the German navy, Lord Charles Beresford said in the House of Lords yesterday.

It is a mistake in the House of Lords on the British blockade Lord Beresford said that with longer days and calmer weather the losses would increase, and that the public ought to have the facts brought home to it. The number of vessels destroyed thus far this month was given by him as 255.

Lord Beresford expressed the opinion that captures of submarines by the British were not at all equivalent to the new submarines the Germans were launching. He believed the Germans had more men and more food than had been imagined in England.

The Foreign Office, he said, had too much power over the navy, to the detriment of the navy.

The losses of British, Allied and neutral vessels for February, he said, amounted to 221 vessels with an aggregate tonnage of more than 500,000.

Will Follow Canada's Plan

U. S. to Start Work on Raising Patriotic Fund—Canadian Invited to Explain Fund

NEW YORK, March 29.—Plans to stimulate recruiting and to finance its auxiliary services, by making it possible for men who volunteer to feel certain that their dependents and families will be cared for, while they are serving the nation, was discussed here yesterday at "National Service" meetings, held by the Navy League of the United States.

Sir Herbert B. Ames, honorary secretary of the Canadian Patriotic Fund, who came here at the invitation of the League, described how $21,000,000 has been collected and $14,000,000 more subscribed for a similar cause in the Dominion. It is proposed to raise money for this purpose in this country, should the United States go to war, to be known as the Navy League War Relief Fund.

French Capture 2,104 Prisoners

PARIS, March 29.—Special—Last night's official report says:

"Eastern Theatre—After a violent artillery preparation the enemy attacked the trenches which we had taken on March 26 around Terrevna Strauss, in the region west of Monastir. The attack was stopped short by our barrage fire. The prisoners numbered twenty-five, bringing the total taken by us in the latest operations around Monastir up to 2,104, of whom twenty-nine are officers. We captured also six bomb-throwers and sixteen machine guns."

Someone wants to know where the "open" originality is. Under the mantle of course!

TAX INCREASED ON PROFITS

Public Gets Nine Hundred and Sixty Thousand More Yearly From Nickel Concerns

TORONTO, Mar. 29—Special—Taxes on every mine in Ontario, the annual profits of which exceed $10,000 are to be raised from three per cent. per annum to five per cent. per annum upon the annual profits in excess of $10,000 and up to $5,000,000. On all annual profits over $5,000,000 and up to $10,000,000, the tax will be six per cent. per annum; on all annual profits over $10,000,000 and up to $15,000,000 the annual tax will be seven per cent.; and on the annual profits in excess of $15,000,000 a per centum in treating with each additional $5,000,000 in the same proportion as in the case of the second and third five millions of dollars.

On nickel and nickel-copper mines the new taxation is effective as from the 1st January, 1915.

These are the outstanding features of the "nickel legislation" introduced in the Legislative Assembly yesterday afternoon by Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines. While the measure is based on the report of the Nickel Commission, it will be noted that it affects not only nickel mines but all mining concerns whose annual profits exceed $10,000.

SIR ROBERT PRESENTED WITH THE NEW MACE

Received at Guildhall by Sir Robert Borden

LONDON, March 28.—Sir Robert Borden, Hon. Robert Rogers and Hon. J. D. Hazen proceeded from Buckingham Palace today to the Guild Hall, where the Premier received from the late Lord Mayor, Sir Charles Wakefield, and former Sheriffs, Sir George Touchie and Sir Samuel Ahead, the new mace for the House of Commons in Ottawa which they had kindly presented to replace for that destroyed in the fire. The donors often have visited Canada and each has interested business connections with the Dominions. The ceremony was brief but most pleasant. Sir Charles Wakefield speaking with respect and full appreciation regarding the part Canada has performed in the last two years, expressed the hope for her high destiny in the future unfolding before the new Empire.

Sir Robert Borden made a happy response in his felicitous terse. The new mace is almost a replica of the old one. What was saved of the former mace has been incorporated in the new.

LOANED A MILLION ON WORTHLESS SECURITY

John P. Morgan & Company Grant Favor Without Interest, in Case of Need

NEW YORK, March 2.—Under ordinary circumstances a man who walked into the office of J. P. Morgan & Company and announced that he had come to borrow $1,000,000 without interest, for an indefinite term, upon security legally worthless, would find a cold reception. But this is just what Edward B. Page did, and he got the loan.

Mr. Page is chairman of the New York Committee of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, appointed to co-operate with the New York depot quartermaster in the purchase of supplies for the army. After Congress failed to pass the Army Deficiency Bill and the local quartermaster was overdrawn to the tune of $1,000,000 for supplies, Mr. Page laid the situation before the Morgan firm, which advanced $1,000,000 without interest, to be used for the purchase of supplies urgently needed.

German Warships Bombard Dunkirk

PARIS, March 29.—Special—German torpedo-boats fired sixty shells on the town of Dunkirk on the night of March 26-27, according to an official statement. The bombardment, which lasted three minutes, resulted in two casualties. The torpedo boats then made off at full speed.

YOUTHS SANG FACING DEATH ON WILD SEA

"Cherished Traditions of the Birkenhead" Nobly Upheld by British Troops Aboard Transport Tyndareus, Which Struck a Mine Off Southernmost Point of Africa

LONDON, March 27.—Special.—The British transport Tyndareus, with battalion of the Middlesex Regiment aboard, struck a mine off Cape Agulhas, the southernmost point of Africa. The men were paraded on deck, and after a roll-call began to sing while they waited for the ship to sink.

The Tyndareus, however, was saved and the troops were transferred to two rescuing steamers, having upheld, as expressed in the official Admiralty report, "the cherished tradition of the Birkenhead."

The Illustrated Star, of South Africa, contains additional details of the accident to the Tyndareus. The accident shook the troopship from stem to stern. "Assembly" was at once sounded, and the troops, wearing lifebelts, lined the decks in perfect order. The ship was settling down by the head, the propellers hanging well out of the water, and it appeared almost certain the vessel would sink before assistance could reach her, but though all realized the imminent peril, the demeanor of the men did not suggest they were facing death, but parading for a long leave. As soon as the roll had been called and the order to stand easy given someone started "The Long, Long Trail," In a few seconds the whole gathering from end to end of the ship had taken up the refrain of the latest marching song. Then came the old favorite, "Tipperary," and for half an hour afterwards while the ominous incline of the deck towards the bows became more noticeable, chorus after chorus swept along the lines.

The wireless was not damaged. "S. O. S." signals were immediately sent, whilst boat after boat was lowered into the water. One of the boats was upset. A young seaman jumped overboard and answered the fighting it. The same man a little later distinguished himself by diving from a lifeboat and rescuing the regimental dog, "Paddy."

CANADIAN CADETS FOR IMPERIAL NAVY

Special Arrangements For Entry Concluded By Naval Dept.

OTTAWA, March 28.—The Naval Service Department announces that final arrangements have been made for the special entry of Canadian cadets in the Imperial navy. The regulations provide that candidates must be between seventeen and a half and eighteen and a half years of age on the first of June of the year in which the examination is held.

After physical and other necessary examinations, the names of suitable candidates will be sent to the Admiralty. Final examinations will take place in England.

Successful candidates will receive training for one and a half years, when they will be given the rank of midshipmen. A private allowance of $250 per annum must be provided by parents or guardians from the time they join until they become acting sub-lieutenants, a period of three years and four months.

GIVES WRONG IMPRESSION

Special to The Intelligencer

TORONTO, March 29.—Speaking from France to the Canadian Press today, Stewart Lyon says Canadian officers coming out of the trenches have an optimism expressed by some Canadian journals, and public men, only possible effect of which is to make people think that the fighting is over—overseas already are sufficient, which is very far from being the case.

Special to The Intelligencer

PETROGRAD, March 29.—Teutonic attacks on the southern end of the Roumanian front were delivered yesterday, but were stopped by Russian fire the War Office announces today. An advance was attempted in the region of Fokshani. Only raiding operations are reported from the Caucasus front.

TRAPPER AND TEN DOGS PERISH OF STARVATION

MONTREAL, March 29—Shut off in a little shack in the most inaccessible section of the St. Maurice district for three weeks by snow, Francois, an old trapper, was starved to death with his ten dogs. He had gone into the woods to hunt and took an insufficient supply of food.

Foe Subs Off Long Island

NEW YORK, March 29—Special—The Herald this morning says it has obtained secret observers at Montauk Point, Long Island, information that two Prussian war submarines of the latest U-boat cruiser type were seen distinctly a few miles from shore at noon in the last forty-eight hours. The information is unquestionably authentic and the value of the observations reported, was so distinct as to leave no doubt whatever concerning their design and nationality.

ALLIES TAKE VERDUN TRENCHES HELD SINCE MARCH EIGHTEENTH

Attack North of Lapompelle.

In Champagne near Tahure and in the Argonne, Courtoisschasses attacks by the enemy were repulsed completely by our fire.

On the left bank of the Meuse, Verdun front, our troops recaptured in a spirited attack last night the elements of trenches, which the enemy had been holding since March 18th.

Prisoners of the vicinity of Avocourt Wood and Hill numbered 304. There were no important events on the remainder of the front.

The Liquor Problem Not Satisfactory

Thirty Thousand Public Houses in England Close Doors—Business Not Profitable

British liquor interests declare that the drastic cuts in the manufacture of spirits and beer will drive 30,000 public houses to the wall. The estimate does not seem exaggerated. The retail trade cannot escape the logical consequences of the British Government's decision to keep for food use the larger part of the grain, sugar and other commodities formerly used in making spirituous liquors.

The fact that the closing up of 30,000 public houses would mean tremendous losses to the great brewery interests seems to be one of the reasons why the agitation for State purchase has suddenly resumed. The brewery interests control most of the public houses, operating them through nominal licensees. Before the war there were in England and Wales 94,000 of them. Though restrictions and exportations in munitions area have cut down the number, even now, at least 90,000 are operating. In many of the more congested areas there is one license to every 200 of population. It is curious that the probable reduction in the number of licensed houses is likely to be the same as that which was intended by the famous Licensing Bill which the Asquith Government put through the House of Commons in 1908. That bill contemplated the compulsory reduction of the number of public houses by 20,000. The value of the saloon trade was then placed by the liquor interests at $750,000,000, and they fought most bitterly against the reduction of nearly $250,000,000. The new conditions brought about by the war are, however, forcing reforms upon the present.

When the reductions in output and selling hours have occurred can they be made permanent? The Lloyd George Government, composed of Unionists, Liberals and Laborites, and business and professional men not usually associated with politics, is firstly and lastly, a war Government. It seems based upon the principle that no question of social reform, or other highly controversial matter, shall be dealt with, except insofar as it is necessary to deal with it for the better organization of national forces for the war. Assuredly the limitations upon the manufacture of beer and spirits are put forth entirely on this basis. If the present British Government is not forced by war conditions to clean up the liquor question, the matter of permanent reduction of output and licenses is likely to be a prominent issue in the general election soon to follow the end of the war.

ALLEGE PHYSICIAN SOLD .. PRESCRIPTION

Alleged to have illegally issued prescriptions for liquor, four doctors in the London district are being presented by the officials of the License Board. One physician, Dr. C. C. Ross, is said to have issued 574 prescriptions of a quart each.

The other physicians summoned are Dr. D. G. MacNeil, Dr. F. B. Clegg and Dr. A. McLaren.

SPECIAL MEETINGS AT BRIDGE ST. CHURCH

Interest in the special services held every evening in Bridge St. Methodist Church is well maintained. The attendance last night was one of the largest so far.

Rev. Dr. Scott based his remarks on the call of Matthew, and described the call of Matthew the Publican sitting at the receipt of Customs, and the spread of Jesus with, a few friends and his recruit. He said: "Follow me!" Matthew surrendered his business to his associates, and obeyed the command of the new master and followed Him. The speaker described the permanent changes in the life of Matthew through the touch of Jesus, and how the same touch changed and healed men today. Everyone receives the call to renounce sin and sinful associations, and to consecrate themselves to Him. He spoke of special calls at special times and the necessity of heeding the call at the strategic moment. What would have happened if Matthew had not heeded the call that day?

Many in the audience testified to their joy in having heard and heeded the call of the Saviour.

Dr. Scott's addresses rivet the attention of every listener.

WEDDING BELLS.

BLEECKER—ROSE

The marriage of Mr. William Bleecker and Miss Ida Rose, both of Belleville, was solemnized on the evening of Wednesday, March 21st, (The Rev. M. E. Wilson being th officiating minister. This social event is of more than passing interest on account of the extended circle of relatives of both the contracting parties through out the municipalities of Thurlow and Sidney, and in the city. The forebears on both sides have also been prominent in Hastings County from its earliest history. The happy bride and fortunate groom will reside on the farm of Mr. Bleecker on College Hill, and so they together shoulder the problems of life, will be followed by the interest and good will of their many relatives, and an extended circle of friends.

FISH SMOTHER

Thousands of carp and other fish in the waters of the Balsam Lake district have been smothered to death this winter, according to word received from the northern waters. Unusual ice conditions prevented the fish from getting air. Butternut Creek, which is open during the winter, was the scene of a stampede by the fish in their quest for oxygen, but large numbers of them have been lost.

INDIA AND THE WAR

At the Parish Hall in connection with Christ Church, last evening an address was given upon India, a country that holds for us of the Empire, very special interest at the present time inasmuch as many of our sons are fighting there with other portions of the Empire the burdens of the great war. The speaker was Rev. R. H. A. Haslam, M. A., who for 13 years was a missionary of the M.S.C.C. in India. There was a good audience present, and the address of the Rev. gentleman was not only of an interesting nature but profitable, and full of thought. The 'varnished speaker spoke glowingly of India, and the possibilities opening up in that country as a result of the war. Rev. Dr. Hagarty, rector, was chairman, and at the close spoke briefly but eulogistically of the speaker and the manner in which he had presented the subject.

Huts For The Soldiers

Special Effort Planned by the Salvation Army

The General of the Salvation Army, Mr. Bramwell Booth, has expressed an urgent wish by cable and letter to his Commissioners in charge of the various countries within the Empire to put forth special efforts to secure funds for the purpose of establishing more huts in France, and elsewhere for the comfort of the soldiers. Already, the Salvation Army has hundreds in use, which are looked after by experienced workers, who know the needs of the men. Evidently, Australia and New Zealand have been particularly generous in providing ample funds for the erection of comfortable huts for men, enlisting from those countries.

General Booth points out that it is necessary for the Canadian wing of the Salvation Army to do all that is possible to help make more comfortable the lot of Canadian soldiers. Commissioner Richards has asked the cooperation of the members of the Salvation Army in the various places in Eastern Canada. Locally, an effort will be put forth on Saturday, March 31st, in connection with the local Corps band and staff, to secure help for this undertaking.

Lieut. Cooper and five non-commissioned officers will take a musketry course in Toronto next month.

SIX MONTHS FOR AN OLD OFFENCE

Police Magistrate Masson this morning gave judgment in the case of Frank Edwards, who a week ago was arrested on a charge of stealing an overcoat, the property of Mr. H. C. Blakley, of Eldorado, who was a delegate at the Orange Lodge held in Belleville last week. His Worship said there was no doubt the accused was guilty of the offence charged and that there was no excuse for the circumstances. It was simply a case of sneak thieving. Edwards was sentenced to serve six months in the County jail at hard labor. From a record received by Chief of Police Newton, there is no doubt that Edward alias Flavien Barbeau is a bad man. He has served three years in the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary, Quebec, and had been convicted twenty-two times in Montreal for minor offences.

Alleged Theft Case Enlarged For A Week

The case of Louis George, a Syrian, who is charged that he did unlawfully, bring a partner with Rellie George, steal partnership property from a general store in the village of Frankford, to the extent of over $3,000 and convert same to his own use, with intent, etc., before the said Rellie George, was called before Police Magistrate Masson this morning.

The accused, it appears, had engaged at least two lawyers to defend him, namely Messrs. A. A. Abbott and W. D. M. Sharey. Both parties to the case were present, but neither knew who had the right to proceed in the case. Finally George Patterson, K.C., was counsel for the Mr. Carnew, County Attorney, stated the Crown was not prepared to proceed in the case, owing to complications. Books and documents, which at present were in the hands of the sheriff, were very intricate, and stock had not been taken yet to ascertain its value. The affair was a partnership between brothers, and it was considerably mixed up, and some time would be required to straighten matters out in such a way as to proceed with the investigation.

Mr. Masson spoke in regard to having the preliminary trial over, in order that the case, if there was one, could be tried by a jury at the High Court, to be opened at Belleville on April 30th.

Mr. Abbott, who was subsequently retained, applied for bail for the accused, if the examination was not to be proceeded with.

Mr. Masson was content to agree to a reasonable bail, say $1,000 security.

It was agreed to enlarge the proceedings for one week, and George was allowed out on bail, himself in $2,000 and one surety of $1,000, which was secured.

Germany certainly is some persuader.

WORKED IN OIL WELLS

CANADIANS HELPED TO CHASE ROUMANIA'S WEALTH.

Were Present When the German Invaders Swept Over the Country and Helped in the Destruction of Oil Fields Which Whose Hens Were Anxious to Capture and Operate.

A FEW weeks ago Rt. Hon. D. Lloyd George, Premier of Great Britain, announced that a British commission was sent into Roumania for the purpose of destroying the wells and refineries of the oil fields of that country that reported the annihilation of property and oil to the value of one hundred and fifty millions of dollars. Every effort was made to leave the territory in such a chaos that the Teuton invaders would find it impossible to repair the damage before they could be expelled beyond the mountains.

This report excited only mild general interest—for Canadians live in days of huge destruction. Their attention was more sharply aroused by a news item which stated that drillers from the county of Lambton, in the Province of Ontario, had assisted in the work of demolition.

The late Geo. Normandy, of Enniskillen Township, Lambton County, entered Wallachia as the first Canadian officer to arrive. From that time down to the present Roumania has seldom been without a representative from one of the Provinces, or the country immediately surrounding it. Chief among these "knights of the pole and bit" may be mentioned Messrs. Lambert, McCutcheon, Brooks and Drader. The last named is reported to have acquired large personal interests in the Roumanian field and was on the high road to wealth when the storm overwhelmed him, as it has overwhelmed many British subjects in those parts of Europe which the modern Hun, like his ancient prototype, has so ruthlessly devastated.

Since Mr. Drader's fate has been uncertain, but it is stated he is now a prisoner in a Teuton detention camp somewhere in Austria or Hungary.

But Canadian influence in the development of Roumania's greatest industry is not confined to the employment of expert operators. Before the pioneer driller, George Normandy, arrived in Roumania the Canadian system of drilling had been introduced from California. The Roumanian wells are, for the most part, comparatively shallow, oil being found at depths varying from 600 feet to 1,200 feet. For such bore holes it is found to be more efficacious than cable, the method of American origin. The latter system employed where great depths are to be reached. The pole system enables one (or at least was more generally employed) to sink the Canadian fields at Petrolea and Oil Springs, well known the world over as the "Canadian system." The Canadian method is still most generally found in the Roumanian fields, but only a few years ago another system was introduced where, instead of rock, sand or clay was encountered. This last method is known as the "waterflush system" and consists in flushing out the bore by hydraulic pressure.

Thirty-eight miles north of Buchorest, at the entrance to the valley of Prahova, stands the city of Ployesti. The district of Prahova is one of the largest oil-producing areas of Wallachia, and this chief city of Ployesti is the refining centre of the whole territory. Though small refineries are established at Buchorest and Giurgevo, Prince Bibesco's radiate pipe lines in all directions to gather the ceaselessly flowing streams of the brown-colored "juice" for the great central cracking, whence it issues in a hundred forms, from the gasoline which drives motor cars, to the greases and oils which lubricate our locomotives and our lathes. In 1914 the Roumanian Government began the construction of a trunk line from Ployesti across the intervening 170 miles of country to the Black Sea port of Constantza, where this oil would be loaded into tank steamers for the long way round to the chief markets of the world.

But the fighting hand of war has rent to tatters the iron spiderweb between Campina, Buzen, Moneti to Ployesti, and has left only the thread which was to attach it to the outside world. Canadian oil drillers helped well in the work of destruction. A thousand wells are now choked with steel and cement; 1,000 tanks reduced to the shape of ruins; numberless "rigs" are burned and silent. Drillers from Lambton County were present at the baptism of the infant industry thirty years ago. They watched and assisted its growth to maturity and independence, and Mr. Drader's Canadian and Britishers did their share as participators in the work of its destruction. But the driller knows that in a field like that of Roumania, permanent annihilation is impossible. Canadians may be certain that when the hour of resurrection and rehabilitation comes (as it is sure to come), some of their countrymen will be among the magicians to contribute the departed spirit of progress and prosperity to the Roumanian oil field. This country's part in world economics is not confined to the activities of commissioners high or low; but many of the strongest of sons are silently laying the foundations of prosperous peace, upon whose future historians will write in letters of gold upon the first page of their grateful annals the name of Canada.

ORGANIZING FOR VICTORY

(Toronto Globe)

It was a happy thought that inspired Mr. M. J. Haney, Chairman, and the members of the Executive of the Organization of Resources Committee of the Province of Ontario, to meet representatives of the Press for an informal interchange of thought regarding the problems with which the Resources Committee has been and is confronted. In all matters affecting organization for war purposes the responsible committees and Governments cannot hope to achieve a full measure of success unless backed by public opinion. In the last stages of the war it is more than ever necessary that Canadians should appreciate the part they are called upon to play in the fight against Germany and in securing stable conditions when the war is ended. In the task which lies ahead of the Resources Committee of this Province it is essential to the military success of the Allies and to the future of Canada that all necessary steps be taken to insure that the available resources which make for efficiency and strength shall be utilized to the utmost on behalf of the sacred cause of freedom for which men are willingly yielding their lives on the battlefields of Europe. Canada must rise to the great opportunity that is presented of playing a worthy part in the task of organization and reconstruction which must be carried on during the war and after.

To Canada comes the call of Empire and of civilization. There is work for all who hear and obey that call. Tens of thousands in this Province goes forth the summons to patriotic service. The appeal of the Organization of Resources Committee should be read in every church and school. Its deep significance will come home to all who follow the lofty lines of the Allied cause:

"The call of the Empire for more food is urgent, but Ontario farmers cannot respond unless labor is available for seeding, which commences early in April. Immediate action is imperative, if assistance is to be given. Will your patriotic committees kindly call an emergency meeting and ascertain whether retired farmers and others in your community are willing to help? Co-operation with Boards of Trade and other organizations invited is advisable."

The call of the Empire is for more food. Will that call be heeded by those who have the power to respond to the Empire's needs? Is it possible to Canadians that troops fighting at the front are now on reduced rations, and that food restrictions unknown in this country are cheerfully borne by the people of the British Isles as necessary to the achievement of victory? There may be reasons why Canada cannot do more to increase her fighting forces at the front. Valid excuses may be urged by many who are asked to don khaki. But the call of the Empire for food is one that appeals to the humanity of the heart as well as to its fighting instincts. No Canadian can feel satisfied at his or her part in this war who is not making sacrifices in some degree commensurate with the sacrifices willingly suffered by the British people. Those who stay at home cannot hope to measure up to the spirit of sacrifice shown by the men who are pressing the German back to his lair. But they can do something to sustain the courage of and relieve the anxieties of the brave men and women who in the United Kingdom are keeping the flag of Liberty at masthead and selling an example for all time of endurance, resource, and unparalleled devotion to high ideals. The hour of destiny has struck for the Empire and for Canada. The bloody battles now being waged between colossal armies are a trumpet call to all at home to do well and nobly. If the Empire calls for food, that men may stand between Canada and the evil designs of Germany and starve her fall for food. Every act of obstruction upon the soil-tilled of this Province and of Canada sees the opportunity lost forever of rendering aid to the Empire when aid was most needed.

From the increased production of foodstuffs Canada will reap profits measured in the case of market values. But above and beyond these material considerations will come to all who take part in this patriotic work, during the coming year, a reflection that they have done what they could in their day to uphold the hands of those who are fighting the great enemy of human liberty, and that the path of duty is now, as it ever was in the best history of the race, the path of honor.

Time is an important factor in the task of organizing labor for the maximum result. Ontario has got the land; it has got the money; what it needs is labor. Here the towns and cities may link up with the rural districts in a labor-recruiting campaign. The Provincial Government has placed all its available machinery at the disposal of the Organization of Resources Committee. Through this committee it guarantees effective supervision in the case of high school lads who go to volunteer for the service. This bank-to-the-land movement cannot but have a wholesome effect upon those who go to farms from city homes. For the retired farmer the opportunity of striking a blow at Germany by increasing the economic strength of the Allies is one that should enlist his active support. This is a work that will have permanent results, in winning the Empire in this day of trial Canada is building enduring foundations of national character and national progress.

Wireless Station Found In The Russian Palace

Secret Communication Between Berlin and the Russian Capital

PETROGRAD, March 22—A secret wireless station at Tsarskoe-Selo, which is suspected of having furnished communication in the past between the pro-German Russian Ministers and Berlin, was discovered today.

Evidence which the new Gotyrnment has at hand is considered damning. It was said, that this station was established by the former Minister of the Interior, Protopopoff, without the Czar's knowledge.

The Government, it was declared, had other evidence cumulative in force.

DOCTOR ADVISED OPERATION AS ONLY CURE FOR PILES

Wife Objected to Use of Knife and Cure Was Effected by Use of Dr. Chase's Ointment

Grimsby, Ont., March 22—Here is the affidavit of a well-known fruit-grower, who was cured of bleeding piles three years ago by using Dr. Chase's Ointment.

His doctor could do nothing for him and recommended a surgical operation as the only means of cure. Luckily his wife had heard about Dr. Chase's Ointment and complete cure was effected by its use.

It is by the cure of extreme cases like this that Dr. Chase's Ointment has won its great reputation. It is the only actual cure for Piles—itching, bleeding and protruding piles.

Mr. Samuel Parker, fruit grower, Grimsby, Ont., has made the following declaration before Mr. W. W. Kitts, Notary Public, of the same place: "I do solemnly declare that I was troubled with bleeding Piles and was advised to go to the hospital to have an operation performed. My wife said, 'No, get a box of Dr. Chase's Ointment.' I did so and have used it according to directions while living in Manitoba, and obtained a permanent cure, for I have never been troubled with Piles since. I am now 70 years of age and want to recommend Dr. Chase's Ointment to all sufferers from Piles. My wife has used it for itching skin and obtained complete cure."

Mrs. J. E. Stewart, 17 Turnbull St., Belleville, writes: "About ten years ago, my husband was troubled with itching Piles. He tried different remedies, but without getting relief. He was advised by friends to try Dr. Chase's Ointment, and found that it was just what was required, and obtained permanent relief. We cheerfully recommend it to all suffering from Piles."

Mr. Asquith Now Urges Votes For Women

Tells Commons He Has Changed Mind Since War Began

LONDON, March 23.—Former Premier Asquith said in the House of Commons today that the House would not be unprepared to hear that he and other members no longer regarded the question of woman suffrage from the standpoint they occupied before the war. Asquith made this statement in moving the adoption of a plan for electoral reform.

Mr. Asquith said his opposition to woman suffrage always had been based solely on considerations of public expediency. The women had now worked out their own salvation. The war could not be carried on without them. What moved him especially, he added, was the problem of reconstruction after the war. He considered it to be neither just nor expedient to withhold from women the power or the right to make their voices heard directly.

The fact that for three years there had been no recurrence of the "detestable campaign which had disgraced our public life," said Mr. Asquith, "would make it impossible for any one to say that in changing their position in regard to suffrage he and his associates had yielded to force while they had refused to yield to argument. With the exception of the actual bearing of arms in the field, there was hardly a service which had contributed to the efficiency of the cause of the Allies in which women had not been an active and efficient as men. Wherever you turned you could be seen women, who, without detriment to the prerogatives of their sex, were performing work which three years ago would have been regarded as falling entirely within the Province of men. After the war questions would arise with regard to women's labor functions and activities in which the women must have a voice."

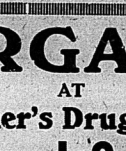
Mr. Asquith also supported strongly the other proposals for electoral reform and expressed the opinion that all elections should take place on one day dealt with one of the greatest reforms which could be introduced. He understood that the bill of the Parliament would be extended further until the end of November and hoped that a new register on the lines of the reforms suggested would be ready, should an election be necessary at that time.

The Hot Springs Jockey Club has agreed to the demands of the horse owners and will offer $600 purses for the balance of the current meeting. A pitch over this threatened last week to result in the cancellation of the races.

LEAVE MILWAUKEE PRO-GERMAN PAPER

Four Directors Resign, Charging Disloyalty

MILWAUKEE, March 23—Dissatisfaction with the violent pro-German policy of "The Milwaukee Free Press" has resulted in the resignation of four members of the board of directors of the Free Press Corporation, publishers of the paper. At the annual meeting of the board, held in the Deutscher Club, which is reported to have been stormy, August S. Lindeman, one of Milwaukee's most prominent Germa-Americans; Erich S. Stuarn, also a German-American, and Emmett L. Richardson tendered their resignations. D. Gilbert E. Seaman, president of the corporation, had long since retired, expressing his disgust with the policy of the paper.



Ernest Kronshage, editor of the paper, is American born, but of German parentage. He is regarded as the chief spokesman of the Kaiser in the Middle West.

While other sections of the country have been regarding Milwaukee, Wis., with suspicion as a hotbed of German intrigue, the women of ninety different clubs in that city have been organizing one of the most remarkable patriotic movements in the country. The League of Patriotic Women of Milwaukee is the result of the movement, and it is organized solely for patriotic work in time of war.

TALK OF FOE DRIVE STIMULATES RUSSIA

NEW YORK, March 23—A news agency despatch from Petrograd, published here today says:

Menace of the German drive into Russia is serving to accelerate tremendously the reorganization of democratic Russia.

Evidencing the new spirit in the army, despatches from the southwestern front today told of a great demonstration accorded General Brusiloff on his taking the oath with his troops to loyalty to the new Provisional Government.

Brusiloff personally reviewed his troops and witnessed their repledging of fealty. Then his men carried him on their shoulders to army headquarters. There great red shields were brought out inscribed: "Those in the rear conquered a dynasty; we at the front will conquer the enemy. Long live Brusiloff, the nation's hero."

$8,000 WORTH OF MULES VANISHED IN NIGHT

LONDON, March 27.—The report of the auditor-general to the War Office on the British army accounts for 1915-1916, issued to-night throws an instructive light on the way in which some shall part, at least, of the hundreds of millions of pounds voted for the army has been wasted, owing to theft, negligence and blundering. The report blandly states that mules worth £1,600 (£8,000); were picketed on sandy soil at Borden Camp and escaped in the night. They were never recovered.

This candid admission has elicited much ironic comment. The Star remarks:

"Where these mules went, whether they were eaten by the troops or, exported to Holland for the Germans, the patient auditor-general cannot tell. They simply vanished."

THE LAURIERITE PRESS AND BLONDIN.

A correspondent asks "Have any portion of the Liberal Laurier newspapers in either Quebec or Ontario editorially endorsed or approved the action of the Hon. Mr. Blondin in resigning his portfolio in the Cabinet of Sir Robert Borden with a view to raising a battalion for overseas service in defence of Home and Empire?"

Not that we are aware of. No such notices of approval have come under our eye. The Laurier Liberal press of the Province of Quebec declare that "Mr. Blondin ceases to be a representative of that Province when he puts on the khaki."

There is no language too strong for that portion of the press to use in condemnation of him, and even the English organ of the Laurier opposition, the Montreal Herald, has nothing too vile abuse for certain of those who praise the valor and patriotism of our Canadian boys who are battling in the trenches for the Empire and British liberty.

The Hon. Mr. Rogers addressed a meeting lately in England, during which he extoled the heroism and high valor of his fellow Canadians. Commenting upon his utterances, The Montreal Herald, the press representative in the Province of Quebec of the English-speaking supporters of Sir Wilfrid Laurier in connection upon the eulogies of the Hon. Mr. Rogers of his fellow Canadians, says:

"The recent news from England that the Hon. Robert Rogers had been praising the unselfish patriotism and courageous valor of the Canadians at the front is absolutely nauseating. It is nothing short of an insult to those gallant boys that Premier Borden should have taken such a man with him to the Canadian headquarters in France to patronize men who are sacrificing everything for their country's good."

These may be the views of the English-speaking supporters of Sir Wilfrid, who, for base party purposes pander to the passions and cupidity of the Province, but we question whether they will find an echo in the Liberal party of Ontario, even among those who follow in the Laurier wake of partyism.

Let it not be forgotten that the Montreal Herald is now under the management of and controlled by the Hon. George Graham, ex-Minister of Railway and Canals in the late Laurier Government, hence his opinions and utterances may, with propriety, be accepted as those of the opposition to the Borden Government whose exponent declare that it is absolutely "nauseating" for one Canadian, being a Conservative Minister of the Crown, to indulge in language of praise of the unselfish patriotism and courageous valor of his fellow Canadians while fighting in the trenches.

No matter what the opinion of the Hon. Geo. Graham or those of his inspired editorial staff may be of the Hon. Robert Rodgers, politically or otherwise, the condemnation of that gentleman's utterances in praise of Canada's heroes, is "nauseating" is descending into the lowest depths of party degredation.

SOUTH YORK REPUDIATES ITS M.P.

Over two hundred of the stalwarts of the Conservative party in South York in Convention on the 26th inst., in no unmistakable manner, repudiated the policy of Mr. W. F. Maclean, their representative in the Dominion Parliament. The report of the proceedings of the meeting says:

"The South York Conservatives joined as one man in severely criticising the actions of the representative of the Riding, J. H. MacNeil, M.P. President, vigorously led the denunciation of the political conduct of Mr. Maclean."

The attack on W. F. Maclean was commenced by Mr. MacNeil, who said the duty devolved upon him as President of the Association for the South Riding of York, to give public utterance to sentiments being freely expressed from one end of the Riding to the other in relation to the political conduct of Mr. Maclean. The Conservatives of South York, Mr. MacNeil said, had been bitterly disappointed and chagrined over the attitude of the member for South York in the House of Commons. At the last annual meeting the Association, with no uncertain sound, expressed its opinion of Mr. Maclean's attitude on the nickel question, and Mr. MacNeil said he, for one, hoped that Mr. Maclean would "cut it out." No member of the Conservative party, he maintained, had any privilege to travel under the flag of the party unless he stood continually by its principles.

The expression of opinion, by the president was punctuated by hearty applause. So far from upholding party principles, Mr. MacNeil said Mr. Maclean in the House on January 29th last, was elevated with all the eloquence in his power the establishment of a national party and gave as his reasons that Australia, Great Britain, France and Russia had during war time established coalition Governments in neither case could Mr. Maclean find a parallel to suit the case of Canada.

South York Conservatives to-day, Mr. MacNeil said, could tell Mr. Maclean that they are satisfied absolutely with the Government as it stands, and they do not want a coalition Government at any price. The duty of Conservatives is to rally round Sir Robert Borden, to do their best to help to carry on this war, to their best for the returned soldiers and never give up for a moment the fight to keep the Conservative party in power for the same men who had helped Canada to take such a glorious part in the war will be required to reconstruct her when the war is over.

Resolutions were passed expressing the fullest confidence in the Borden Government.

WOMEN'S SUFFRAGE.

At a Conservative meeting held in South York on the 26th inst., Col. John Currie, M.P., concluded a speech by "expressing his assurance that the women of the country who would have a vote in the next contest, would not be "fooled by the political education of the Liberals were seeking to give them." Organization was therefore necessary.

The President added that

"There must be no delay in the matter of women's organization, for he assured the meeting that he had been informed the Dominion Government will in April pass an Act along the lines of the Ontario Act which will give the women the suffrage at the next election."

RACING.

The Toronto Globe is raving against what it terms a race track scandal, for which, as usual, it holds the Ontario Government responsible, owing to the issue of a race track license. Here is the delicate and hostile way in which the subject is treated:

"Is the Government afraid of a parcel of low-down lawless gamblers? Is the Government afraid of the few high-up gamblers to whom this slimy race-track graft means millions of dollars annually? If the Government is afraid of these gamblers, why does it not say so? Why does it not declare that the Ontario Government is afraid to deal with the race track outcast law-breakers from the fullest Dissolution of Partnership Interests. It is up to the Government now."

Of course, in The Globe's opinion the Government is responsible.

The Poet's Corner

TO BABY

(James Whitcomb Riley.)

Fold little weary hands so tired,
Lightly. Let your warmest tears be tears regrets, but never fears—
Heaven understands.

Shut your little heart's door the tomb
Life's again and burst in bloom,
Fragrant with a prayer as sweet
As the lily at your feet.

Bend and kiss the folded eyes,
They are only feigning sleep
While their truant glances peep
Into Paradise.

See, the face though cold and white
Holds a hint of some delight
E'en with Death, whose finger-tips
Rest upon the frozen lips.

When within the years to come
Baby's echoes live once more
Pattering footsteps on the floor,
Voices, sounds of home—
Let your arms, in fancy, fold
Little Elsie as of old—
As of old, and as he waits
At the City's golden gates

Loans To Farmers

A Paternal Government—Loans to be Made to Settle Mortgages on Farm Property

The Ontario Government's proposals to assist the farmers of the province through the municipalities by making loans upon farm improvements at a low rate of interest occupied the attention of the House of Assembly during the greater part of the afternoon session of the 27th inst. The Government's plan, stated Hon. I. B. Lucas, was to follow the system used in respect to loans made on drainage by-laws. Any Township Council that desired to make loans to farmers would be required to pass a general by-law. Then when a farmer needed a loan he applied to the Council, which passed upon it, after making enquiries as to the farmer's standing and the uses to which the money was to be applied. The application would then be forwarded to the Provincial Treasurer, and in due course a cheque forwarded to the Council, and then to the applicant.

The Attorney-General pointed out that the Government did not intend that loans should be made on improvements to be built, but rather upon those already in existence. He pointed out that a farmer having had his application endorsed could easily get local banking accommodation to make improvements, improvements and pay off his temporary loan when the work was finished and his loan from the Government Treasury was available.

Members of the Opposition did not like this plan, and Mr. Wigle, of Essex, suggested a Municipal Council to be permitted to make advances while the work was under way. Hon. Mr. Lucas approved of the suggestion, and will probably frame a clause to cover it.

T. Marshall, of Lincoln, entered a general objection to the plan as being cumbersome, but he was not prepared to make any definite suggestions for improving it, other than to remark that the Manitoba plan suited him better. Mr. Lucas pointed out that under the Manitoba Act the loans were made through an association of farmers, who became collectively responsible for every loan. It had had the effect of discouraging land sales.

The only important amendment to the Act was moved by Mr. Lucas. It will pave the way for the Government to provide by regulation for the loaning of money to farmers for other than "permanent improvements." The suggestion was that up to one-half of the loan-the farmer might use it for retiring existing mortgages.

The loans will probably be made on a thirty-year period at 5 per cent. with very small annual repayments of principal.

"PEG O' MY HEART"

A fair but appreciative audience assembled last night at Griffin's Opera House to witness a comedy of youth entitled "Peg O' My Heart." This is indeed a comedy of charm. The story deals with Peg, the daughter of an impecunious but lovable Irishman, and an aristocratic English woman, on whom her relatives turned their backs when she set out for America with the husband of her choice. By the will of one of Peg's uncles, who repented on his death bed his unkindness toward his sister, the little Irish-American maiden is brought to England to be properly reared at the expense of his estate. Peg is received into the family of an aunt, but from here, but for the sake of the money that her care and instruction brings. Her treatment is harshly that of a favored relative, but she finds little to make her life pleasant except the friendship of one Jerry, a friend of the family, her experiences setting forth vividly the contrast between her rather uncouth manners and the stilted and conventional ways of this English household. Miss Marion Dentler, who portrayed Peg, was the central figure in the play, and did her part in a faultless manner. Other members of the cast also carried out their parts well. The stage settings were all that could have been desired.

BLANCHE SWEET AND SECRET KINGDOM AT GRIFFIN'S TO-NIGHT

In order to have all scenes authentic, whether they be laid on a desert island, San Antonio, Denver, or Chicago, the Vitagraph Company of America sent their entire company of "The Secret Kingdom" the popular serial of which the second chapter will be shown at Griffin's to-night, to all parts of the country. For this reason the locations are authentic in every instance and lend much local color and atmosphere to the thrilling story.

Such prominent Vitagraph stars as Charles Richman, Dorothy Kelly, Arline Pretty, Joseph Kilgour and William Dunn are cast to splendid advantage as the story runs its romantic course.

Blanche Sweet also appears on the same program in the Lasky production of "Unprotected." The story shows the condition which convict labor creates in the southern States when leased to private corporation, an amusing comedy will also be presented.

MARY PICKFORD WOULD LOVE TO BE LONESOME

Did it ever occur to you what it means to be a popular idol? Just think for a while what it means to never have a minute that somebody isn't pointing you out or organizing a crowd of admirers who at once make you conspicuous. Think of ever slipping into a quiet little tea room for a chat and a lunch and being recognized and setting the whole shop into a turmoil and even creating a panic among the waitresses.

Think what it must mean to go into a department store to buy but one paper of pins, be immediately spotted by a cash girl, and almost start a riot because it is you, just you. Just imagine going out in the park to walk about among the growing and green things and to really have just a bit of communion with good old comforting nature and then have someone to whisper "there she goes" and for the rest of the afternoon be followed by a crowd that keeps growing like a snowball going down hill on a cold December morning. Just sum these up and add all the other looked for quiet moments that turn out to be disturbing and you will realize that Mary Pickford, who appears at Griffin's tomorrow night and Saturday matinee and night, in "Less Than the Dust" her first $300,000 superior photodrama under her own guidance is calling the only honest truth when she says that she would like to be lonesome.

No popular idol of any period ever had a more constant and eager following than Mary Pickford. It is countless and made up of people of every sort and every age and in every country. There isn't a place in the world where there's a screen and a picture that they don't know "Our Mary."

Recently Miss Pickford has taken the studio building on Fifty-Second Street, New York, for the uses of the film corporation which bears her name. Right across the street is a public school. At recess time the school yard is deserted, the games forgotten and everybody has flocked over to the windows of the studio building to watch "Our Mary" working before the camera.

James B. Brady, known all over the American turf as "Diamond Jim," is seriously ill at his home in New York. At one time he was reputed to have carried over $100,000 in diamonds about with him.

AN ICE SHOVE

Between the hours of 5 and 6 o'clock yesterday afternoon a considerable quantity of ice came down the river but was broken up in rather small pieces. Among the ice was a number of pieces of timber which had evidently been wrested from a dam. The ice came from above Corbyville.

Threaten More Trouble Over Bi-Lingualism

Genest Defiant, Following Report That Language Rule Is Disobeyed

OTTAWA, March 22.—The Ottawa school embroglio is evidently to begin all over again. The Separate School Board at a special meeting last night decided to fight the bills now before the Ontario Legislature to legalise the constitution of another Government School Commission.

"We'll fight, that's all," was the comment of Chairman Sam Genest at the close of the meeting. Mr. Genest said that if the Ontario Government again placed a commission in charge the old fight would be renewed and if necessary would be carried to the foot of the throne. Should the bills pass the Legislature the first action taken by the board will be to ask the Federal Government to suspend them until the matter has been fought out again in the courts. If this is refused it is hinted that the School Board will refuse to give up possession of the schools or books to the commission should he be formed by the Ontario Government.

At the meeting last night the trustees had before them the report of Thomas Swift, inspector of French-English schools, for the Department of Education, which showed that in all cases in the course of his tour of inspection in February he had found the language of communication and instruction to be French. The lessons assigned by the teachers were that they found that as French was mother language of the French, the latter were able to make more progress when taught in their own language. In his report Inspector Swift stated that he found most of the schools one year to eighteen months behind the public schools in proficiency.

"The language of instruction and communication is French," the report went on to say, "and there seems to have been no effort made to teach the course in English."

FIFTY MILE GALE HITS BROCKVILLE

Clears Ice From the River In Quick Time

BROCKVILLE, March 23.—A fifty-mile-an-hour gale swept Brockville and vicinity the past twenty-four hours, doing considerable damage to property generally, in the country districts many barns and outbuildings suffered and trees and poles were blown down in profusion. The principal destruction wrought here was to roofs of buildings, and in this respect the Counties Court House received a bad shaking.

The wind played havoc with the ice in the St. Lawrence, and beyond a skirting along the main channel, and the protection offered in the bays, the river is almost clear, making it possible for navigation to be inaugurated shortly.

The steamboat D. ETAOINETAO was the first boat expected to enter the water on this part of the river is the ferry steamer, running between here and Morristown.

May Retain Licensed Bars Another Year

The Object is to Technically Defeat "Dry" Workers in Hull, Quebec

OTTAWA, March 22—That a hitch in the plans of the prohibition workers in Hull may be brought about during the coming vote, is the claim of their opponents, who state that as the voting may not terminate until May 2, under the present system, licenses may be issued to them on May 1 which will run along until the same date of the following year and upset all hope of absolutely "dry" Hull before May 1 1918.

The hotel men claim that under the act, notices of the prohibition vote must be recorded in a Hull newspaper for four consecutive weeks before election day. It is also stated that the polls may remain open for ten days, and that they shall be declared closed at any time a vote is not recorded within half an hour. The ten clear voting days would carry the vote over until May 2 and if the hotel men arrange to have some one to cast a vote every half hour they can keep the polls open until after May 1, when the licenses are issued.

In the meantime, it is stated that the prohibition advocates may apply for an injunction to stop the issue of licenses until after the result of the voting is made known.

The campaign by the supporters of both sides will be opened this week. It is understood that speakers for the liquor interests are preparing for their meetings, and prohibition meetings will start tomorrow night when Rev. D. H. Spence, of Toronto, will address a meeting in St. James' Church Hall.

Meeting Of Good Roads Congress

The fourth meeting of the Canadian and International Good Roads Congress will be held in Ottawa from April 10 to 14, the exhibition and convention being held in the Horticultural Building, Lansdowne Park.

All phases of the good roads question will be discussed by some of the best authorities on the various features effecting the construction of good roads. An exhibition of materials and machinery used in the construction of roads and pavements will be a feature of the Congress. In view of the proposed new Provincial Highway which will be constructed through this district, there should be a large attendance from Belleville. Special railroad rates will be in effect on all railroads.

LEAGUE FORMED AGAINST OPPRESSION

To Control Teuton Aggression in Saskatchewan

MOOSE JAW, Sask., March 23.—At a large meeting held in the city auditorium here last night a British Citizenship League was formed. This is the result of a movement progressing very strongly among the Sons of England and other bodies as to protect against the aggressiveness of the Teutonic element in this Province, which has been caused by the recent restriction of the political influence of the overseas soldiers by confining their representation in the Legislature to three seats.

An active campaign will be undertaken, which undoubtedly will affect almost every constituency in the Province.

DAM IS WASHED AWAY AT BEDFORD

BEDFORD, Que., March 23.—The water in the river here rose very high last night and yesterday. The dam was carried away by the ice and high water. The loss of the dam is a serious one as the Bedford Light Company, the Bedford Stove Company, and the Corey Needle Company get their supply of power and light from the dam.

These concerns have auxiliary plants, but their supply of coal can only last a very short time, so that some coal is rushed in, the townspeople will have again to go to the coal oil lamp, and the manufacturing concerns will have to close down.

Of course, you can buy cheaper teas, but is undoubtedly the most economical and what appears to be 'cheap' in price will prove to be extravagant in use. The fresh young leaves of "Salada" will yield you generous value for your money. B118

THE TRADE MARK OF BUTTER

Yellow is the trade mark of butter by nature and the long practice of coloring butter. Since the inception of oleomargarine it has imitated butter in color and appearance and much of it has been sold and consumed as butter. The dairy interests have fought this counterfeiting and in some states there are laws prohibiting oleomargarine to be sold in semblance of yellow butter. The purpose of such laws is to provide a clear demarcation between oleomargarine and butter. These laws were instigated to prevent frauds. When one has had experience in the wily ways of many manufacturers and dealers in oleomargarine, he realizes how difficult it has been to keep oleomargarine in its own clothes and make it stand upon its merits.—Hoard's Dairyman.

IRON, STEEL, METAL AND MACHINERY

In this summary of the iron, steel, metal and machinery markets for the week ending March 21, Canadian Machinery and Manufacturing News, Toronto, makes the following observations:—

The industrial situation is still somewhat unsettled, due to war influence, more particularly on account of the uncertainty as to what the United States is preparing to do in regard to the protection of her rights. That the Government will take active measures is now practically assured; this has already been reflected in the steel market, as indicated by the recent sharp advance in price. The demand for steel has been stimulated by the prospect of increased consumption and a further advance in steel prices is certain. This week, tubes, black and galvanized sheets, have advanced, while higher prices on plates, rivets and wrought pipe are looked for in the near future. Operating conditions at the mills have improved considerably, due to more favorable weather and increase in supply of raw material; production consequently will show a material improvement over each of the preceding two months. The pig iron market continues strong and prices are still advancing. The demand, particularly for basic iron, is more insistent than at any time previously and indications point to considerably higher prices than at present obtain. In regard to non-ferrous metals, consumers appear to be awaiting developments. The demand recently has been light, but a buying movement will likely start when the United States Government becomes more aggressive in the war policy. The only price change to note is in lead, which is slightly weaker, due to lack of interest in the market. Prices of scrap metals are generally unchanged, but firm. Steel scraps are in good demand as is also machinery cast iron. Castor and lubricating oils have advanced, while higher prices on gasoline are likely. The machine tool market is quiet, but indications point to an improvement in demand for tools for ordinary purposes.

YOU SHOULD BUY YOUR PIANO FROM C. W. LINDSAY, LIMITED

Watch for the five Reasons. We will have one each day in this space.

REASON No. 3—Superior Selling Terms

While tone, material and quality of workmanship are the most important considerations when buying a Piano, the matter of price is also essential. An inferior Piano is dear at any price, and a piano to less must have the choicest materials and most expert workmanship used in its construction. Therefore as C. W. Lindsay, Limited, sells none but the best Pianos they will accept you less in the long run. WE HAVE BUT ONE PRICE FOR EVERYONE. Each Piano being ticketed with the selling price. You are invited to examine these Pianos and their prices, yourself, and be convinced that C. W. Lindsay, Limited can give you more for your money than the dealer with sliding scales of prices who can promise you anything. Halfway is the best policy, and its our policy to be honest. A PLAN FOR THE ASSISTANCE AND ENCOURAGEMENT OF URBAN POULTRY KEEPERS

The present year will see a great increase in the number of urban poultry keepers. The almost prohibitive prices of eggs and poultry during the present winter have caused many consumers to seriously consider the home production of those very necessary and useful commodities. It is important also that any efforts put forth in this direction result satisfactorily.

Many difficulties present themselves in attempting to rear chickens successfully on a small city lot. Experience has shown that the best way for urban poultry keepers to enter the poultry business is by the purchase of pullets in the fall. Well-matured pullets are the most reliable winter egg producers and if well cared for will not only produce plenty of fresh eggs for the breakfast table, but also return a reasonable profit on the expenditure entailed.

PLAN PROPOSED

Ordinarily, well matured pullets are rather scarce and difficult to obtain in the fall of the year. It is believed, however, if the matter were taken up systematically by poultry associations that the difficulty could be overcome, and, incidentally, serve as a means of increasing interest in the poultry industry. Practically every large town and city has its local poultry association. It is suggested that each association give some publicity to the suitability of thrifty, well matured pullets for profitable winter egg production and advertise the fact that the Association is prepared to constitute itself a medium to arrange for the hatching and rearing of pullets this spring and for their delivery in the fall. It could be announced that orders would be taken during the month of April and the first part of May. All those desiring pullets in this way could be required to join the Association and make a small deposit covering the number required.

This association could then make such arrangements as might be necessary with nearby Co-operative Associations, farmers and breeders for the growing of the pullets, a minimum price to be decided upon for the different breeds and varieties. In the fall these could be assembled at some central depot on each locality and the distribution made in time to permit of the proper housing of the stock in permanent winter quarters before the severe weather set in, say by the last of October.

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

In order that greater effectiveness may be given to this proposal, the Dominion Live Stock Branch is prepared to extend, to all associations qualifying under these provisions, the same assistance that is given to associations desiring to purchase other kinds of pure bred live stock, namely, the payment of reasonable travelling expenses, during the time required to conclude the purchase and transport the stock to destination, of representatives of associations, in any section of Canada, desiring to purchase pullets in lots of 200 or more. Should it be designed the Live Stock Commissioner will also nominate a suitable person who will be directed to accompany this representative and assist him as far as possible in the selection and shipping of the pullets.

In the general interests of the poultry industry throughout the Dominion and the urgent need this year for increased production of eggs and poultry and the releasing thereby of a large quantity for export to Great Britain, it is hoped that as many associations as possible will take advantage of this proposition. All associations desiring to become active in this direction are requested to write the Live Stock Commissioner, Ottawa, at once for further advice and instruction in the matter.

THE SUMMER MEAT SUPPLY

On the farm the meat supply can usually be had at first cost. It is seldom necessary to buy it and to pay the middleman's profits. As good meat can be raised on the farm as it is possible to purchase. Cooperative beef rings lessen the need for winter meat, but in many places they are not established, and in any case some cured meat is required to supplement the beef ring supply. The following instructions for the curing of salt pork and of smoked hams and bacon give all information desirable for putting up a summer supply of cured pork.

In making salt pork, first rub each piece well with salt the next day cover with a brine made up of 10 pounds of salt and 2 ounces of saltpetre to 4 gallons of water boiled. This will be enough for 100 pounds of pork. Leave them in the brine till needed.

For hams and bacon rub each piece with salt, the next day pack in a barrel or earthenware crock. Make up the following brine: Salt, eight pounds, brown sugar, two pounds, and saltpeter, two ounces, dissolved in four gallons of boiling water. When cool pour over the hams and bacon. This will be enough for 100 pounds of meat Bacon should be left in the brine from four to six weeks and hams from six to eight weeks. They should then be smoked. If a smoke house is not available the meat can usually be improvised. One of the simplest ways is to invert a barrel; suspend the hams and bacon from sticks laid across the barrel through holes in the bottom of the barrel and run a stick through the loop. Make a fireplace three to five feet from the barrel and lead the smoke into the barrel with a length or two of stovepipe. Maple wood is considered the best fuel; hard wood is better than soft wood. A slow smouldering fire is the best. If a steady fire is kept up, two days smoking will suffice. If a fire is built every day, it will take a week, and with a fire only every other day, two weeks. Smoke will not penetrate frozen meat, and it enters the meat slower if it is cold than if warm. When smoked wrap the meat in waxed paper and burlap or canvas, and hang in a cool, airy place.

Regulation No. 17 Is Not Being Obeyed

French Language Used—Chairman Genest Says if Another Commission Named Board Will Fight

OTTAWA, March 28.—That regulation 17 of the Ontario Government in regard to the conduct of Separate Schools, is not being obeyed in the Ottawa Separate School Board is made evident from the report of inspector Thomas Swift, read at the meeting of the Ontario Separate School Board on night. The meeting was held behind closed doors, but it was learned that Mr. Inspector's report, which was read at the meeting, and which is in the hands of the Ontario Department of Education, stated that in all cases during his tour of inspection in February, he had found the French language used as the language of communication and instruction. The reports assisted by the teachers were that they found that as French is the mother tongue of the pupils, they were able to make more progress when taught in their own language.

Inspector Swift's report stated that he found most of the bilingual schools from one year to eighteen months behind the public schools in proficiency.

"The language of instruction and communication is French," stated the report, "and there seems to have been no effort to teach the courses in English."

The report said that the pupils were being well taught in the French language. "I consider that a favorable report," commented Chairman B. N. Genest.

"Yes, it is a one way," replied Trustee Leclaire; "but he finds we are not observing the regulations, and it means an adverse report to us. That means the appointment of another commission."

Referring to the proposed appointment of another commission by the Ontario Government, Chairman Genest remarked, "We'll fight; that's all."

TEDDY ROOSEVELT MAY COME TO CANADA

Wants to Get at Germans—Says Wilson Turned Him Down

NEW YORK, March 28—The New York Sun this morning says:

Rumors have reached here that Colonel Roosevelt's offer to President Wilson of a fully manned and armed division has been rejected. As the Colonel is now devil fishing in Florida no confirmation of the report could be obtained. When the news was conveyed to him known to have enlisted in the division many of them said the Colonel would be urged to take his regiment to the European battlefront by way of Canada. They are hopeful their commander's love of a fight will impel him to accept the suggestion if he feels his action will not imperil his country.

From what can be learned of the division, it has at the present time between 40,000 and 45,000 men enrolled, all pledged to follow the leadership of the former President. The regimental colonels have been named and the outfit has been almost completely officered. It is asserted by those who have knowledge of the enterprise that the entire force could be mobilized in four days.

Because of the rumors of rejection, the divisional officers have sent a delegation to the Colonel in Florida to learn his new plans.

EQUINE ARTFUL DODGERS.

Deafness and Lameness That Were Just Pure Bluff.

We all know, of course, the lively nag who pretends to be deaf. You tell him to "get up," and he getteth not up; you cluck to him, and he acteth not his pace. Is he deaf? Not he. You know it, by the twinkle of his eye and wiggling of his ears, that he hears you perfectly well. His deafness is pure bluff. I have seen a horse which some shrewd old nags sometimes put on.

Will a horse pretend to be lame when he is sot? Some horses certainly will. Two or three years ago Mr. Nomad was driving a livery nag on a road in Vermont, when the animal suddenly began to limp terribly amidst's go off a slow walk. It was pretty serious, for the country all about nearly miles had just been begun. Knowing a man on the road who was a practical horseman, the Nomad drove up to his door and submitted the animal to the expert's examination. The man looked at the horse's feet, examined his legs—looked him over thoroughly. "Did the horse go lame?" he asked. "Yes; how bad?" came all right now," was the reply. "Well," said the expert, "this horse is shamming; there is nothing the matter with him."

Then he addressed some plain language to Dobbin, advising him with some sharpness to cut it all out and go along as he ought to. The Nomad touched the horse with the whip and he trotted on to the end of the journey without the slightest limp.—Nomad in Boston Transcript.

Acts as Canadian Club.

The Brant Historical Society is planning to incorporate with its scheme of work the Canadian Club, of which there is not one in Brantford. A committee has been named to arrange for a series of addresses. It is thought this will serve the purpose of the Canadian Club.

"Swiss Scare" a Trick.

It is difficult to avoid the impression that the rumor of an attack near Switzerland, if not in Switzerland, is being sedulously spread by the German higher command, says The London Observer. That command knows well that every interval between campaigns, has filled the neutral press with rumors that reinforcements of troops and artillery were moving towards the points which it was not intended to attack. The Dutch newspapers were stuffed, we think, with quite exceptional yarns about German intentions against the British when the real coup was being planned at Verdun. The Swiss seem to be living up to the ordinary way of business with the paper-stuffing and journalistic attention on the Allies' side while the Germans strike at quite another kind of target.

CITY COUNCIL GRANTS FIFTY THOUSAND DOLLARS FOR PATRIOTIC PURPOSES

Applications to be Received For Position of Manager of Water Works—A Grant of $500 Recommended to British Sailors' Relief Fund—Many Other Matters Discussed in Civic Committees

At a regular meeting of the Civic Committees held last evening, considerable business was transacted. It was decided that the city's contribution this year to the Patriotic Fund would be $50,000. A grant of $500 to the British Sailors' Relief Fund was recommended to the Council. The question of appointing a manager of the Water-Works Department was discussed, and it was decided to ask for applications for the position. A number of accounts were passed, and several other matters were referred to the Council. Mayor Ketcheson and all the Aldermen were present at the committees

GAS

Ald Robinson, Chairman, presided. Accounts passed:

Intelligencer Printing Co....	$ 21 00
Sundry accounts	31 80
Pittsburg Coal Co	68 40
Pembolter Injector Co	11 30
Jas. Morrison Brass Mfg. Co.	26 83
Pay Sheet	250 45

Mayor Ketcheson said something had to be done in reference to the quality of gas being supplied, or the city would lose customers, and one customer would be St. Thomas Church. The gas has been had in that place of worship on several occasions.

Ald. Robinson—I will have the matter looked into.

ADVERTISING SCHEME

A gentleman representing the Rudy Advertising Company asked the city for the privilege of erecting an advertising sign on a piece of property on Dundas street west, and the company would pay $15 per year for the privilege. It was also agreed to remove the sign if the property was sold or required for building purposes by the city.

Ald. Deacon—Leave out liquor advertisements.

The Representative—There will be no such advertising. The signs will not interfere with the view.

It was decided to have a contract drawn up in the matter.

WATER FOR DOCK BUILDINGS

The following communication was read by Ald. Deacon:

Ottawa, March 28th, 1917.

Ald. Deacon,
Belleville, Ont.

Dear Sir:—The Department of Public Works has under consideration a proposal to install fittings and generally improve the warehouse on the new dock in order to make same available for the shipping of your harbor commission propose bringing to Belleville, during the coming season. In order to provide water for the sanitary convenience and fire protection, it will be necessary to extend the city mains to the ware house, a distance approximately 1,301 feet. The department feels that the cost of laying this main should be borne by the City of Belleville, but taking into consideration the conditions outlined to me when discussing this matter with you verbally, I am prepared to recommend that the cost of this service from the shore line to the warehouse be borne by the department, provided the City of Belleville undertakes to lay a 4 inch main to the water's edge at a distance of approximately 400 feet.

It is necessary if the improvements we have in view are to be undertaken during the coming season, that the information in connection therewith be in the hands before the end of the present month, in order that funds be included in the supplementary estimates to go before Parliament. It would, therefore, ask your immediate consideration of this matter, and I trust your favorable reply will be received at this office not later than Saturday next.

It is well to point out the large amount of money that has been spent in the improvement of Belleville harbor by the Department of Public Works, and in order to make the improvements of a maximum benefit to the citizens of your city, I think it only fair that you should undertake the small cost involved in this proposal,

Yours truly,
J. McNAUGHTON,
District Engineer.

Ald. Deacon—The cost to the city would be from $900 to $1,000, and the revenue would be at least $50 per annum.

Mayor Ketcheson moved that the chairman be empowered to have laid down a foot bridge from the Ferry House to the new dock.

The recommendation prevailed.

WATER WORKS MANAGER

Ald. Deacon said that it was necessary to have a manager for the Water Works Department. He thought that Mr. E. T. Austin would be a good man as he is fully qualified as a plumber inspector. He could make his salary as manager of the Water Works Department.

Ald. Robinson—Could not the manager of the Gas Department be manager of the Water Works Department too?

Ald. Whelan—How could he manage both when last year he was kept busy and had an increase to his staff to run all night. This is just another feature in connection with raising the expenditures of the city. The Gas manager would do the additional duties for $200 a year. Mr. Gardiner is a good machinist.

Ald. Deacon—There have been complaints as to the flow of gas. There was fault found last year.

Ald. Robinson—I have only had one complaint this year, and that was caused by frost.

Mayor Ketcheson—The inspector last year reported that poor gas was being made. The Government report showed Belleville gas was poor.

Ald. Robinson moved that the matter of appointing a water works manager be left over for the time being until Mr. Gardiner is consulted in the matter.

Ald. Deacon—The net profit last year after all expenses were paid to the Water Works Department, was $7,500. If you divide interests it may not be to the city's interest. One department or the other will suffer.

Ald. St. Charles—Why not ask for applications for the position as manager of the Water Works Department.

Ald. Robinson — Advertisements should be placed in the papers for applicants for the position.

Ald. Woodley moved that applications be asked for the position of Water Works Manager.

Ald. Paris suggested that Mr. Gardner be asked to look after the Water Works Department for a month, and

FIT MEN ON FIRING LINE

Another Call on the Man-power of Great Britain—Drastic Bill in House

LONDON, March 30—Special.—A bill giving the military authorities power to order re-examination of men previously rejected for military service and also of men who already have served and been discharged in consequence of wounds or illness, was moved in the House of Commons to-day on second reading by Chancellor Bonar Law. The Chancellor said the bill was an absolute necessity owing to the military situation. The bill passed the second reading by a vote of 178 to 18.

Arrangements were made last August which it was hoped would give the military authorities the men required, the Chancellor explained, but owing to the submarine menace it had proved impossible to obtain the men expected from agriculture or from the Admiralty and the shipbuilding yards. The results obtained, he said, had fallen short of the number estimated by not less than 100,000.

Some damage had been done at Turcot by floods, and water entered the Catholic Church there this evening. Part of the electric line to Lachine is six inches under water.

Kingston Khaki Club Fined $200

Case of Liquor Was Harbored There

KINGSTON, March 29—The Kingston Khaki Club, conducted by prominent people for the soldiers, was today fined $200 and costs by Police Magistrate Farrell for harboring a case of liquor sent there addressed to W. Brown, and received by the caretaker's wife.

Two Police Court cases failed to identify the owner of the case, and the Khaki Club was then made the "goat."

Magistrate Farrell said he would sanction application for remittal of fine, as he was sure those maintaining the club were not implicated in having the liquor sent there.

WOMEN CONDUCTORS ON MOOSE JAW CARS

MOOSE JAW, Sask., March 30.—Four Moose Jaw street cars were run with women conductors today. It is believed that this is the first time women have ever served as conductors in Canada. They wear uniforms, with military caps, short skirts and leggings.

ITALY ASKS RESERVE OF 200,000 FROM HER WESTERN ALLIES

ROME, March 30—Special—The possibility that the enemy will direct its chief blow against Italy continues to be the principal object of discussion in the Italian press. The Tribuna contains a long article by its editor, who argues that the allies must be prepared to support Italy with a reserve army should the Germans join with the Austrians in an offensive on a grand scale. He urges that a complete organization should be established by which a strategic reserve from the western allies of ten or twenty divisions, with transport, be got ready so that it could be thrown into action at the danger point. He seems to doubt whether the danger of a general attack on the Italian front has been realized by Italy's allies, but it is not clear why he should. Sir William Robertson's visit to Italy should remove this. It may probably be taken for granted if Gen. Cadorna thinks he can require help he will have already asked for it. There is no question on the part of the allied commands to minimize the importance of the Italian front.

JUNKERS CRY "HANDS OFF"

Electoral Reform Meets Strong Opposition in Prussian Diet

LONDON, Friday March 30—Special—Under the headline, "Prussian Electoral Reform; Strong Junker Opposition," a Times Amsterdam special of Thursday says: "The debate on constitutional reform in the Upper House of the Prussian Diet yesterday was mainly remarkable for the strong opposition offered by conservatives to all proposals for increasing popular rights. General von Kleist began by denying there was any special urgency for reform, and scoffed at the idea that men in the trenches were concerning themselves with the question of a Parliamentary vote. For him the further democratization of State institutions meant the restriction of the rights of Federal States and extension of Parliamentary rights meant restriction of the rights of the Crown. Everyone in Prussia had freedom except for stealing and murdering. He cried, 'Hands off old Prussia!'".

Labor Leader Says Views on Empire Are Altered

LONDON, March 29—J. A. Seddon, the trades union leader, has resigned his candidature in the Newton division views on National Service and free trade. "I visited Canada in 1914," he says. "What I saw and heard there gave me a new point of view on Empire and Imperialism. I visited our army in France and was forced to the conclusion that there must be a new system of Empire defence. The people of the general, however, declared the objectors did not understand what it meant to go through six campaigns, as he did, and march all night on an empty stomach.

Gen. Button Presiding at Prohibitionist Meeting Causes Flutter.

LONDON, March 29—At a prohibitionist meeting at Exham, near London, General Sir Edward Hutton, commander-in-chief in Canada, presiding, said he favored rum rations for our soldiers, at which statement there was much uproar. The general, however, declared the objectors did not understand what it meant to go through six campaigns, as he did, and march all night on an empty stomach.

ADMIRALITY THANKS CANADA

Gifts of Money Gratefully Acknowledged by Mr. Balfour

LONDON, March 29—The Press Bureau issued the following: "The people of Canada have shown their appreciation of the work of the Royal Navy by subscribing £250,000 for distribution amongst the naval charities, orphanages and hospitals. A committee has been formed here to collected to aid an institution established for the same purpose on behalf of the mercantile marine. First Lord of the Admiralty has written W. C. Ross, president of the body which organized the collection and contributions, expressing the grateful thanks of the Admiralty for this magnificent gift. The sum allotted for the navy has been handed to the statutory committee, set up under the Naval and Military Pensions Act for distribution if in accordance with the desires of the donors.

HEAVY FIGHTING ON THE FRONT

Special to The Intelligencer.

PARIS, March 30—Heavy fighting on the French Front since the beginning of the German withdrawal has come to an end for the time being. From the Somme to the Aisne the night was calm along our outposts, says an official report. There were no important events elsewhere, except fierce encounters, and rather lively grenade fighting in the sector of Maisons de Champagne.

Volunteering In New York

NEW YORK, March 29.—More than 200 Americans of British descent have volunteered for the British-American regiment, which is being raised in this country for service in case of war, it was announced to-night.

Lieut-Colonel I. Thord-Grey, who is in charge of the work, said to many applications are being received it is possible that the regiment may be expanded into a brigade.

Many of those who have offered their services to the United States are said to have been men invalided out of the British army but have recovered.

Hamilton Woman Burned To Death

Clothing Caught Fire From Gas Range as She Was Cooking Supper

HAMILTON, March 30—Special—As the result of her clothes catching on fire in a gas range, Mrs. Mary Boyle, 135 Wellington Street north, was burned to death last evening. It is believed that the deceased, who was 80 years of age was bending over the range cooking her supper when her waist caught fire, instantly her clothes were in a sheet of flames. Death occurred within a few minutes after the accident. The deceased has relatives in New York, who are expected to arrive to-morrow to take charge of the body.

MAJOR-GEN. LESSARD JOINS LT.-COL. BLONDIN

Will Look After Military Direction of Recruiting for His Battalion

OTTAWA, March 30—Special—Major-General Lessard, Inspector-General of Forces for Eastern Canada, has joined hands with Lieut.-Col. the Hon. P. E. Blondin to boom recruiting in Quebec. He will take charge of recruiting and general military organization there at once, and co-operate with the Postmaster-General in raising the latter's battalion. Mr. Blondin is to stump the Province with a number of assistant speakers, and Gen. Lessard will look after the military direction of the campaign. He offered his services as a French-Canadian, and was gladly accepted by Mr. Blondin.

EMPEROR WOULD STAY HAND OF PRES. WILSON

Chancellor Says He Never Wanted War With U. S. and Doesn't Want it Now—Strange Teuton Interpretation of Russian Upheaval—Socialists Vote Against Budget and Urge Peace

BERLIN, March 30—Special—"Germany never had the slightest intention of attacking the United States of America, and does not have such intention now. It never desired war against the United States of America and does not desire it," was the declaration made by the German Imperial Chancellor, Dr. Von Bethmann Hollweg, in a speech in the Reichstag to-day. The Chancellor made important declarations concerning Germany's policy toward the United States and Russia. Declaring that Germany had undertaken unrestricted submarine warfare for its defence, Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg said:

"Within the next few days the directors of the American nation will be convened by President Wilson for an extraordinary session of Congress in order to decide the question of war or peace between the American and German nations.

"More than once we told the United States that we made unrestricted use of the submarine weapon expecting that Britain could be made to observe, in her policy of blockade the laws of humanity and international agreements. This blockade policy—this I expressly recall—has been called 'illegal and indefensible' (the Imperial Chancellor here used the British words) by President Wilson and Secretary of State Lansing. Our expectations, which we maintained during eight months, have been disappointed completely; Britain not only did not give up her illegal and indefensible policy of blockade, but uninterruptedly intensified it. Britain together with her allies, arrogantly rejected the peace offers made by us and our allies, and proclaimed her war aims, which aim at our annihilation and that of our allies.

TRAINS SNOWBOUND SOUTH OF PORCUPINE

HAILEYBURY, March 30—Special—The Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway is still snowbound from a point near Mile Creek to Porcupine. No trains have been able to go through since Monday. Northbound passenger trains come as far as Englehart and return south. The National, which left Toronto Tuesday is the only passenger relying to get through, but last evening it was left at Boston Creek, where snow is said to be about 12 feet deep in the rock cuts. The National is filled to overflowing with northbound passengers from three days' trains. Passengers are being offered $4 per day to turn in and shovel snow. The snow is of the soft variety and does not answer to snow-plows. It is also said that three freight trains are in the snowbound area.

MARY PICKFORD IN "LESS THAN THE DUST" AT GRIFFIN'S TONIGHT

A $300,000 Production by Her Own Company.

A brand new characterization is promised by Mary Pickford when she comes to Griffin's to-night and Saturday matinee and night, presented by the Artcraft Pictures Corporation in "Less Than the Dust." Hector Turnbull, author of many photoplay successes, wrote the story for Mary Pickford after reading Laurence Hope's poem, which bears the same name as the new master production in which the famous star will be seen. He has made his heroine a little English castaway, whom misfortune takes to India, where the superstitious natives regard her as "less than the dust" beneath her feet.

The contrast between the conservative splendor of the English settings of the story and the picturesque atmosphere of modern India is realistically brought out by the costly production and notable supporting company of players which have been mainly and associated with Mary Pickford. Among the more prominent of the cast of nearly fifty principals are David Powell, Frank Losee, Mary Alden, Mario Majeroni, Ceasre Gravina and Mercita Esmonde. The enterprise of Manager Forban of Griffin's Theatre is obtaining at great expense this series of the new Mary Pickford productions from Artcraft is sure to be rewarded with unusually large business during the engagement of "Less than the Dust."

Besides the above special offering the 9th chapter of "The Stickling Shadow" series will also be shown.

SUFFERED FROM PARALYSIS FIFTEEN YEARS AGO

Used Dr. Chase's Nerve Food on the Advice of a Friend, and With the Greatest Benefit

Belleville, Ont., March 29—The supreme test of any medicine for the treatment of diseases of the nerves is whether it is effective in cases of partial paralysis.

Paralysis is the natural result of neglected nervous diseases. Nerve cells which are dead can never be replaced. For this reason complete cure of paralysis is impossible. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is effective, however, in restoring the nerve cells which are partially exhausted. For this reason it has met with such great success in the cure of nervous prostration and exhaustion, and affords the greatest relief for partial paralysis.

There is plenty of evidence right here in your home town. Watch this paper for daily reports of cures effected.

Mrs. C. Sintgid, 236 Moira, W., Belleville, Ont., writes: "About fifteen years ago I was suffering from paralysis and through the advice of a friend I was induced to try Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. I took a treatment, and found my condition greatly improved. I found that they also benefited me greatly for sleeplessness and nervousness. Now any time I am run down or not feeling "up to the mark" I use some Nerve Food, and have recommended it to many of my friends. Many people hearing of the benefit I have received from it, came to me to ask inquiries, and I always cheerfully recommend Dr. Chase's Nerve Food."

Sleeplessness, irritability, nervousness and headaches are among the early symptoms which come to warn of coming collapse of the nervous system. The way to avoid the serious developments is to keep the nervous system in health and vigor by the timely use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50 cents a box, a full treatment of 6 boxes for $2.50, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto. Do not be talked into accepting a substitute. Imitations only disappoint.

AMELIASBURG RESIDENT DEAD

Mr. Asa Brickman, an aged resident of Ameliasburg Township, died this morning. An extended notice will appear in to-morrow's issue.

Canadian Club's Reception To Major Bywater

At Trenton last night about 120 members of the flourishing Canadian Club there, gathered to welcome and honor Major Bywater (who was wounded at Courcelette) on his return from the front. He hopes to return to active service before the end of May, if sufficiently recovered. The greatest enthusiasm prevailed. Rev. C. G. Smith, President, and Colonel Ponton, member of the Executive of our Belleville Club, with Rev. Mr. McLeod, President of the Brighton Club, an old pastor of the returned officer, were the chief speakers, in addition to the guest of the evening, who made a most thoughtful and impressive speech, as to our present need of men and the future results of the war. Comradeship in the trenches was dwelt upon with emphasis. That comradeship will be maintained on the return of our fighting men. So to it that Canada justifies their confidence, and do not be led away from the great issue of to-day either by the will of politicians or the desire to make money by taking advantage of present existing conditions at this crisis of our fate.

Under the Presidency of Mr Whyte, Principal of the High School, the Cascading Club of Trenton has maintained a high ideal. Belleville and Trenton were frequently spoken of by Trenton speakers last night, as the future "twin cities" of Canada, and the establishment of a County Club half way between the "cities," floating on the bay in the Township of Sidney, was advocated.

Mr. Bimlett of Belleville, sang with much appreciation.

A DUBIOUS OPINION

She had been called home suddenly, leaving her husband to follow with their belongings. When she met him at the dock she exclaimed, "Where's Fido?"

"Dearest," he replied, "he fell overboard."

She wrung her hands.

"Why didn't the steamer stop to rescue him?"

"They only stop to save human life," he explained.

"Then, Henry, why didn't you jump overboard?"

W. Patterson	15 00

EXTRAS CHARGED

A letter was read from Mr. Evans, ex-City Engineer, relative to the account of Messrs. Wilde & Henderson for extras done on the Catherine St. sewer. The letter stated that they were entitled to a proportionate amount.

The matter was on motion left in abeyance for a few days as a letter is being forwarded to the firm, and it was decided to ask Mr. Wilde to make it convenient to meet the Public Works Committee in the near future to discuss the matter.

Mr. Henderson, street foreman, reported that the upper bridge would need to be repaired soon, also the repairs be made to Bridge Street West, Catherine, Coleman and a portion of Moira streets.

Ald Platt—And Lingham street.

Several of the Aldermen said other streets.

It was referred to the Public Works Committee.

PETITION FOR SEWERS

A petition was presented for the building of a storm and sanitary sewer from Coleman street, up Colborne and James Streets to Brock and Mary Streets.

Mayor Ketcheson — Something should be done as many houses have water about them and in them.

The petition was referred to the City Clerk and Assessor to see if it was properly signed, and an estimate be made as to costs of sewer or a drain.

Mayor Ketcheson—The Board of Railway Commissioners are going to send an engineer to the city to inspect the location of the proposed new railway bridge over the G.T.R. tracks on North Front Street.

A communication was read asking the city to give a contribution to the Sick Children's Hospital.

It was decided to make a grant of $10 to the institution after several of the Aldermen spoke approvingly of the good work being done by the hospital.

Mr. Henry Foltz applied for the position of Sanitary Inspector.

The matter of appointing an inspector was left in abeyance for the time being.

PATRIOTIC FUND

A communication was read from the Belleville Branch of the Canadian Patriotic Fund asking the Council to make a grant of $5,000 per month for this year to the fund.

Mayor Ketcheson—If the Council made a grant of $50,000 he thought that it would meet the requirements and probably leave a surplus of $50,000.

Ald Platt—We have given $5,000 and we should give $45,000 for the balance of the year, making a grant of $50,000 for the year.

Mayor Ketcheson—We could issue a debenture now for $25,000.

A motion prevailed that the city make a grant of $50,000 to the Canadian Patriotic Fund, and be paid over at the rate of $5,000 per month, commencing on April 1st.

SAILORS' RELIEF FUND

A motion moved by Ald. Marshall prevailed that a grant of $500 be made to the British Sailors' Relief Fund. Committee adjourned.

Premier Hearst Approves Increased Food Production

The following communication has been received by Mayor Ketcheson from Premier Hearst, relative to increased food production.

Toronto, March 27th 1917

To the Mayor of Belleville:—

I am glad to know that the matter of increased food production is being taken up in the city of Belleville. I earnestly commend the movement to their favorable notice. The need of production of food is one of the means and a very important one, by which we can contribute to win the war.

Surely we Canadians, who enjoy such security and comfort which our brave men are purchasing for us with their life's blood, will go in full duty in this regard. From what I know of my fellow-countrymen I am confident that they will not fail.

Let us realize that a great national effort is required, and that every piece of uncultivated land that conditions will permit of profitable cultivation is a loss to the community as well as a help to the enemy, since it reduces the supplies available for us to export and also tends to carry this war to a successful conclusion.

I am sure that if all of us understood how important food now is to the Empire, and how very great is the help the small producer can afford in the aggregate, it would not be necessary to urge a response to this appeal, but I make the appeal with the utmost confidence that every person in this Province regardless of age and sex, to do something, be it small or great, to provide for the needs of our Empire and our Allies.

It should be a great privilege to help in this way to win the war, and by the blessing of Providence and our own patriotic efforts, we can all do something for our country and community.

Yours sincerely,
W. H. HEARST

PERSONAL

St. Catharines, Ont.—"Two years ago I was in a very nervous, generally run-down condition, so much so that I awoke in the morning more tired than when I retired. The doctor thought I had nervous prostration and treated me for it but I got no benefit. I heard of Dr. Hamilton's Pills and decided to give them a trial. A friend who had been to your invalids' Hotel for an operation (which proved entirely successful) had used Dr. Hamilton's Pills with good results. I started to take them, and at the end of three weeks I felt another woman. My nerves will assert themselves without a single bad spell. I am taking it about three months now and am glad to tell any one how splendidly your medicine has benefited me." Mrs. Jean Lewis, 53 Niagara St., St. Catharines, Ont.

The mighty restorative power of Dr. Hamilton's Pills Prescription promptly causes all unusually troubles to disappear and brings back health and strength to the weak, nervous and exhausted women.

It is a wonderful prescription prepared entirely from nature's roots and herbs with no alcohol to fake, stimulate and no habit forming drugs. Dr. Hamilton's Pills also pain, headache, backache, low spirits, nervousness and sleepless nights vanish and without loss of time.

HELD UP BY GUNMEN

Victim Called For Help and Foot Pads Fled

TORONTO, March 29—While on his way to work, early this morning, a foreigner, living on Sutton street, New Toronto, was held up by two men, while crossing the fields near the G. T. R. tracks. One man covered him with a revolver while the other seized him by the throat. The victim, however, put up a struggle and calling loudly for help, attracted the attention of other workmen on their way to the various factories with the result that several ran to his assistance.

The hold-up men seeing that they were discovered, took to their heels, without obtaining any money and menacing their pursuers with their revolvers. Although followed closely, the foot pads managed to elude further pursuit when the yard of the Ontario Sewer Pipe Company was reached

THE NICKEL QUESTION.

Not a little political capital has been attempted to be made out of the nickel question, by Ontario Liberals. The report of the Commission appointed to inquire into the whole question which has been made, showing that all the clap-trap charges which have hurled at the Ontario Government have no foundation. In fact it has been charged that Canada's nickel resources were owned and controlled principally by Germans. A statement of the owners of shares in the mines prove the falsity of these charges.

A schedule is given showing the countries in which the shares of the International Nickel Company are held. There are 89,126 shares of preferred stock and 1,673,384 shares of common stock. The great bulk of the shares are held in the United States, Canada and Great Britain coming next. Only 256 shares of preferred and 452 shares of common are held in Germany, Russia and Austria. Full details are given of the reorganization of the International Company in 1912. On 31st December, 1916, the common stock stood at $41,834,600 and the preferred at $8,-812,600, making a total share liability of $50,647,200. Another table shows common stock dividends paid from 1910 to 1916, a total of $30,342,384. The profits from 1903 to 1916 aggregated $30,850,356; total assets, $61,-220,815. Little further allusion is made to the question of any possible sales of nickel to Germany during the war, the Commissioners stating that this question was not within their jurisdiction.

The Mond Nickel Company operates on a smaller scale than the Canadian Copper Company. It works the Garson, Worthington, Levack, Victoria and Kirkwood mines, the ore from which it smelts at the plant at Coniston, creosote or three years ago. The matter is sent to Clydach in Wales, where it is refined by the Mond process, invented by the late President of the company, Dr. Ludwig Mond. The products of the refinery are metallic nickel, nickel salts and copper sulphate, the market for the latter is in the vine-growing countries of Europe where it is used to combat the enemies of the grape.

TWO HEARTS THAT BEAT AS ONE

The Halifax Chronicle, Maritime Province champion of Laurier Liberalism, professes to be peeved that the statement should be made that "A vote for Laurier is a vote for Bourassa." Surely the Chronicle will be content to permit the question to be settled by Mr. Bourassa himself.

Writing in his daily newspaper Le Devoir not long ago Mr. Bourassa made the following definite charges, which, so far as we know, remain unchallenged:

"Let us suppose, for one moment," wrote Mr. Bourassa, "that Mr. Laurier's accusations are true and that the Nationalist resistance is inspired by hatred towards England, at what period were we given such lessons of hatred and distrust? At the school of the Liberal party, under the supreme inspiration of Mr. Laurier. It was Mr. Laurier who taught us, as early as 1890, that never would Canada take part in the wars of England.

"Really if the Nationalists, and generally the French-Canadians, do not feel sorry to shed their blood for England or for any other country than their own, Mr. Laurier may say: 'Here is the generation I have brought up and educated; here are the principles, the ideas and sentiments which I have impressed upon my dear compatriots.'"

Is it not therefore quite logical to say that "A vote for Laurier is a vote for Bourassa?"

SAVE IN THEIR OWN COURSE

The New York Tribune whose knowledge of imperial affairs is equalled by few American newspapers says that Canada's achievements during the past two years constitute "one of the most glorious chapters of the war. Outstanding American statesmen like Elihu Root, Theodore Roosevelt and William Howard Taft have paid the Dominion equally notable tributes; while great British journals like the Times, the Westminster Gazette and the Morning Post never tire of dwelling upon what Canadians have done. Only here in Canada, by individuals whose pride in country is submerged by slavery to party, is the Dominion's war effort slurred over, misrepresented and belittled.

A POLITICAL MESS.

A few months ago Hon. George P. Graham sent a grandiloquent cable to Lloyd George informing him that "Canadian Liberalism stands behind you until the war is won."

Sir Wilfrid Laurier proceeded to carry out the promise by telling Canadians, who have done miserably in the war, that they wouldn't be compelled to do more, which was bad enough, but now comes Hon. Charles Murphy calling Lloyd George a "traitor"—which is a sort of dangerous mood to be in standing behind anybody.

Poor Canadian Liberalism! Wonder just where it does stand? Certainly it's no easy task to stand behind Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Hon. Charles Murphy and Lloyd George at one and the same time.

If Hon. George don't soon cull off Hon. Charles, people will get suspicious that that cablegram was just a "scrap of paper."

Current Comment

If people only told what they know there would be less talking. Even a well preserved woman may have an acid disposition. If you have a little success don't camp on it for the rest of your life.

Meetings are being held in Montreal almost every night. The cry of anticipation is used. They are in reality meetings to blow into flame the independence cry of the Nationalists.—Huntingdon Gleaner.

Sentence of a year and a day in the United States penitentiary at Atlanta, and a fine of $1, was passed in the Federal Court at New York on George Taux Bacon, American newspaper man who pleaded guilty to going to England as a spy for Germany.

Having printed in the French language the names of 6,000 French prisoners of war and the places at which they are being held, the German Government is beginning the publication of the names of French soldiers buried behind the German lines and the location of their graves.

Sometimes the "Smart Aleck" gets caught, as the following despatch from Quebec to L'Evenement will testify: "In revisingthe National Service cards one was found bearing the following sentence: 'I shall enlist when Blondin enlists.' The name and address of the man who signed the card have been sent to a recruiting officer."

There are elements in Canada which profess great consideration for other nations and yes would coerce the smallest of them all. There are two nations in Ireland. The smallest is Ulster. Nothing will more surely and more quickly disrupt the British Empire than the application of force in dealing with the Irish question. There can be no coercion and no settlement without consent.

THE BLESSING OF SPRING

When the Spring is in the offing,
And the early birds are freezing,
When one-half the flocks are coughing,
Ash is the other half are sneezing;
When the sun is getting higher,
Though the fact's hard to remember;
And you huddle by the fire
Like a cold as in December;
Life and all its cares would crush us,
Floor us in a brace of shakes,
If it weren't for the luscious
Maple syrup on the cakes.

But a fellow keeps postponing
Day by day his preparation
For the final telephoning
For old Charon's transportation,
Though he know the Spring is lying
And his gripes is undiminished,
Still he does put off his dying
Till that can of syrup's finished.
Then, at last, the north shakes its wrath,
And the sleeping Spring awakes;
But we know it's true Higsaver
Was the syrup on the cakes!

Highly Pleased With Premier Borden's Speech

Hugh Formatily at Presentation of Mace—Ex-Mayor of London Eulogizes Premier

LONDON, March 29—When presented with the new mace yesterday afternoon by the former Lord Mayor and sheriffs, Premier Borden said: "I am confident that the cause for which the allied nations have taken up arms will be triumphant, because I believe in the future of humanity and civilization. We who have crossed oceans for the great common purpose, rejoice that our presence here has been coincident with the great successes which have attended the allied arms at the various theatres of war. There is reason to hope and good reason to believe that these successes will be continued, but whether there may be reverses or not, I know I speak not only for my own Dominion, but for the others, and for the Mother Country, when I say that our spirit is as resolute and our purpose as unassailed as when first we took up arms."

Premier Borden's speech at the Guildhall was typical of the quiet confidence and determination conveyed by Sir Robert throughout, and which received cordial assent in the plaudits from his hearers. There was almost dramatic silence in the Council Chamber when the Premier in his customary measured tones, related how some members of the Canadian Government met together at midnight, following the conflagration and arranged for the business of the Parliament to be carried on.

The speech was one of the happiest Premier Borden ever delivered on this side.

Sir Charles Wakefield, in presenting the mace, said: "We are proud of you, Sir Robert. For many years you have done your utmost in various ways for Canada and the commonwealth. Your brilliant and successful work has been alike our admiration and joy. The unity of our Empire, together with the unity of our brave allies is the despair of our foes, and for us is a sure pledge of victory. We are intensely proud of the magnificient troops from Canada. Their gallantry and sacrifices will never be forgotten. They have taken a noble part in saving the Empire, and, indeed, the world. Many have made the supreme sacrifice rather than that honor and freedom should perish from the earth.

The Duke of Connaught, who had intended to attend, wrote Sir Charles Wakefield, "I think it a most splendid and patriotic act of yours, and I know it is most heartily appreciated in Canada."

The ceremony was conducted with all the formality associated with such functions in the City of London. A guard of honor and a band from the Canadian Scottish, were on duty.

RETURNED TO POVERTY

Adopted by Rich Couple, Boy is Reclaimed by His Immigrant Mother

NEW YORK, March 29—Fate spun the wheel today for a five-year-old New York boy and changed him from George Sthre, a rich man's son, to George Petcenk, a poor immigrant woman's child.

Four years ago Mrs. Petcenk, facing starvation, took her baby to sisters of charity. It was adopted out and Mrs. Petcenk began a three years' search that ended when she found the boy in the luxurious home of Mr. and Mrs. George D. Shire.

The Shires were going to fight for possession of the boy, but when Mrs. Shire saw the look in the face of the little mother in court she told her husband they couldn't keep George. So the Shires sent him "home" today, with a ll his toys, his hobby horse and his drum.

SHE EXCUSED HIM

A gentleman, who discovered that he was standing on a lady's train, had the presence of mind to remark:

"Though I may not have the power to draw an angel from the skies, I have pinned one to the earth."

The lady excused him.

IDAHO WOMAN MADE WELL

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Did the Work. Nothing like it.

Aberdeen, Idaho.—"Last year I suffered from a weakness with pains in my side and back. A friend asked me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I did so. After taking one bottle I felt very much better. I have now taken three bottles and feel like a different woman. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the best medicine I have ever taken and I can recommend it to all suffering women."—Mrs. PERCY PRESTRIDGE, Aberdeen, Idaho.

Women who suffer from those distressing ills peculiar to their sex should be convinced by the many genuine and truthful testimonials we are constantly publishing in the newspapers of the ability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to restore their health.

To know whether Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, try it! For advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential), Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY

March 29th, 17

Dear Editor:—

Will you kindly allow me through the columns of your paper, lay before whom it may concern the following matter:

It has been brought before the Management Board of the Children's Aid Society the large number of children under the age of sixteen who frequent our street and other public places after nine o'clock at night without proper guardians, which is contrary to the law and good morals. After repeated complaints of several citizens, and realizing the necessity of some action being taken The Society have decided to try and remedy this evil and see that these children are at home at a proper and respectable hour. The Principals of our schools, the Press, the police and Sunday School workers and others who are interested in the welfare of our fair Dominion are earnestly asked to help to guard these young lives from the great danger that exists on the streets at night. I wonder if the parents really realize to the full, the terrible risk their children run in being allowed to be out at such unreasonable hours alone. Save the child. To be sure many a boy and girl has survived their temptation to become good citizens. But the boys generally being initiative they are apt to reproduce in their lives, the bad language, drinking, deception, and licentiousness they see and hear on the streets and to become indifferent and callous to them. At all events no responsible father or mother would tolerate having their children brought up among these things in the home, yet this is the environment into which parents are allowing their boys and girls to mingle with and have them become self-confessed, dirty-mouthed, filthy practising delinquents.

To the parents, who, too often are found to be chiefly responsible for their boys or girls going astray I earnestly beg of them to see that their children are in at the proper hour and not hanging round the Moving Picture Shows awaiting for some adult to come along and take them in.

If at any time I can be of service on behalf of the Children's Aid Society just drop me a line or phone 826. Any information will be gratefully received and any service I can give will be gladly given. We are out for the shielding the young lives of our city. Will you help? You can by keeping your children at home after nine at night.

Yours Sincerely,

THOS. D. RUSTON,
Inspector C. A. S., Belleville.

P. S.—Kindly read the extract from the Children's Protection Act:

Parents, teachers and officials are asked to assist in impressing upon children the necessity of being in their homes after 9 o'clock in the evening. The following amended law was passed by the Ontario Legislature, May 1913:—

CHILDREN'S PROTECTION ACT

Sec. 17.—(1) No child (under sixteen) shall loiter in any public place after 9 o'clock in the evening, or be there unless accompanied by his parent or guardian or an adult appointed by the parent or guardian to accompany such child.

(2) A child found in a public place after the hour named in subsection 1 unless so accompanied may be warned to go home by any constable or police officer, or officer of a Children's Aid Society, and if after such warning the child is found loitering in a public place such child may be taken by the constable or officer to its home, or to the Children's Shelter.

(3) A parent who permits his child to violate this section shall for the first offence, incur a penalty of $1 without costs, and for a second offence $2 and for a third, or any subsequent offence, $5. 3 Edw. VII. c. 69, s. 19, amended.

Sec. —2 (k) "Public Place" shall mean a street, highway or lane, whether or a thoroughfare or not, and a tavern or other place of public resort, and generally, any place to which the public have or are permitted to have access.

Information regarding work for Neglected and Dependent Children will be furnished on application to T. D. Ruston, Inspector Children's Aid Society, Belleville and Hastings County.

Pleasing Recital

Mrs. MacCall's Pupils Exhibit Great Talent—Miss Jessie Tuite Assisted

The Recital given last evening in the Y.M.C.A. lecture room by pupils of Mrs. MacCall, assisted by the pupils of Miss Tuite, before an excellent audience, was of high order, and reflects great credit upon Mrs. MacColl as teacher. MANY SETTLERS ARRIVED

Campaign to Obtain Farm Help Successful

OTTAWA, March 29—The campaign to secure farm help in the United States for Western Canada is proving successful, according to reports received by Hon. Dr. Roche. The immigration agents at St. Paul, Spokane and Duluth report that from March 15 to 24 they issued orders for 743 railway tickets for the West under the arrangement whereby the Government pays part of the fare. There were 400 issued at St. Paul, 200 at Spokane and 43 at Duluth. From March 1 to March 25, 867 settlers entered the port of Emerson. Fort Frances and Kingsgate, B. C. No report has recently been received from North Portal, Sask., and Coutts, Alta., through which most of the American settlers enter the West.

Drink Hot Water With Meals To Stop Stomach Disorders

A Physician's Advice

Thousands of unfortunate people suffer almost daily from dyspepsia, indigestion, fermentation, sour acid stomach, flatulence, gases or distress after eating. If they would only form the agreeable habit of slowly drinking with each meal a glassful of hot water containing a half a teaspoonful of pure Bisurated magnesia they would soon find their stomach so strengthened and improved that they would eat the richest and most delicious meals without the least symptom of indigestion.

Nearly all so called digestive troubles are caused by an excess of acid and an insufficient blood supply in the stomach, causing the food to ferment and sour before digestion can take place. A glass of hot water will draw the blood to the stomach and the bisurated magnesia will neutralize the stomach acids and make the food contents bland and sweet. Bisurated Magnesia is not a laxative, is harmless, pleasant and easy to take and can be obtained from any local druggist. Do not confuse Bisurated Magnesia with other forms of magnesia—milka, citrates, etc., but get it in the pure bisurated form (powder or tablets) especially prepared for this purpose.

IRISH REBELS FREED

Appeal by Mayor Curley of Boston Granted

NEW YORK, March 29—An Associated Press despatch from Boston today says:

"The release of two Irish rebels through the efforts of Mayor Curley, was announced today. The men, David O'Hanlon and his brother, Michael were arrested during the revolt in Dublin last April and sentenced to long terms of imprisonment. The three brothers, living in this city, appealed to Mayor Curley to use his influence to secure their release under the terms of the amnesty agreement promulgated by the British Parliament. The Mayor took up the matter with Ambassador Spring-Rice who informed him last night that the men had been set free.

Interswitching On Pinnacle Street

Col. Ponton, Secretary of the Belleville Board of Trade has received a copy of an order issued by the Dominion Railway Board relative as to interswitching in this city. The order is that the privilege of interswitching of track and interswitching be located on Pinnacle street at a point to be selected by the railways. The Board points out the benefit of the location north of Wharf Street, but it states that the railways could not agree among themselves as to the matter, hence Pinnacle Street was selected. The Board thinks this location will do for some time to come. The spurs to the tracks are to be put in by the C. P. R. The order was made by Assistant Chief Commissioner D'Arcy Scott and approved of by Commissioner McLean. The result thus reached in this matter is the outcome of the meeting of the Board held in this city on November 4th last.

MOOSE JAW, Sask., March 29—The resolutions presented to the Liberal convention here by the Resolutions Committee declare for free wheat, free agricultural machinery, and all things essential to the raising of grain and live stock products, a general lowering of customs duties on all necessaries of life, immediate reduction of present duties on all goods imported from Great Britain to one-half of the rates charged under the general tariff, and a policy of gradual reduction with a view to elimination of all trade restrictions within the Empire, the transfer of natural resources and school lands endowment fund to the province, changes in banking laws to provide for the establishment of local agricultural banks, removal of the C. P. R. tax exemption, and still greater control of the liquor traffic.

SENSATION CAUSED BY TANK ON THE STREET

Novel Recruiting Idea Introduced For the War Veterans' Draft

TORONTO, March 29—Rumbling and rolling up Yonge Street, the first "tank" to strike Toronto created much interest at noon yesterday. Side streets were swept of people rushing to view the formidable looking, if peaceful invader. Boys yelling their delight, raced after the big machine as it pushed up the streets. The "tank" took the town by storm.

It is a faithful duplicate of the "real thing" that so hocked the Germans at the Somme, and caused the attacking "Tommies" so much merriment that their fighting usefulness was almost lost in laughter. Thirty-five feet long, more than twice as wide as a bit truck and so high that the trolley wires were barely cleared by the "tank" makes an impressive picture. It appears to weigh three times its eight tons. Quick-firers traversing on open turrets and machine guns sweeping from apertures, heightening the air of realism.

On the sides were lettered "No! This isn't a real tank, but we'll take you where they've got the real thing." The 199th Regiment draft, with offices at 65 Queen street west, extends the invitation. The "tank" is a resourceful and novel recruiting idea, and it will be seen on the streets the greater part of the day for the next week.

WILL RAISE DRAFT FOR PRINCESS PATS

The G. G. F. G. Officers Expect Good Response

OTTAWA, March 29—The Governor General's Foot Guards have been authorized to recruit a draft for the Princess Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry; the regiment which has won for itself and for Canada such a name in the history of the British Empire. This announcement was made after the first parade of the Guards by Lieut.-Col. Cunningham.

About 150 men and file were present at the parade and some forty recruits were formed into a separate training class. Before addressing Lieut.-Col. Cunningham stated that full instructions as to the programme had been received and the regiment was authorized to recruit to the regular strength of an infantry regiment.

Volunteers, he stated, would be called for the home defence force, which, it is expected, will go into camp early in May. Joining the regiment, however, does not necessarily entail going to camp for the summer and pay and separation allowance are provided for the men volunteering for home defence.

In regard to the raising of a draft for the Princess Pats, Lieut.-Col. Cunningham stated that as that famous regiment had been largely recruited in Ottawa and was now under the command of one of the Guards' officers, he was sure the regiment would appreciate the honor and show by the response to the call for recruits for overseas that the confidence was fully justified.

Overworked Minister

Tells How Vinol Restored Strength and Vitality

Belleville people will realize that we could not publish such letters as the following if they were not genuine and truthful statements of facts. The Rev. Mr. Hughes, Holly Springs, Ark., says:

"I am a Methodist Minister, and suffered from broken-down nerves, loss of appetite and sleeplessness. I was weak, my circulation was very poor, and I was not able to do my duty in my Parish as I felt I should if I had taken various remedies but did not seem to get any better. Through Mr. Catlin of Searden, Ark., I learned of Vinol, and I began to use it. I regained my appetite, can sleep better and do more work."

There is no secret about Vinol, it derives its power to build up the overworked, brokendown nervous system from beef and cod liver peptones, iron and manganese peptonates, and glycerophosphates, etc. which it contains.

Anyone in Belleville who wishes to try Vinol can do so with the understanding that we will return their money if they are not satisfied. J. S. McKeown, druggist, Belleville, also at the best druggist in all Ontario towns.

TREATMENT OF ALIENS BY THE UNITED STATES

WASHINGTON, March 29—Secretary Baker took occasion to confirm the impression that the Government is planning to deal liberally with German and other foreign-born residents in the United States in the event of war. He was asked specifically if the War Department was negotiating with the Interior Department for sites of internment camps.

"There is no such plan in contemplation," he replied. "All resident aliens who are obedient to our laws will be perfectly safe from interference."

Asked if that applied to German army reservists, the secretary said:

"It applies to everybody who is here or who may be permitted to remain here and who behaves in accordance with our laws while here."

In other quarters it was indicated that German residents might be registered, in the event of war, in order that the Government could have some knowledge of their movements and make certain that no person guilty of misconduct shall escape justice.

TROOPS FROM CANADA ACTIVE

The Enemy's Front Has Not Strongly Held—No Prisoners Are Taken

Canadian Headquarters in France via London, March 31—Special— A break in the weather, with a return of quiet, closely resembling, again yesterday interfered with the artillery and aerial scouting on the Canadian front. Our infantry raided the enemy trenches at two points last night. His front line was not strongly held, and no prisoners were taken. However, there was evidence that he was shifting his main position in strength.

WOMEN TO TRAIN IN ARMY TACTICS

Miss Alice Carpenter Assured of Plan's Success

NEW YORK, March 30—That plan for training women in army tactics is going to be put through, Miss Carpenter, who suggested the project, has received assurance at her office, 56 East Second street, of the support of a sufficient number of women to put the plan a success.

Miss Carpenter will interview Navy League officers on Saturday in Washington. She will next meet Government officials for a discussion of the women's part in the event of war.

The committee in charge of the plan is considering a site on Long Island for the proposed camp, where they will concentrate their training in agriculture and cooking, besides drilling as some given last year at the Chautauqua for girls.

Will Actively Enter The War

President Meets With Cabinet for Last Time Prior to Assembling of Congress

WASHINGTON, March 30—As the Cabinet met to-day with President Wilson, for the last time before the assembling of Congress Monday, the consensus of opinion was that the United States was about to actively enter the war with Germany.

Plans for prompt organization of the House when it assembles on Monday, so that there may be no unnecessary delay in hearing President Wilson's address were made by Democratic caucus to-day, when Champ Clarke was nominated by acclamation for Speaker, and the Ways and Means Committee was instructed to report democratic committee selections directly to the House. This latter provision will eliminate the usual delay of submitting the selections to another caucus, and was made in the interest of saving time.

TRADE BREAKS RECORD

Nearly Billion Dollars Increase is Shown

OTTAWA, March 30—Canada trade for the fiscal year ending to-morrow has been of record growth. The increase will be nearly one billion dollars.

While complete figures are not yet available it is estimated that exports of coin and bullion the aggregate trade will exceed two billions dollars; imports are estimated at $825,000,000 and exports at $1,100,500,000 making a favorable trade balance of nearly $250,000,000. The total revenue will be $250,000,000, an increase of $50,000,000, which will be applied to current war expenditure.

RING ABOUT ENEMY BEING RAPIDLY WELDED

Germans Cling Tenaciously to St. Gobain Plateau—May Be Trapped—Artillerists Behind Them Shell Fire Forms a Barrage

PARIS, March 30—Special—Striking slightly forward from the La Fère region towards the southeast, and then from the Anizy region toward the northeast, General Neville is inexorably welding the ring of steel around the St. Gobain plateau which dominates the Laon-St. Quentin lines.

Although the Germans are attempting to resist with trench warfare and are striving to retain their present position, the irresistible onslaught of the French shock troops from the war movement by daily capture of more villages for strong supports.

Reeling from the stinging effects of a dozen blows inflicted by Nivelle the enemy has enabled his pulse to flow past Laon and as far as the outskirts of the town of St. Gobain itself, and from the north of Soissons within rifleshot of Anizy-le-Chateau, the Germans' grip on the high wooded plateau is weakening under the hail of high explosives and shrapnel.

"Just a little more French progress from the two points marking the gigantic pincers' movement," is the development of the German forces defending the plateau, the hail of shellfire forming the barrage which prevents them from withdrawing from their positions without being caught squarely in the open by the accurate French gunners.

The entrenched German positions taken daily from the Germans in the region Jottinck, the work and material expended on them that Field Marshal von Hindenburg intended to hold his line for a long time.

Friday's War Office report reads:

"To the north of the Aisne, between the Somme and the Oise the enemy artillery was bombarded several points on our front line. Our batteries have also severed energetically, especially in the sector of Vregny-Margival.

Activity At Dome Lake

PORCUPINE, March 30—Developments at the Dome Lake mine have been of a decided character of late. Word was received to the effect that Gobain Iti- self, and from the north of Soissons within rifleshot of Anizy-le-Chateau, the Germans' grip on the high wooded plateau is weakening under the hail

HUSBAND CALLED WIFE MAN-CRAZY

Tied Her Child Hair Ribbon To Go Out With Male Neighbor

MONTREAL, March 30.—The trial of a divorce suit brought by Theodore Longsdorf Earle, of White Plain, N. Y., son of Ellis Forter Earle, millionaire president of the Nipissing Mining Company, against Mrs. Hester Benwick Earle, in which he names Youlden Cowie, a member of the Soveuls Regiment, as correspondent, is in progress before Supreme Court Justice Arthur Tompkins and a jury. Mrs. Earle is countering with an action for separation, naming her husband in which she alleges cruel and inhuman treatment.

Mr. Earle claims his wife danced too much with men. He also says that Mrs. Earle made frequent trips to New York with Cowie. Mrs. Earle declares her husband frequently told her she was "man crazy" and snubbed all her men friends.

Although Mr. and Mrs. Earle sat near each other in court there was no sign of recognition between them. Near Mrs. Earle sat her mother, Mrs. Clarence H. Smith, who is prominent in Montclair, N.J., society.

Leo Parsons Davis, representing Earle, in the opening address to the jury, said his client was married in 1911, and was happy until the spring of 1916.

"Next door to Earle's house lived Youlden Cowie," said Mr. Davis, "So strong was Mrs. Earle's attraction for Cowie, that some times she tied her children to a shutter while she went out with him."

It is said Earle purchased his wife an automobile and when her husband was away at business Mrs. Hester and Mrs. Cowie out for long rides, leaving her children at home.

RUNAWAY BOY WAS FOUND ON FARM

Ran Away Because He Was Punished For Telling a Lie

KINGSTON, March 30—Because his mother punished him for telling a lie, a fourteen-year-old Kingston lad ran away from home over a week ago, but was located on Wednesday night by the father and Police Constable John Naylon, and is now back home again. The lad had been working for a farmer on Howe Island.

The wayward youngster secured a job with a farmer. He only stayed on the job a couple of days and came back to the city; but returned to the farm again. Word was received as to his whereabouts, and as a result Constable Naylon and the father went out to the farm and brought him home.

AMERICANS GO DOWN WITH SHIP

Special to The Intelligencer.

WASHINGTON, March 31—The British steamers Crispin and Snowdon Range, both with Americans on board have been sunk by a German submarine without warning.

Thaw Asks For Extradition

PHILADELPHIA, March 30.—That Harry K. Thaw, who has been adjudged insane by a Pennsylvania Sanity Committee, personally directed his own insanity proceedings, was the claim of Assistant District Attorney Black, of New York, here to-day. He made an appeal before Deputy Attorney-General Brown to have Thaw extradited to New York to stand trial for assault on Fred Gump, Jr., a Kansas City youth, in the Hotel McAlpin in January.

Insanity has never been held as a cause to prohibit extradition," Black added.

No decision is anticipated on the hearing this afternoon as indications are that arguments will continue very late. It is thought a decision will be temporarily withheld.

Scathing attacks were made on the Thaw family for using vast sums, as he alleges, to defeat the ends of justice in the arguments of Assistant District Attorney Black.

PUT ON OATH NOT TO TELL

Neutral Correspondent Has Peculiar Experience While in Berlin

Special to The Intelligencer.

NEW YORK, March 31—The Times correspondent at the Hague cables that a neutral traveller who left Berlin a week ago, declares that rioting was going on there, that he was driven to the station in a closed carriage, and he virtually was put on oath not to tell what he saw. Other evidence supports his statement.

During the Reichstag debate yesterday a Socialist speaker said the food scarcity had occasioned regrettable events at Hamburg, Magdeburg and elsewhere.

Poles To Decide Own Government

Tell Them to Arrange Own Affairs

LONDON, Mar. 30—The Russian official gazette has issued a proclamation to all Poles announcing formally the Government's wish that Poland decide for itself the form of Government it desires, says a Reuter despatch from Petrograd. The Government takes it for granted that the decision will be for the restoration of Poland, formed of all the three now separate parts. The Poles are to determine the form of their Government, a constituent assembly to be held at the capital of Poland on the basis of universal suffrage.

At a Lettish congress at Volmar a resolution was adopted urging the creation of an autonomous administration unit called Latvia and formed from the portions of the Provinces of Livonia, Vitebsk and Courland inhabited by Letts. The resolution declared firm adhesion to the new Russian Government, and says Latvia will remain an inseparable and loyal province of Russia.

The Admiralty Council has taken the oath of loyalty to the new Government.

WAGE DISPUTE UNSETTLED

Miners to Present Ultimatum Next Week

CALGARY, Alta., March 30.—Representatives of United Mine Workers in session with the Western Coal Operators' Association concerning a working agreement for the coming year will adjourn to-day without arriving at any decision on the wage controversy. It is understood the miners will report back to their unions in session with the Western Coal District 18 after the expiration of the contract on April 1, with the option for the miners of suspending work if the conference is unsatisfactory.

TWO NEWFOUNDLAND SCHOONERS LOST

NEW YORK, March 30.— The Associated Press this afternoon carries the following:

News of the loss of two Newfoundland sch-mers was received here to-day with the arrival of the British freight steamer Armonia at an American port from Europe.

The freighter brought members of the crews of the Glenwood, which sank on March 7, while going from St. John's, Nfld., with sail, and the Luck House, lost on March 2 during a voyage from Breton Harbor, Nfld. The schooners were idle European waters.

The Armonia brought also five of the crew of the Newfoundland schooner Flirtation, previously reported lost while on a voyage from Santa Pola, Spain, to Gloucester, Mass., early this month.

CAUGHT SINKER OF LACONIA

Ordona Passengers Say Submarine Commander Was Landed a Prisoner

NEW YORK, March 31.—Special—The officers and crew of the Canadier Ordona, which arrived here yesterday from Liverpool, were cheered up before they sailed, by the news that the German submarine which sank the Laconia on February 25 and the Folia on March 11, among other vessels, had been destroyed off Cuxhaven, on the southwest coast of Ireland, between the Tuskars and Queenstown, on March 15.

Several of the crew saw the Commandant in German naval uniform landed by a patrol boat at the Prince's Landing Stage at 4 o'clock on Friday afternoon, March 16, and marched under an armed escort, consisting of a Sergeant and twelve soldiers with fixed bayonets, to the Dale Street Police Station, where he was locked up

Russian Officials Visit General Army Headquarters at the Front

Special to The Intelligencer

LONDON, March 31—A Reuter despatch from Petrograd says Prince Kauff, Russian Premier and all other members of the Government left Petrograd today to visit the general headquarters at the front. The delegation also says the Russian Government has decided to abolish the death penalty.

JOHN FOX'S DEATH

Formerly Dry Goods Merchant in Belleville Madoc and Quebec

COBOURG, March 30.—The funeral of Mr. John Fox, one of the best known men of the town, took place here this morning. Rev. Father Fox of Glengarry county, is a brother. Mr. Fox was a native of Ireland, and seventy-two years of age. He entered into the dry goods business at Belleville with a branch store at Madoc, and after carrying this on for some years, went to Quebec, where he was similarly engaged. He had resided in Cobourg, where for a number of years he had held the position of collector of the Canal. Of his family two daughters survive: Mrs. Fred Downe, Toronto, and Mrs. Morley Kinsman, Oshawa. Five sons predeceased their father. Mr. Fox is survived by his wife, before her marriage Miss Grogg. The interment was in St. Michael's Cemetery here.

RUSSIA TAKES OVER GRAND DUKE'S ESTATE

LONDON, March 30.—The Russian provisional government, says a despatch from Petrograd to-day, has decided all apanages to be national property and that the revenues from them shall be turned into the national treasury.

The income from the Grand Ducal apanages alone is estimated at more than 25,000,000 rubles yearly.

WILSON STIFFENING HAND TO MEET MERCILESS HUN

German Chancellor's Eleventh-hour Efforts to Avert Another Calamity Are Specious and Vain—Situation in U. S. Capital Tense With Steady Approach of Monday's Fateful Hours

WASHINGTON, D.C., March 31.— Special—Washington waits for war. It's too-proud-to-fight days are over. Reluctant officialdom has come to a realization that it cannot reason with a madman nor preserve an attitude of "armed neutrality" toward a murderer. President Wilson has decided to discard the pen and draw the sword.

The situation is tense. There are still persuasive pacifists. There are still politicians whose chief concern is the Teuton vote. There are still influential bodies of hyphenated hybrids. There are still get-rich-quick interests, spelled with and dominated by the big capital "I", who prefer and plenty to sacrifice and honor. But the latest William Jennings Bryan epistle to Congress has fallen worse than flat; it is regarded with mild contempt; and the pro-peace Sunday peace parade through the streets of the Capital has been prohibited, and the proposed demonstration by pro-German citizens and commercial concerns has been abandoned. There is growing general determination that the United States shall play the part of a nation, that the nation must stand by its words, make good its declarations, and avenge the blood of its citizens slain on the high seas.

Von Bethmann-Hollweg's speech to the Reichstag concerning Germany's policy toward the United States is too specious, and his bland protestations of friendly sentiment come too late in the day. The Chancellor's utterances do not alter one iota the attitude of the White House. If gossip around the Capitol can be credited, President Wilson has recently got a better idea of those with whom he has to deal. The intrigues of Von Bernstorff, the machinations of the now closed Germany Embassy, not to mention the Mexican not devility, were a prelude to the word-of-mouth reports of his own recalled Ambassador Gerard. Just what the latter told the Chief Executive is not known, but rumor speaks with amazing definiteness as to its character and scope. Mr. Gerard evidently saw and heard much while he was handling American and British interests in Berlin. The White House now realises that war with Germany is no Spanish-American Manila Bay picnic party, or no Mexican holiday excursion. It knows it has to deal with deliberate dishonesty, trickery and treachery in the shape of ruthless barbarism and savagery in the administration of the Prussian military system.

MAKE SWEEP OF ONE MILE

British Troops Advance Over a Seven Mile Front in Bendicourt Region

Special to The Intelligencer.

MONTREAL, March 31.—The capture of Bendicourt, Reuss Agency says: With the British armies afield, —British troops today swept forward in a mile advance over seven mile fronts in the Bendicourt region seriously menacing important German base of St. Quentin.

Five towns were captured in this sweep toward the Hindenburg line. Ground gained constitutes an advance of about a mile and a half over the recently won line of battle against the Teutons.

Towns occupied by the British in their advance were Hendricourt, Stemille, Vermand, Marteville, and Sayecourt.

EXCHANGED BLOWS AT BOARD MEETING

TORONTO, March 30.—Controllers Foster and Cameron figured in a lively row at the meeting of the Board of Control to-day. A recommendation sent up by Commissioner of Works Harris for an appointment to the roadway staff was the occasion of a strife. Controller Foster suggested, as usual, that a returned soldier should be appointed, and Controller Cameron objected to interference with the heads of departments.

Foster insisted and Cameron stated that Foster was always talking about returned soldiers and never doing anything for them. This was too much for the economist of the board to swallow, and he promptly gave Cameron the lie and chasing round the table laid violent hands on the Controller. Mayor Church thereupon interferred and declared the meeting adjourned, but Cameron had the last word. "You called me a liar," he said. "I wish you were twenty years younger."

FRENCH MAKE ADVANCES IN SECTORS OF NEUVILLE AND VREGNY

Special to The Intelligencer.

PARIS, March 31.—An Official statement says that French troops last night successfully attacked the German positions south of the Ailette River and made important progress in the region of Neuville-en-Beine. They secured to the east of a line running from Neuville-Our Marginal to Vregny, northeast of Soissons. A number of points of support were brilliantly captured by French forces in Champagne region. Five violent counter attacks delivered by Germans on positions recaptured yesterday by the French west of Maison de Champagne were checked, the Germans sustaining heavy losses.

LOAN ALLIES FIVE BILLIONS

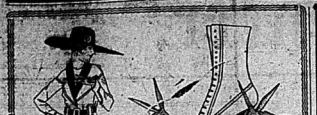
United States Can Bring Huge Finances to War

NEW YORK, March 30—The United States is able to loan the Allies the enormous sum of five billions without noticeably affecting the financial situation of this country.

An official of one of the largest American banking institutions says that the United States is in a position to loan five times the amount of the national debt to the Allies in case of war between the United States and Germany.

WARNS SHIPPERS REGARDING NORTH SEA

Special to The Intelligencer.



LONDON, March 31—The British Admiralty announce that in view of the unrestricted use of mines and submarines by the Germans and the sinking of merchantmen without regard for safety of the crews the area of the North Sea, which is rendered dangerous to all shipping by operations against the enemy, be extended on and after April first.

ADVANCE IN MESOPOTAMIA

Special to The Intelligencer.

LONDON, March 31—British troops in Mesopotamia advancing to the north of Baghdad have seized the town of Kalaat Felujap and Areas of Deltawah and Sindiyah and Sheraban, according to an official statement issued today by British Bureau. British troops are now confronted by the remnants of the Turkish army, which retreated from Ket-el-Mara, where it was reinforced by fresh units near Deltawah and Sindiyah.

The idea that to sink a few old American vessels, coming down from the west, will drive Britain to her knees is certainly worthy the colossal brain of Dr. Zimmermann.

IS YOUR HAIR SLIPPING?

The presence of dandruff and fall-ladies ing hair conveys a warning which it is best to heed. At first the loss of hair may be so slight as to be hardly noticeable. But no matter how little may be the fall each day, it is working toward the same end. The inevitable result, and that is total baldness.

You may have hair enough today, but how about tomorrow? and next year after? Dandruff and falling hair mean baldness sooner or later and demand the immediate regular and energetic use of Newbro's Herpicide. It keeps the scalp free from dirt and dandruff and allows the hair to grow abundantly and naturally. By this means total incurable baldness may be prevented.

It stops itching almost instantly.

You may be told that there are remedies "just as good as Herpicide." Then you ought to take chances with nor can you expect to obtain results from "an off brand" article. Insist on having genuine Herpicide, the Original Germ-Remedy for Dandruff.

You can get a sample of this delightful hair dressing and a booklet on the care of the hair by sending ten cents in silver or postage, to The Herpicide Co., Dept. S, Detroit, Mich. Try Herpicide Soap and you will never be without it.

Sold everywhere in 50 cent and $1.00 sizes and guaranteed to give satisfaction or money refunded.

Applications obtained at the better barber shops and beauty parlors.

DEAF PEOPLE

"FRENCH ORLEKS" absolutely cures Deafness and Noises in the Head, no matter how severe or long-standing the case may be. Hundreds of persons whose cases we deemed to be incurable have been permanently cured by this New Remedy. This Wonderful Preparation acts directly to the actual seat of the trouble, and restores the natural vibrations which produce perfect hearing.

Mrs. Rose, of Portland-crescent, Leeds, says: "Mr. Orlexs has completely restored me after twelve years' suffering."

Many other equally good reports to hand. Try one box to-day. It can cost it nothing unless it entirely relieves you. Address: ORLEKS CO., SOUTHVIEW Institute of Sidney Township, a patriotic meeting was held last evening in the hall in Frankford Village. There was a good attendance and much interest was manifested in the proceedings. Dr. Simmons of Frankford occupied the chair, and in that capacity made an address. Rev. Mr. Appleton and Mr. A. R. Walker of Belleville, were the principal speakers, and their remarks were attentively listened to by all present. Rev. Mr. Knox also gave a brief address. The speeches were interspersed with vocal selections by Mrs. Young and Miss Ostrom. An orchestra, which was present gave a number of pleasing selections.

Behind the Slats

Story of Revenge For A Political Crime

By EDWARD COOLEDGE

I was making a tour of Switzerland on foot. All the luggage I had with me was strapped on my back, and in my hand I carried a light alpenstock.

One morning I started from Interlaken to walk to Thun. The road I took leads along the west bank of Lake Thun, or Thunder lake, one of the prettiest bodies of water in Switzerland. From the road one has a perpetual view of the Bernese Alps, the Eiger, the Monk and the Jungfrau, whose snowy peaks rising high in the heavens may often be mistaken for light clouds. The sun was shining on the lake, over whose bosom the little steamers running between Interlaken and Thun loaded with tourists were passing back and forth.

Not far from Interlaken the road passes through a tunnel in a perpendicular cliff that forms the bank of the lake. While walking through this tunnel I caught up with a youth who, judging from his pack, was making a foot journey the same as I. He spoke to me in German, the language of that part of Switzerland, but I signified that I did not understand him, and he repeated his question in French.

"How far is it, sir, to Thun?"

"Ten or twelve miles, I believe."

He was inclined to walk me go on ahead of him; but, preferring company, I adapted my gait to his. He was apparently not more than eighteen years old. No beard had yet started on his face, and his hair and complexion were fair. I took him for a Swede or a Norwegian, though such light hair and skin are common in northern Germany. We walked on together, chatting and enjoying the beautiful panorama of the lake, the hills beyond and still beyond these the mountains. For a while the young man was careful in his speech. He then discovered that I was an American and that my knowledge of his language was not a very great one, whereupon he felt more at his ease, and I was soon in possession of the fact that he was highly educated and one of those persons who are born to ride deeply. I was astonished at his familiarity with the various schools of philosophy. That he was a dreamer as well as a thinker was apparent from ideas he advanced, which to me seemed a century ahead of the times.

At Meiringen we halted for luncheon. Between mouthfuls and drinking beer at a table under the trees in front of the hotel. We rested for an hour after luncheon, smoking, I my pipe, my companion cigarettes (the usual form of smoking in Europe).

The subject that most interested him was America and how to get there. I told him that it all depended on where one started from and waited for him to tell me from which point he intended to begin. "The Riviera," was his reply. Whereupon I informed him that from any point on the Riviera—say Nice or Mentone—one might by a short railway journey reach Genoa, from which port steamers are constantly leaving for the United States. He seemed much interested in this and more so when I told him that I had engaged passage by that route myself. When I asked him if he had any intention of visiting my country he replied that he did not.

We reached Thun about 5 o'clock. After a refreshing supper we sat down on a glass of beer in the gardens of the Kursaal, I went to my hotel, my companion, whose name we did not know, to a hotel where many people traveling afoot stopped. I was not one of these acquaintances, as I do. Of all those I have met in any of my tours Dr. Krunds made the most impression upon me was the young philosopher about whom I learned nothing.

I went by rail from Thun to Paris, from there to Nice and from Nice to Mentone. I found at Mentone General A., who had been minister of the Interior in Russia. Indeed, I stayed at the same hotel with him. Those who knew told me that several attempts had been made upon his life by revolutionists, or, as they were then called, nihilists, and that he was well guarded.

During his incumbency in office he had sent hundreds of people to Siberia, besides those he had executed. He had been proscribed by the nihilists, they having vowed to kill him. I asked why he should dread his enemies so far from home and was told that they could work better advantage beyond the Russian borders than within them. In Russia the general's movements would be watched. In other countries more or less red tape was necessary to arrest a suspect, and before it could be done an assassination might take place. General A. was spending the season at Mentone for his health, being afflicted with some nervous disorder. It seemed to me that a man living in fear of his life would be likely to have nerve trouble. He was very regular in his habits, getting out to walk in the morning and to drive in the afternoon, always attended by one of his citizens' dress, who closely eyed every one who approached him.

Notwithstanding the precautions taken the general was assassinated at Mentone, and at the time I was there. It was in June, and the days were long. About half past 8 o'clock one evening I went to my room after dinner and, lighting a cigar, stood for a moment at my window, which was on the north side of the hotel. Several buildings were near, and from a window of one of them I saw a puff of smoke and heard a crack. There was nothing to be seen in the window, for the blinds were closed. If a shot had been fired it must have been from between the slats.

The occurrence did not make much impression on me, but an hour later, as going downstairs, I found the hotel proprietor, the servants, the guests, all in horror stricken. On asking the cause I was told that General A. had been shot by some one who had fired a ball set into his room through an open window. Upon asking the time the affair occurred I was told that it was about half past 8.

I knew perfectly well that I had seen the muzzle of the weapon that had done the deed and could point out the window from which it had been fired, but I held my peace. Some one had revenged a long list of barbarities visited upon those who had dared to attempt to build up an oppressed people, and I was not interested in taking any part in the affair. I inquired if it was known from what point the shot had been fired, and was told that it was believed it had come from a tree that grew near the general's window. No one knew that I was the only person who had witnessed the firing. He gained the information I possessed the police would have a description of the person or persons occupying the room from which the assassin had done the work, and they would be pretty sure to make the arrest. As for me, I had nothing with the revolutionists, I had no sympathy with them.

I was pleased, however, possessing such a secret, that the time had come for me to leave Mentone. My presence was due to sail from Genoa the next morning, and I took a night train for that city. I stood, shortly before sailing, on the upper deck looking at the lights of Genoa, some burning aboard, some going ashore, all infected by that exotic mud to a steamer about to leave port.

A girl came up the gangway whose face was familiar to me. Where had I seen her? It bothers one to see a face without being able to place it, and this case annoyed me more than usual. However, since I could not recollect where I had seen it I ceased to think about her, interesting myself in other persons. My cabin was on the starboard quarter of the Mediterranean, and I rejoiced at the prospect of getting home.

During the next few days I looked for the girl whom I had noticed going aboard, both on deck and in the dining saloon. I did not see her till we had passed Gibraltar and were headed on to the Atlantic. Then one morning, while walking on the lighter deck, I saw her sitting where there were no other passengers, I suddenly came upon her and found her in tears. She started and put a handkerchief to her eyes. I had a projection that shielded her from the wind.

She turned white as a cloth.

At first I thought I would stop and ask her what was the matter, but I turned her eyes away from me, and I saw that either I had made a mistake in supposing that I had seen her or she had no desire to continue the acquaintance. But why should she be so big with me? I suspected her? I thought over every one I had met abroad—in search of recruits. He certainly was very highly of the entertaining qualities of the ladies and people in general, and I viewed with favor the officers and men quartered there.

MARY PICKFORD IN GREAT ROLE

"Less Than the Dust," at Griffin's Theatre Last Night

The unequalled and ever increasing popularity of charming Mary Pickford were amply testified to at Griffin's Theatre last night, when a capacity house was the order on the occasion of the initial performance of "Less Than the Dust." The vehicle provided by Miss Pickford in the illustration of the quaint lyrics and prose of India is a powerful one, rendered available by the active brain and pen of Mr. Hector Turnbull. It often befalls every opportunity for a display of her rare versatile and winsome art, and as usual Miss Pickford makes the role a most natural one in her delineation of the waif of the east. Her various personality, childish mannerisms and healthy in-nention were never more strikingly shown. The story is a gripping one, being built around the fate of an English child the daughter of a dope fiend, who has been placed in the care of a native, on the death of her mother. She is educated in the native style, worships the sacred cow, etc. A delightful tinge of romance intrudes through the piece with the meeting of the girl and an English officer, whose life she saves during a rebellion of the natives. The final realization of her early birth and a home in England form a happy climax. The film is elaborately screened. The settings and costumes are both beautiful and original. Thrilling scenes such as the rebellion, with its horrors make it a gripping production. The many quaint and characteristic scenes of India, with its bazars, tribes, etc., make the film a pleasure to see from start to termination. It will be repeated again this evening, and none should miss it.

DUSTIN FARNUM IN "A SON OF ERIN," AT GRIFFIN'S MONDAY

Dustin Farnum appears at Griffin's on Monday and Tuesday evening in the Peramount Production of "A Son of Erin." Mr. Farnum is surrounded by a strong cast of Lasky photoplayers, the story being as follows: Dennis O'Hara is a poor Irish peasant lad, who loves pretty Irish Katie B. Grady. Dennis dreams and longs to go to the land of promise, the United States. He is lured by the extravagant newspaper accounts of how easy it is for a strapping Irish man to get appointed to the New York police. It is Katie O'Grady who without knowing it, by denying sacrifices, pays for his passage to America. Arriving in America, he actually does get on the Metropolitan police, and sp writes to Katie. But Katie has been told by American tourist of "faked" exclusive stories to be obtained at Coney Island, and so does not believe Dennis' photo taken in police uniform. The plan is made for Katie to come to America to marry Dennis; but as Katie suspected, Dennis O'Hara's part is for sappy Irish lad—a policeman. He has lost his position through a grit exposure in which, though innocent, he is complicated. On the same telegram with the above five part offering the Mutual News Weekly, and two selected comedies will also be located including Charlie Chaplin's latest comedy, "The Count."

MILLION DOLLAR DOLL DELIGHTS LONDON, ONTARIO AUDIENCE

At Griffin's Thursday

The London Free Press thus reviewed the initial performance of "The Million Dollar Doll" at the Grand Opera House in that city, and which comes to Griffin's Belleville next Thursday night, speaks of the performance in the following glowing terms: "The musical comedy, "The Million Dollar Doll," delighted two large audiences at the Grand Theatre on Saturday. It is just a little different entertainment from the usual musical offering and very much superior to the last two or three that have been seen here.

There is a freshness and originality in the presentation of the principals and chorus that gets over the footlights and permeates the entire audience. The comedy is handled with the hands of clever comedians who do not strain for effect, but work naturally, with pleasing results.

Father And Son Banquet A Success

Splendid Address Given by Mr. F. E. O'Flynn at Kingston

(Kingston Standard)

Another successful father and son banquet was held at the Y.M.C.A. last evening, which was thoroughly enjoyed by a large number. F. E. O'Flynn, K.C., of Belleville, was the chief speaker and delivered a timely address, while several prizes were presented by Mayor Hughes. The repast served was dainty and appetizing and the cravings of the inner man was amply looked After. Following the luncheon the first item taken up was the awarding of trophies, etc. The Canadian Standard Efficiency Shields were presented to those boys who had qualified in the intellectual, swimming and jumping tests; 23 boys being successful in getting the necessary 65 per cent. In the standards Mayor Hughes in presenting these bars, paid great tribute to the Association, which referred to as "the greatest institution on earth," inasmuch as it was engaged in that most important of industries, character building, and it was the institution that could follow our brave soldiers right through the game even to the firing line. The speaker also made an appeall for the co-operation of both the fathers and sons in greater food production, and stated that the city was willing to assist.

The handsome "Bible Study" the gift of the Board of Directors for annual competition was presented by Mr. Oliver Chown, the President of the Association, to the "Four Square" club who are under the leadership of physical director Powers. The president also said he was glad that this group of boys already to step into senior ranks, considered it worth their while to devote some time to the most important of all books, Jack Benton received the trophy.

MR. O'FLYNN'S ADDRESS

The speaker of the evening, Mr. F. E. O'Flynn, K.C., of Belleville, was then introduced, and for more than an hour held the interest of the large audience which included many small boys. The topic of his address was: "The value of the boy to future Canada" and it would be impossible in small space to do justice in reporting this eloquent and amusing war in which the speaker analyzed the boy who will have to step into the shoes of our big men. A boy's value was reckoned by the amount of service he could render in whatever circumstances he was placed. There were no real boys, only some who required little different handling. If we wanted to get the best out of he boy we must sudy him, and if a "cuff in the ear" was the only thing we could give him, we must expect him to respond in the same manner. Wherever a boy was concerned to do he best, in nine cases out of ten an answering smile would be the result. The speaker made an earnest appeal to the boy to be a christian, as he a man now of sixty had been brought to see that that was the only kind of a life worth while. Appealing to the fathers, he asked them to remember that the boy was "walking in daddy's footsteps" and illustrated the remark with a touching little story which will linger in the minds of the daddies who though it worth while to come over with the boy and have one evening, at least of fellowship together.

Mr. O'Flynn reminded the boys that the city of Kingston had sent two of Canada's finest premiers in person of Sir John A. MacDonald, and Sir Oliver Mowatt, and that for all they know big jobs were ahead of them if they were willing to prepare for them

While some men may carry a different umbrella every time it rains and profess wealth, they will always be open to suplicioh among the unfortuned masses.

The Woman Lawyer

A Reform which the Legislature of Quebec has refused to accept is making much progress elsewhere. The member of the Quebec Assembly who championed the cause of the women's right to be admitted to practice at the Bar has no longer in the House. Doubtless another will take up the measure, and at the next session the question will be, likewise, thrashed out again. That in the end Quebec will grant the women's request in this particular matter may be safely predicted. Public opinion is fast accepting with satisfaction measures concerning the rights of women which a few years ago were regarded with little favor. Quebec may be slower than some other countries to feel the force of this movement, but that it will yield to some extent is almost certain.

England, usually slow to undertake important changes, is appreciating the strength of the women's movement. In some few women's suffrage will be one of the after-the-war measures. As to the admission of women to practice as lawyers, the opposition is likely to take place. A bill to provide for such a change came before the House of Lords a few days ago. It was introduced and cordially supported by Lord Buckmaster, who was lately Lord Chancellor. The present Lord Chancellor, while opposed to the measure, stated that the Government proposed to leave the question entirely to the judgment of the House, a significant intimation that the Government could not be persuaded to set itself against the measure. The Archbishop of Canterbury, conservative of Conservatives, strongly opposed the bill. He admitted the superiority of intellect possessed by the fair sex in medicine, but argued that they were entirely unfitted for the duties of the legal profession. Lord Somner, Earl Selborn and Earl Loreburn supported the bill. In reply to Lord Halsbury, one of the speakers reminded him that the bill did not propose to compel any women to practice law, or to compel anybody to employ a woman lawyer, but merely that if a woman was prepared to undertake the long period of study necessary to qualify, and to submit to the severe examinations provided by the Bar Society, there was no reason why she should not be allowed to have the right to practise. Although several of the Lords thus took strong grounds against the bill, they did not press for a division. The measure passed practically unanimously. The House of Lords, noted for its strong conservatism having thus passed the measure there is little doubt that the Commons will assent to it, and that it will become law at an early date.

Nearer home, the same question has been engaging the attention of the Nova Scotia Legislature. Dr. Grace, one of the members for Pictou, himself a lawyer, introduced a bill to admit women to the Bar. A meeting of the bar society was at once called. There was an impression that the society would not view the change with approval. But only one or two of the members dissented from a resolution approving of the proposal. The bill has since passed the House of Assembly unanimously. The possibility of opposition in the Legislative Council is suggested, but there is little doubt that that chamber also will pass the bill.

U. S. Takes A New Base This Week

Will Raise Flag in Danish Islands To-day—Two Warships Perform Ceremony of Exchange

WASHINGTON, March 30.—The most strategic site for a naval base in the Caribbean Sea, long sought by the German Government, will pass into the hands of the United States Government next Monday when the third country will formally take over the ownership of the Danish West Indies. At noon, when the Stars and Stripes will take the place of the Danish flag on the Governor's mansion at St. Thomas, Secretary of State Lansing will pay over to Constantin Brun, the Danish Minister at Washington, a check on the United States Government for $25,000,000, the largest sum ever paid out by the United States for the purchase of territory. The Louisiana purchase cost $15,000,000 and the Philippines $20,000,000.

For years the German Government has been trying to obtain possession of the islands and on previous occasions has succeeded in preventing the United States from acquiring them. After the present war started and the German submarine campaign increased the likelihood of the United States breaking off relations with Germany, the Government redoubled its efforts to get the Islands. In spite of German intrigue at Copenhagen it succeeded in reaching an understanding at a cost more than three times the amount at which the islands were originally offered.

In announcing to-day the date for the transfer of the new possessions Secretary of the Navy Daniels also announced that he would be met by the President of Rear Admiral James H. Oliver, now chief of naval wireless system, as governor of the islands until such time as a more permanent form of government can be determined upon.

Although it will be impossible for Gov. Oliver to be on hand when the Islands are transferred, the naval transport Hancock and the Olympia have been ordered to be on hand for the formal ceremonies.

What name will be given to the new possession is a question to be left to Congress. In the commission bestowed on Gov. Oliver they are referred to simply as the Virgins. Legally the name by which they were originally known. It has been suggested that they be named the Dewey Islands, in honor of Admiral George Dewey.

It is assumed that Gov. Oliver will make recommendations in the near future as to what steps the American Government should take to fortify the islands as a naval base. At present the Hamburg-American line, a German corporation, maintains enormous shipping terminals there, together with a large reserve supply of coal and a powerful wireless station.

Appearances may be deceitful, but they are not half so tricky as some mens' words.

PETERBORO' PEOPLE

send in their budget of evidence to prove the remarkable up building, invigorating influence of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. During the last few weeks thousands of Peterboro' people have proven to their own satisfaction that there is nothing like this great food cure to overcome headaches, sleepless ness. indigestion. weak heart action and the many ills consequent on thin, watery blood and exhausted nerves.

Sleepless and Restless

Mrs. Chas E. Wiley, 136 Loeden St., Peterboro,' Ont., writes: "About three years ago I was suffering from nervous debility, sleeplessness and loss of appetite. My nerves were so bad that I could not attend church or any place where there was a crowd or excitement. During the night I would lie awake for two or three hours. I took only several regulries and taken treatments from doctors. The doctor finally said he could not do any more for me and I was left a nervous wreck. I started using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. I had read in the newspapers of how highly it was recommended, so I secured some and continued using it. After the third box I noticed an improvement, so I kept on taking them until I had used eight or nine boxes. The results were such that I could sleep and eat well and could go to places where there was a crowd or excitement, without any difficulty. My health was generally benefited greatly. Since then, from time to time, when I am not feeling up to the mark, I take a few of the Nerve Food Pills, as I consider they send this treatment to anyone suffering from nervous trouble of any kind."

Children Benefited

Mrs. James Bogue, 220 Dublin Street, Peterboro, Ont., writes: "Three years ago I noticed that our children seemed to be suffering from bad nerves and poor appetites, and were inclined to be anaemic. Knowing the good of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, I started to give them a treatment of this medicine. I found it built them right up, made them bright and cheery and restored their usual good health.

"I have also used the Nerve Food myself, and found it very beneficial for nerves and heart. In fact I have found Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to be such a valuable medicine for general family use that I have recommended it to many of our friends and acquaintances."

Palpitation of the Heart

Mrs. J. D. Craig, 45 Mardonell St., Peterboro' Ont., writes: "Several years ago when my family was small, I became run down and weak, and was bothered with palpitation of the heart. I commenced using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and found such good results that I continued the treatment until I had taken about four or five boxes. It helped me and made me feel better afterward. Since then, when I feel that I need a tonic, I take two or three boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, finding the same good results each time. I can also speak highly of your Kidney-Liver Pills. I have every confidence in the use of Dr. Chase's medicines as family remedies, and am always keep some of them in the house."

Neuralgia Cured

Mrs. W. T. Abbott, 536 Patterson St., Peterboro', Ont., writes: "My system was in a rundown condition, and I was troubled with nervousness and sleeplessness. For some time also I had been bothered with neuralgia, and, although I tried many remedies, I got but without success. Upon the advice of a friend I commenced using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and found in five or six days that my neuralgia was cured, and I have not been troubled in this way since. I also find that now I can eat and sleep well, and I give full credit of this great benefit to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. I might also mention that I had lost considerable in weight, but after using Dr. Chase's Food I gained back the flesh I had lost. My husband has also found Dr. Chase's Nerve Food of great benefit to him, and uses it when he feels run down from overwork. I have recommended the use of this great medicine to many of my friends and acquaintances."

Severe Headaches

Mrs. J. Riedeman, 104 Adeline St., Peterboro', Ont., writes: "I was troubled with nervous headaches, which at times were so severe that I could not do my work. I also suffered from indigestion and pains in the back. From reading in the newspapers of the benefits other people were deriving from the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I was encouraged to try it. I began using them, finding good results from the beginning, so I continued the treatment until I obtained great benefit. Now I do not have the nervous headaches so frequently or so severe. My appetite is much better, and in fact I am better in many respects, and would not wish to be without Dr. Chase's Nerve Food in the house now. I have recommended it to quite a number of my friends, who also find good results from their use."

Run-Down Systems

Mr. George Lee, 767 Water St., Peterboro', Ont., writes: "I used Dr. Chase's Nerve Food some time ago when I was in a rundown condition, and found them to be just what I required to build up my system. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food also worked wonders for my wife. She had been suffering from nervousness, and could not get a good night's rest. She could wake up at different times during the night, sometimes jumping right out of the bed. She tried doctors' medicines without success, and finally commenced taking Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. The first box helped a little, the second box benefited her more, and after using three she was all right, she grew strong and healthy. She has recommended this treatment to many of her neighbors."

PATRONAGE.

Liberals, as they call themselves, never cease while in opposition, bewailing and mourning over the loss of patronage, and in accusing their opponents of all kinds of crimes in connection with what they term party appointments. Yet the moment they reach power, profession is swallow, and partisanship prevails even to the extent of making positions for the faithful of the flock, even to dismissal of competent officials. To what extent this is carried may be gleaned from what is reported to be doing in British Columbia at the present moment.

The Liberal party in B.C., has been in power but a few months, and the hungry wolves are after plunder. Telegrams from Victoria, B.C., of the 28th March, says:

"It is understood, on what appears to be excellent authority, that the Government has planned to bring down a special Act to abolish Sir Richard Lake's office of Agent-General for British Columbia in London," and that F. C. Wade, K.C., of Vancouver, is to succeed him in the office of Agent-General in England. Mr. Wade is now, and has been, in the past, one of the most faithful of the flock deserving of recognition by his party, provided there is a position legitimately open for him btu not in the way suggested. An honorable politician would shrink at the suggestion of turning a man out of office, without any reason, except to find an office for a place hunter. Delicacy, however, when an office is in view, is not a characteristic of a Grit politician.

It is also stated that the proposed bill will deal with J. H. Turner's pension, which is six thousand dollars a year net. Mr. Turner is a former Premier of British Columbia, and was the incumbent of the office when the announcement of Sir Richard's appointment was made on November 15, 1915. He was retired on a pension of six thousand dollars a year.

So Liberalism flourishes for a time.

THE ONTARIO OPPOSITION.

The Toronto Star, Liberal, gives glowing attention to what Dr. Creelman, Superintendent of Agriculture for Ontario, is doing to increase the food production of the Province. Can any good come out of a Tory Government?

It is creditable in the Star, for the reason that it is unusual for an Ontario Liberal journal to be politically honest enough to acknowledge and approve the action of the Hearst Government in its dealings with the subject of aiding the agriculturists of the Province by appointing to office men who have made the subject a life's study. Mr. Creelman was appointed by a former Liberal Ontario Government to take charge of the Guelph Agriculture College, in which position he proved a success, and notwithstanding the fact of his having been a Liberal and appointed by a Liberal Government, the Premier of Ontario realizing his value, and being in the service of the Province, did not stop to consider his political affinities, but selected him to fill a more important position than he was filling, in the Agricultural branch of the Government of the country. Nothwithstanding these facts the opposition in the Legislature, led by Rowell and Dewart and continually abusing the Government for not appointing what they call a Farmer to fill the position now held by a man whose experience has proved of great value to all who are engaged in agricultural pursuits.

The only statesmenship the Rowellites have shown themselves to possess is that of opposition and fault finding. The people realize this fact, and will so declare themselves when an opportunity offers.

TAXATION OF MINES.

The proposal to impose a tax on the mines of Northern Ontario, and elsewhere in the Province, has aroused opposition on the part of miners and stock-brokers, particularly in Toronto. Why should not those who are working mines and becoming wealthy out of what legitimately belong to the people, pay a fair tax? The mineral wealth of the Province is one of its most valuable assets, and should be so managed and utilized as to aid in meeting the expenses of governing the country. Care being taken in dealing with the question not to hinder, discourage or hamper the different enterprises, either in prospecting or working and developing the mines after discovery. A general tax upon all mining properties might be objectionable, but a tax upon the net profits arising from the working of the mines, would be a legitimate tax, to which objection should not be taken. If the income of an ordinary business man is taxable, why should the net profits derived from the working of a mine, which was not created by the miner, but simply discovered and developed by him, pay a fair proportion of taxes? Taxes of any kind are objectionable, more so when imposed upon articles or industries which had been exempt from taxation. The present demands and requirements of the country are of such a nature as to demand extraordinary methods to meet them.

A REMARKABLE RECORD.

It bears repeating that Canada has secured munition contracts running over $1,200,000,000 and that its exports of war supplies to Great Britain and Allied countries approximate to, if they do not exceed, $2,000,000,000. An annual foreign trade of $1,000,000,000 has been expended to $300,000,000 converted into a favourable trade balance of $400,000,000. In spite of contributing over 400,000 men to the Allied forces, the Dominion has subscribed nearly $600,000,000 to domestic war loans, voted $900,000,000 for war operations, loaned $250,000,000 to the Imperial Government, and maintained its credit on a high level.

But for the Prime Minister's continuous efforts on the other side of the water, in person and by cable and letter, this country's contracts for munitions and other war materials would not have aggregated anything like so large a total as has been and is being realized. He and several of his colleagues have crossed the Atlantic repeatedly on business connected with the army and with war orders. Besides securing huge contracts in England he has directly sought and obtained orders totalling $150,000,000 from the Allied Governments of France, Italy, Russia and Belgium and from the other oversea Dominions. The material sold has included $60,000,000 worth of Canadian hay, oats and flour for the British army, together with large quantities of foodstuffs, blankets, saddles and other articles for the Allies and sister commonwealths.

These are facts not to be forgotten when the time arrives for action.

FACETIOUS.

The Toronto Globe is becoming facetious and exclaims "The Conservative Press is not advocating conscription; but if Laurier had been in power——"

That problem is easy of solution. Sir Wilfrid would have been seeking a Globe reporter and pouring into his ear for the information of the readers of the Globe, as he did at the outbreak of the Boer War, that there was no law upon the statute book enabling his Government to raise a battalion for service outside the limits of the Dominion, nor would he have moved in the matter, until, as on the former occasion, public opinion drove him to act. Does the Globe, for a moment, fancy that its readers have no memories? Many of them may be partisan enough to swallow much of the Globe's vaperings, for party purposes, but there is a limit, even in this regard, particularly when the welfare and glory of the Empire is at stake.

Current Comment

Globe regrets that its columns described an anti-conscription meeting in Quebec city as an anti-recruiting meeting. What's the difference?

Find Scandal In Alta. Bond Deal

$115,000 Missing, Says Opposition Leader—Interest Money Paid Illegally

EDMONTON, Alta., March 29.—E. Michener, Leader of the Opposition, produced a sensation in the House this afternoon when, at the opening of the session, he moved the adjournment and gave what were alleged to be the details of a condition of affairs in connection with Government information concerning the sale of the bonds of the Canadian Northern Western Railway Company.

$115,000 Missing

According to Mr. Michener, there is $115,000 missing, in addition to hundreds of thousands paid out illegally as interest. Early in the session the Opposition obtained from Hon. C. R. Michell, the Provincial Treasurer, a set of figures purporting to be the actual facts regarding the sale of these bonds. According to Mr. Michener's information, the statement made by the Provincial Treasurer was not accordingly to fact.

Mr. Mitchell tabled a statement purporting to show that bonds were sold to the underwriters by the Canadian Northern Western Company at 99 3/4. According to information obtained from Isard Brothers, of London, said Mr. Michener, the firm of underwriters who bought the bonds, said they paid 97 1/2. These statistics thus leaving unexplained the disposition of $115,000, the difference between the figures given by the Provincial Treasurer and the figures given by Lezard Brothers.

To City, Town and Village Dwellers in Ontario

The Empire's emergency call

Instead of now embarking upon the critical period of the great war-struggle with every confidence of victory, what if we were to-day bemoaning a lost war! Such an unthinkable catastrophe would undoubtedly be ascribed to the food shortage. Help to increase production!

Statesmen and economists agree that the universal food shortage is to-day the most dangerous menace of all! Yet the weapon to conquer it is in the hands of everyone able to increase production. If you have even the smallest plot of ground available, think of your responsibility. Let not selfishness or indifference rob you of this very real duty of rendering to your country a practical patriotic service. Grow vegetables.

Here is the tremendous significance of the present universal shortage as seen by the Premier of Great Britain. Lloyd George declares:

"One year's unselfishness will save the British Empire! It will save humanity!"

The splendid patriotic efforts of those who toil for victory on the farms cannot cope with the vast need. City, town and village dwellers should help. Even then there cannot be too much food production! Grow vegetables this year.

It matters little that you can reap real, worthwhile profits in delicious fresh vegetables on your table, beneficial exercise and even a money profit from any surplus produce. The big, pressing reason for growing vegetables is that great desire in every patriotic heart at this vital moment, to contribute something, even though it be only a mite, to help end this horrible war with victory.

Everyone should help. Let one and all take this appeal to heart. Let the slogan for 1917 be:

The Right Spirit!

"I am going to take Lloyd George at his word," writes a well-known Canadian. "This year I have made up my mind to do all I can in the best way I can. And I shall not trouble myself about profits. I shall be satisfied if the world gets the good of it."

"A Vegetable Garden for every home"

How does vegetable growing help? It saves money otherwise spent for vegetables. It helps to lower the "high cost of living." It sets free for vital war work the labor that would otherwise be engaged in producing vegetables for your use. It increases the surplus for export. Are these not worth-while contributions to victory? Grow vegetables this year!

The Ontario Department of Agriculture appeals to Horticultural Societies, labor unions, lodges, school boards, etc., to take the initiative and actively encourage vegetable growing.

Organizations are requested to arrange for instructive talks by local practical gardeners. If local speakers cannot be secured, the Department of Agriculture will endeavor to send a man. As the number of available experts is limited, arrangements for meetings and applications for speakers should be made at once.

The Department suggests the formation of local organizations to offer prizes for best vegetable gardens, and will assist in any possible way any organization conducting a campaign for vegetable growing on vacant lots.

Write for free literature giving instructions about methods of preparing the ground and cultivating the crops; also plan of garden, indicating suitable vegetables to grow, best varieties, and their arrangement in the garden, etc.

Write for Poultry bulletin. The scraps from the average table are sufficient to feed hens. You will be highly repaid in fresh eggs. Bulletin gives full directions how to keep hens.

Piccalilli.

Two gallons of chopped cabbage, two gallons of chopped green tomatoes, a gill of salt, three chopped peppers to make piccalilli. Put all in a press overnight. In the morning squeeze out the brine and mix in a pound of sugar, an ounce of celery seed and a teaspoonful of grated horseradish. Boil one and a half quarts of vinegar, pour on the mixture and cook until tender. Squeeze overnight through a thin cloth. In the morning chop the cabbage and peppers and add the tomatoes.

Scones.

Make a soft dough with two tablespoonfuls of butter rubbed into three pints of flour; two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, scant teaspoonful of salt, one teaspoonful of sugar, sufficient cold milk to mix. Roll out an inch thick, cut into triangles or squares and cook slowly on moderately hot griddle.

Disavowal.

HEALTHIEST ONE IN THE FAMILY

No Sign Of Dropsy And Kidney Trouble Since Taking "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

MATTIE WARREN.

Fort Hibbocco, Ont., July 8th, 1915.

"We have used "Fruit-a-tives" in our house for over three years and have found them a good medicine. One little girl, Hattie, was troubled with Kidney Disease. The Doctor said she was threatened with Dropsy. Her limbs and body were all swollen and we began to think she could not live. Finally, we decided to try "Fruit-a-tives". She began to show improvement after we had given her a few tablets. In a short time, the swelling had all gone from her limbs and she began to look more natural. Now she is the healthiest one in the family and has no signs of the old ailment. We can not say too much for "Fruit-a-tives" and would never be without them."

Crooked Work in Soldiers' Vote is Alleged

VICTORIA, March 30—Alleging that prohibition work amongst the British Columbia soldiers now in England and France, a "dry" delegation interviewed the Provincial Executive yesterday. The soldiers voted ten to one against prohibition, which has been defeated by 1,500. The dry, however, have not abandoned hope and now demand of the Government that prohibition during the remainder of the war be passed. An early reply to the deputation was promised by the Government.

Mr. Nicholas Romanoff has retired for a rest, and it is whispered that Mr. Wilhelm Hohenzollern may repeat the performance at an early date.

BILINGUAL AGITATORS MUST OBEY THE LAW

English-speaking Liberals, Headed by Mr. Bowell, Vote With Government Against Motion of French-Canadian Member to Give Education Minister's Bill Six Month's Rein

TORONTO, March 30—By a vote of fifty to five the Legislature at 11.45 this morning defeated a motion by Sir Rodmond Roblin (Hastings Public), seconded by J. A. Pinard (Ottawa), to give six months' hoist to the bill of the Minister of Education, which provides for the appointing of a Commission to take the place of the Ottawa Separate School Board if that board neglects or refuses to obey the school laws of the Government.

The only members who voted for the motion were Pinard, Macnaughton, Belcastro, Duchamne and Evanturel, all the other Liberals voting with the Government.

Laws Not Obeyed

"I regret to say," said Hon. Dr. Pyne, "that the law is not being obeyed. The Government is merely taking precautionary measures to prevent a repetition of the appalling conditions which occurred in Ottawa. After obtaining the best advice we could get we think the bill is all right, but it may never be invoked, and I hope and trust it never will be invoked."

In reply to Mr. McDonald (North Bruce), Premier Hearst said the bill permits of the appointment of a Commission only if the board neglects or refuses to carry out the provisions of the school law.

Liberal Leader's Plea

Mr. Rowell said: "The Privy Council has rendered its decision in the Ottawa school cases. It has declared Regulation 17 to be valid and binding on the people of the Province. It has declared the act whereby the control and management of the Ottawa Separate Schools were transferred from the School Board to a Commission nominated by the Government to be unconstitutional. The Privy Council, as our highest Appellate Court, has finally settled these two questions. Their decision should be accepted by all concerned and honorably carried out.

"I hope the Ottawa School Board will obey the law. It is the duty of the Ottawa School Board to obey the law. It is the duty of every citizen. In the judgment of the Privy Council it is stated:

"That Loyalists do not anticipate that the appellants will fail to obey the law now that it has been finally determined. They cannot, however, assent to the proposition that the appellant board are not liable to perform their statutory obligations, or that in this respect they are in a different position from other boards or bodies of trustees entrusted with the performance of public duties which they fail or decline to perform."

The Privy Council here clearly indicates that compliance with the law can be enforced against the Ottawa School Board, and they point out how it can be enforced. If the board do not obeying the law the Government is in a position to take action immediately in the manner pointed out by the Privy Council to secure compliance with the law, and no new legislation is necessary to authorize the Government to take such action. As already stated, the act passed in 1918, and which authorized the Government to transfer the control and management of the Ottawa schools from the School Board to a Commission, has been declared unconstitutional. The present bill proposes the same thing, although in somewhat different form, and its constitutionality, therefore, may be open to grave question. It appears to me that the Government has a more sure, direct and immediate remedy by following the judgment of the Privy Council than by the course proposed by this bill.

Will Not Oppose Bill

"The Government, however, have taken the responsibility of introducing this bill and asking the Legislature to adopt it. They have taken the responsibility of saying they believe it is within the power of the Province to enact. The questions involved are so important and so vital to the well-being of the Province that even though I believe the Government have a safer and surer way of securing the enforcement of the law than that proposed by this bill and that a further contest over the constitutionality of this measure will not promote peace and harmony, I shall not put anything in the way of the Government giving full effect to its policy, as I regard the law should be obeyed.

Live Good Feeling

"The Prime Minister assured us this afternoon that every effort would be made to meet the situation in the English-French districts of the Province, where, anxious as the school boards may be to get properly qualified teachers many are unable to do so, and therefore technically they are unable to comply with the law. I hope the Premier will deal with the matter in the spirit expressed this afternoon, and try and re-establish a good understanding between the races in this Province. We are placed here by Providence side by side; we must continue to live together whether we like it or not. We can live together in peace and harmony or in discord and strife.

Work For Good Relations

"It should be the object of all patriotic and public-spirited citizens to establish good relation, relations of mutual confidence and respect; and I believe one of the best ways to establish this mutual confidence and respect is for all parties concerned entirely to refrain from saying or doing things which tend to irritate or disturb our relations as fellow-citizens, particularly at this time, when we need our undivided energies for the successful prosecution of the war, and for all parties concerned to obey the law as it has been declared by the Privy Council.

"If I can be of any assistance in endeavoring to bring about a better understanding I shall be glad to cooperate with the Prime Minister in securing this result."

Moves Hoist of Bill

Mr. Macgaa (Sturgeon Falls moved a six months' hoist of the bill, which he contended was unconstitutional and contrary to the spirit of the British North America Act. "You cannot expect harmony and accord with a bill of this kind," said he.

The bill was vigorously opposed by Messrs J. A. Pinard (East Ottawa) and Gustave Evanturel (Prescott). Mr. Pinard said that if the schools in Ottawa were closed for five months it was "thanks to the action of the nice, big, fat gentleman who sits on the Government benches as Minister of Education."

Premier Hopes For Peace

Premier Hearst, who followed Mr. Rogaa, said that in the bill no jurisdiction was vested in any way in the Lieutenant-Governor in Council or in the Minister until a school had refused or neglected to obey the law. It was different in the old act, because the Minister had arbitrary power as to whether the schools were carrying out the law or not, and to maintain his commission indefinitely. There were in the present bill a provision that if there was any doubt on the question it is to be referred to the court—a non-political, non-partisan tribunal.

"No jurisdiction vests in us," said Sir William Hearst, "We do not sit in judgment upon it. The court sits in judgment. There is no intention to take the rights of any school that is obeying the law. If we have to act, I ask whose fault is it? We cannot if the Board of Trustees in the city of Ottawa carry out the law."

Premier Hearst said he had every desire for peace and harmony, and he would suggest in committee that the act come into force by proclamation.

Mr. Racine (Russell) thought this bill was to revenge the one the Government lost last year.

A Moderate Debate

Mr. Rowell said he thought they would all agree that the members who had spoken in support of the amendment had presented their views in a clear and moderate way, and the whole tone and temper of the House made for a fair hearing by all the members. It was a matter of regret to him that his honorable friends who supported the amendment could not see eye to eye with him or the rest of his colleagues. He was glad to hear the statement of the Prime Minister that he intended to introduce an amendment, when the bill comes up in committee, that the act would be brought into force except by proclamation of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council and personally he hoped there would never be any occasion to bring the act into force.

Premier Hearst—Hear, hear.

HE'LL COMEE BACK

Smoky Joe Wood, upon whom much of the Cleveland's success will depend this year, has supreme confidence in his ability to come back. "If I hadn't been sure that my army would be as strong as ever I wouldn't have permitted Dunn to pay $15,000 to the Red Sox for my release," said Wood the other day. "I signed a contract for a big salary because I knew that I could earn the money. A year of idleness has put me back in my old form, and I'll be ready to take a regular turn in the box as soon as Manager Fohl calls on me. There isn't a doubt in my mind that the Cleveland will be up in the race." If Guy Morton is right we'll win the pennant as sure as you're alive."

IN THE FIELD

The Detroit Tigers are, as usual, backing to carry away the pitchers with the Highlanders this season.

Bill Donovan intends to carry nine pitchers with the Highlanders this season.

Two talk-producing Dicks are usually before the sporting public—Brandt and Gin.

Angel Aragon, the Cuban infielder will be retained as utility infielder by the Highlanders this year.

Jack Barry will use the same line up in his opening game as the Red Sox operated in the world's series last year, according to a scribe at Hot Springs.

New York scribes claim happiness for Gotham fans because of John McGraw's new contract for five years with the Giants. They are accusing Charles Comiskey, chief engineer of the White Sox, of trying to lure the little manager away.

The Boston Red Sox will turn Minnie Kopp and Bob Gill to the Bisons team. It is understood that Manager Barry of the Red Box will send three players back to Buffalo with a string attached to them. Pitcher Tyson will be given a further tryout.

No pitcher on the New York Highlanders has ever faced his way into the no-hit colony in the fourteen years that the team has been represented in the American League. In that time however, nine pitchers have wavered on the ragged edge and have been denied a place in baseball's Hall of Fame by one hit. Here are the names of nine who came so near and yet are still afar:—Bill Wolfe, Jack Chesbro, Billy Hogg, Al Orth, Jess Doyle, Jim Lake, Louis Brockett, Jack Warhop and Russell Ford.

Erwin A., better known as Canadian Jack, fans as "Jiff" Reafer, is back on the pitcher's mound. This flinger, who pitched winning ball for Ottawa in 1912, and with seventeen straight victories to his credit in 1913, practically won the pennant from London in the final drive of the season, will make his re-entrance to the diamond after a year's lay-off. Reafer has signed to pitch for Wilkesbarre, Pa., club season in the New York State League. He was once with the Toronto Leafs under the name of Earl Wilson.

GETTING INTO TRIM

(Toronto News)

According to advices from Peterboro, it will be a day or so before the Leafs will get down to real hard work. Manager Lajoie is on the ground ready to set the pace for his athletes, and he promises to make it a warm one. On the whole the Leafs are better off in regard to players than the majority of the International League clubs. With a few exceptions the fellowes from last season are under contract, and the infield is practically complete. Truesdale is the only notable absentee, and Lajoie will step into his shoes. The pitching staff is strong and there are no dearth of outfield candidates, including Ryan, Meyers and Trout. Thompson, of course, is available both for the box and the field. McPherson is touted as a good prospect, and Costello, who will report in May, will be hard to keep off the team. Another catcher and one or more pitchers will probably be secured from the big leagues. Lajoie is confident that he will place a winning team in the field. It is not his intention to stand fat, but to strengthen the weak spots as soon as they develop.

Shocker, in his opinion, is as good a southpaw pitcher as there is in the business, and he would not take $25,000 for him right now. He has not been scored upon in any of the practice games in which he has worked, and his pitching has been the sensation of the camp. No pitcher, not even excepting Rudolph, ever went to the big leagues armed with better credentials than the sturdy Shocker. He won the majority of the games, and in addition pitched a no-hit contest at Rochester. There is little doubt but that had he finished the season with the Leafs that the pennant would have come here. His career will be followed with interest by Toronto fans.

IMPURE BLOOD IN THE SPRING

The Passing of Winter Leaves People Weak and Depressed

As winter passes away it leaves many people feeling weak, depressed and easily tired. The body lacks that vital force and energy which pure, blood alone can give.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are an all-year-round blood builder and nerve tonic, but they are especially useful in the spring. Every dose helps to make new, rich, red blood. Returning strength commences with their use and the vigor and cheerfulness of good health quickly follows.

There is just one cure for lack of blood and that is more blood. Food is the material from which blood is made, but Dr. Williams' Pink Pills double the value of the food we eat. They give strength, tone up the stomach and weak digestion, clear the complexion of pimples, eruptions and boils, and drive out rheumatic poisons.

If you are pale and sallow, if you feel continually tired out, breathless after slight exertion, if you have headaches or backaches, if you are irritable and nervous, if your joints ache, if your appetite fails and food does not nourish nor sleep refresh you, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will make you well and strong. To build up the blood is the special purpose of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and that is why they are the best spring medicine. If you feel the need of a tonic at this season give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a fair trial and you will rejoice in new health, new strength and new energy. Do not let the trying weather of summer find you weak and ailing. Build yourself up now with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills—the pills that strengthen.

Ask for Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People and do not be persuaded to take something else. If your dealer does not keep these Pills they will be sent by mail, post paid, at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Underdrainage As An Investment

The Fundamental Assurance of a Profitable Crop—Some of the Reasons

The following report, rendered by the Ontario Government, regarding underdrainage of farm lands, is of great importance to our agricultural lists, and should be thoroughly investigated with a view of adoption. We give the report abridged on March 15th, and published in The Toronto Mail and Empire.

Herewith we give the principles which, founded on practice, prove by showing that: drained land is easier to work; easier in machinery; easier kept free from weeds; brings up more water from below; more air; more root space and provides better ventilation than undrained land. That drained land is warmer in Spring from 5 to 12 degrees, than undrained land—causing earlier seeding from 3 to 4 weeks—during seeding time when even hours are precious, this is very important, for early seeding increases crops. The soil has more plant food; seed germinates better and more evenly, the value of increase in crops underdrained, with tile is 100%, being equal to about $21.65 per acre.

The following are comparisons in yields as reported from 36 experiments in new in different sections throughout the Province, who were anxious to learn if underdrains pay. (These tests were carried on, side by side, the drained with the undrained coil, in 1911, a very dry season).

Reported: cultivated drained land: barley; 50 bus.; oats, 100 bus.; Spring wheat, 25 bus.; Fall wheat, 45 bus. Straw, about doubled. Undrained land: barley, 20 bus.; oats, 50 bus.; Spring wheat, 15 bus.; Fall wheat, 25 bus. Light straw crop.

Government's crop report, 1916—barley, 23.05 bus.; oats, 26.05 bus.; Spring wheat, 15.03 bus.; Fall wheat, 21.02 bus.

Reason For Increase.

Accounting for increases in returns: Barley—They thrive better in drained land owing to higher temperature, coupled with the presence of plenty of fresh air, the drained soil teems with bacteria. These little organisms are to the plant what the cook is to the family—they prepare the food, make it edible to the plant, so to speak.

A marked increase in the number canned one as well, are charred into salts, which dissolve in water, and with it pass into the roots to sustain the plant. Clay soils need lime, not as much as plants, or animals do. In the drained land there is plenty of it. Here, then, they thrive and flourish combining the elements of the air with those of the soil, and give the plant abundance of food made to its very liking. In the undrained land, however, the scant supply of air becomes impure, and this, with the cold, renders most of them so inactive that but little food is prepared.

Now, if underdrainage will move seeding time ahead 3 to 4 weeks, if it will lessen the labor of tillage by a half, if it will give wheat, barley, peas, oats, corn, flax, hay, twice as high and twice as thick on the ground the first week in July as on undrained land in the same farm, at the same date and under the same tillage; if it will practically double the yield of grain, hay, flax, etc.; if on the average it will make every acre that is drained produce $10 more than before; if it will repay the cost of drainage, every year, or two at most; if it will give the land soil condition for plant growth, then is it not high time that underdrainage become a practice, indeed, as general as the practice of tillage?

There need be no excuse from anyone rendered poor and kept so by the wetness of his land, saying: "I haven't the principle, and how can we invest it?

The Province of Ontario has long since made provision in the Tile, Stone, and Timber Drainage Act, by which any township is authorized to borrow money from the Province to lend to the farmers for underdrainage purposes, at 5% interest, paying it back on the instalment plan in ten or twenty years.

As evidence of the importance attached to thorough drainage of soils it may be noted that Hon. T. W. McGarry, on Monday, March 12, introduced in the Provincial house legislation to increase the borrowing power of municipalities, for tile drainage work and the loaning power of the Government upon municipal debentures for such undertakings.

Bathe Internally and Keep Well

Nature has mightily equipped us all, old and young, to resist disease, but she requires that we give her a chance.

We give her no chance if we permit the Lower Intestine to be more or less clogged with accumulated waste. Yet this is a universal condition today, as is proven by the number of laxative drugs that are consumed.

You can help Nature in Nature's most effectual way by Internal Bathing, and in an easy, non-habit-forming way keep the Intestines as free and clean as Nature demands it to be for perfect health and surer defence against contagion. Over long years this action keen, bright, healthy people testify to its result.

Mrs. C. G. M. (name on request) of Strathroy, Ont., writes:—

I am pleased to have this opportunity of testifying to the merits of the J.B.L. Cascade. I have been using it now for a year with satisfactory results. Bismarck Breaks Down and Weeps

Cannot Stand Pressure Brought to Bear by Kaiser—Bismarck Resigns

Bismarck has resigned. He has left Berlin and is now at Friedrichsruhe. He has left the German Empire, and he has left it in a state of collapse. He has broken down and wept. He has wept because he could not stand the pressure brought to bear upon him by the Kaiser. He has wept because he could not bring himself to do the things which the Kaiser wanted him to do. He has wept because he could not bring himself to do the things which he knew would be bad for Germany. He has wept because he could not bring himself to do the things which he knew would be bad for the world. He has wept because he could not bring himself to do the things which he knew would be bad for humanity.

Germany Breaks The German Bond.

Canadian Manufacturers says Pyrotheum is solved.

Something of a sensation was caused at the Toy Fair in Toronto when a manufacturer announced that he had succeeded in making a better doll even than the once-famous article produced in Germany. Several preceding attempts resulted in failure. Manufacturers in Canada and the United States have tried for years, since the war began, to duplicate the German dolls, but have never had any success. There was something the matter in the process, but what no one could discover. The trouble could never be found. One large doll house established in Canada and secured the services of several foreigners who had previously worked in doll factories in Europe but the finished article was of a very poor grade. Likewise one of the chemists employed in the chemical department ridiculed the information that the clay used in his country and the atmosphere were responsible for the high grade article.

Last spring at the Toy Fair the subject of producing a better doll than the Germans was discussed, pro and con. Most toy men thought the task impossible, but one maker thought it could be done. He secured the services of a French and English sculptor and an Italian expert in china. Several Italian mechanics were also engaged and the factory started. Numerous difficulties and setbacks from time to time, he produced a doll which, it is claimed, is better than those produced in Germany. The doll is said better and will stand much more hard usage. One large wholesaler stated that the doll excelled, and we will find a big market if the price is right.

Dolls are the largest item on every import list and for years enormous sums have been spent in the United States and Canada for foreign countries for this class of toy. Receipts in two different stores throughout the country have been enormous and Canadian manufacturers are determined to keep trade in Canada.

A Gift for the Kaiser.

Here is a story from the German front regarding certain little tricks which Germans played on the Allies while attempting to celebrate the Kaiser's birthday. It is from the Berlin Tagblatt and written by Franz Pfempfert, who as official correspondent at that time, refers to the Canadians as "barbarians."

First, they made a sneak over the snow-covered ground to the shelter of our trenches which is a spy green, and white. Some said that it came from shells fired from field guns, and still others that a fluid which was then ignited by fire-shells. There seems to be little doubt that all four methods were employed. It is also probable that different gases were used at different parts of the line. Most of it was brown like smoke, some yellow or green like chlorine, and the black fumes may have been due to the burning of some fluid such as benzol. It was quite impossible to see any object in this gas, and even when the men got out of it the lungs and heart were so affected that they were quite unable to make any exertion. One and all were prostrate, and to face this in danger unprotected was impossible.

The next principal method seems to have been as follows: The gas was launched from cylinders, and was carried by the easterly breeze right on to our trenches, into which, being very heavy, it rolled. Care was taken to clear out of the trenches, wherever possible, the men who had to fire rifle fire. A couple of hundred yards back there was a work in the ground which sheltered them from rifle fire, but a storm of shrapnel burst over their heads. The German gunners had the range to a yard, and had everything in readiness. There was very much the method of sending a ferret down a rabbit hole and waiting at the other opening with a gun:

There is a wounded German officer in hospital who says that four days ago cylinders of gas arrived in their trenches. The wind was not favorable at the time, so they were dug into positions and when the wind veered round into the east. The German troops in the first line trenches were served out with some form of mask impregnated with a chemical, which they wore over their noses and mouth. Every effort is being made at present to secure one of these, and determine the chemical present, but so far without success. Many has gone away up north this evening to try to secure one from the German prisoners, and his return is anxiously awaited. Meanwhile there has been very busy investigating the blood of some of the worst cases, examining the serum spectroscopically in the hope that some indication may be afforded as to the nature of the gas, but up to the present the results have been disappointing."

Publicity Needed.

In a leading article printed in The Paris Mailo by a special representative visiting Otawa, accompanied by a survey of Canada's efforts is made. Both military and industrial phases of the Dominion's war work are dealt with. In fact, says the correspondent, the Ministry has given him the only article of military equipment not provided for Canada was lorgnettes. On the banks of the St. Lawrence, as on those of the Thames and the Seine, people are gladly giving money, blood and work for the cause of humanity.

Discussing this article a Canadian officer declares that such publicity regarding Canadian doings was greatly needed on the Continent, not only in France, but in the neutral countries. Countries such as Norway and Sweden, although receiving propaganda matter about Great Britain, are ignorant of what Canada is doing.

The Chicago News says that courage to do right is a great national virtue. Go ahead, Uncle Sam we would like a demonstration.

To the War With an Ambulance

One of the most prominent Canadian University men who accompanied the first army from the Dominion to the trenches is Professor Wilfrid Boyd, Professor of Pathology in the University of Manitoba. He has recently published a book giving his impression of the front, and it is one that should prove interesting because of its intimate personal touch. Professor Boyd has not written a war book such as the special correspondents have done. "With An Field Ambulance at Ypres" is in reality a diary, written in the form of letters to French farmhouse, in muddy dugouts, and under homogatic plaster in time to time, and then sent home to give friends an idea of what was going on. In most cases the accounts were written within twenty-four hours of the event described, which of course adds to their value.

Professor Boyd, one of the most graphic stories of the effects of the gas when first used that has been written. His description, dated April 28th, 1915, the day that will live long, reserved, by the Canadians because of the introduction of the new and terrible art of warfare. Professor Boyd says:

"There is only one road in the mouth of every one to-day—gas. Vague rumors of gas have been floating about, but no one really believed them. Now the stage of rumor is past. We know the worst. And a very bad worst it is.

"This morning I had to go one of the casualty clearing stations, and there I saw a sight which for sheer ghastliness equals anything I have seen in any dressing station. The hospital is built around a great courtyard, and in that courtyard were two hundred men on stretchers. Some were lying in a state of stupor, the fine heaving about their faces; some were sitting up gasping for breath, with hands and faces of a deep, dusky purple, evidently in the greatest distress; over the countenance of others the pallid hue of death were beginning to creep, whilst a few last rallies were met with gurglings in the throat were passing away into the undiscovered country. They the dim gas cases from Ypres and Hill 60.

Many descriptions of gas varied to an extraordinary extent. It was described as black, brown, yellow, green, and white. Some said that it came from shells fired from field guns, and still others that a fluid which was then ignited by fire-shells. There seems to be little doubt that all four methods were employed. It is also probable that different gases were used at different parts of the line. Most of it was brown like smoke, some yellow or green like chlorine, and the black fumes may have been due to the burning of some fluid such as benzol. It was quite impossible to see any object in this gas, and even when the men got out of it the lungs and heart were so affected that they were quite unable to make any exertion. One and all were prostrate, and to face this in danger unprotected was impossible.

The next principal method seems to have been as follows: The gas was launched from cylinders, and was carried by the easterly breeze right on to our trenches, into which, being very heavy, it rolled. Care was taken to clear out of the trenches, wherever possible, the men who had to fire rifle fire. A couple of hundred yards back there was a work in the ground which sheltered them from rifle fire, but a storm of shrapnel burst over their heads. The German gunners had the range to a yard, and had everything in readiness. There was very much the method of sending a ferret down a rabbit hole and waiting at the other opening with a gun:

General Manager.

Toronto, March 22nd, 1917.

Assistant General Manager for Campbellford was given a surprise by the boys of the Tweed Platoon and local members of the Artillery on Friday last. While engaged at his office duties at his desk in the drill hall the boys formed a circle round him and Sergt. Deeks, on behalf of the local platoon and Gr. Brown on behalf of the artillery, presented him with an engraving Sheffield set with leather case as a token of the esteem in which he was held by the boys in khaki. The Gift was taken completely by surprise and in responding he assured the boys that the gift would be highly prized by him and he would ever cherish in memory the many pleasant associations of the days spent in Tweed.—Tweed Advocate.

An Interesting Legal Case

Judgment was given on Wednesday of this week in a case of considerable local interest. Mr. and Mrs. George Kenny alleged about the 1st of December, 1915, rented premises on the south side of Dundas Street in Trenton from Mr. Wesley Saylor for a term of three years at $30.00 a month. When the great demand arose for rooms early this year Mr. Saylor served notice upon his tenants and demanded possession of the property. Mr. and Mrs. Kenny disputed his right to take the property from them at this time. Mr. Saylor made application for a writ of possession under the Overholding Tenant's Act and the matter came on for trial at Belleville on Monday the 26th inst., before His Honor Judge Wills. Mr. Saylor claimed that Mr. and Mrs. Kenny were monthly tenants, he had served them with a month's notice and entitled to the premises. Mr. and Mrs. Kenny claimed that Mr. Saylor had made an agreement with them for a term of three years from the 15th December, 1915, and had reduced the rent for the apartments from $22.00 to $20.00 per month if they would take it for three years. They further claimed the agreement was made about a week before the 15th of December and that the lease commenced on the 15th of December.

The Court found against Mr. Saylor's statements and held that an agreement had been made for three years from the 15th of December, 1915, the expiry of the lease would be more than three years from the time of the making and thus by statute would have to be in writing, but the circumstances that Mr. and Mrs. Kenny had entered into possession and had rent until the present time made them yearly tenants and Mr. Saylor could not obtain possession of the premises on a month's notice. The application of Mr. Saylor was refused and he was directed to pay the costs of the prosecution. In his judgment the learned Judge expressed himself as satisfied with the evidence of the tenant, that a three year's lease was made verbally, but under the statute it was void because not in writing and under the authorities Mr. and Mrs. Kenny held as yearly tenants.

Mr. Archie Abbott was counsel for Mr. Saylor and Mr. O'Flynn, of O'Flynn, Diamond and O'Flynn was counsel for Mr. and Mrs. Kenny.

THE ONLY MEDICINE FOR LITTLE ONES

Mrs. Timothy Bowes, Blissfield N. B., writes:—"I have always used Baby's Own Tablets for my three children and can speak very highly of them as I could not get along without them. Baby's Own Tablets are the only medicine I would use for my children." The Tablets cure all the minor ills of little ones and the mother who keeps a box of them in the house may feel reasonably safe against the consequences of sudden attacks of illness. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

CAPT. WALLACE SURPRISED

Capt. Wallace, who has been in charge of local recruiting for the past five months and has been transferred to Campbellford was given a surprise by the boys of the Tweed Platoon and local members of the Artillery on Friday last. While engaged at his office duties at his desk in the drill hall the boys formed a circle round him and Sergt. Deeks, on behalf of the local platoon and Gr. Brown on behalf of the artillery, presented him with an engraving Sheffield set with leather case as a token of the esteem in which he was held by the boys in khaki. Belleville Club Of Wingipeg, Man.

Old Boys and Girls of City on the Bay, Hold Whist Drive, and Banquet In Honour of Their Old Friend, Ha!

On the evening of March 22nd, the Belleville Old Boys and Girls of Winnipeg held Whist Drive and Dance in the Banquet Hall of the Oddfellows Temple. This was the first social gathering the Club has held this year and was a decided success.

The first hour was spent in chatting and renewing Belleville and it's surrounding community was the main topic. Many members of the Club met each other only at these social events and there is always much to talk about. Many had been in the "old home-town" since the last Club meeting. After a good chat, the chattering occupied the chairs at the card tables and a Progressive Whist Drive was started with interest. Mrs. T. H. Wicket, won the Ladie's prize and F. W. Wotton the Gentleman's prize. After the Whist Drive a collection was taken for Patriotic purposes to which all responded heartily.

Refreshments were then served by the ladies of the Club and as the Belleville ladies sure know how to prepare cakes and sandwiches, it is needless to say the luncheon was enjoyed.

Music was then provided for the dancers and an hour was spent in this popular amusement, after which all joined hands and sang Auld Lang Syne and the National Anthem. After the hearty hand-shakes the crowd left for their homes wearing a happy smile after a very enjoyable evening.

Among those present were:

CALLED BY DEATH.

WILLIAM ASHLEY

William Ashley died this week at his home, Old Hay Street, Marmora village, at the age of 83 years. He leaves to mourn his loss, his wife, one daughter, Mrs. Geo. Stevens, East City, one son, William P. Ashley, of Belleville, and one brother, Simeon Ashley, of West Huntingdon, and four sisters, Mrs. Annie Hurdon and Mrs. Margaret Poucher, of Corbyville, Mrs. Sabre Christopher, of Actinolite, and Mrs. Ruth Huffman, of Belleville. His first wife was Deborah Haight, who died 45 years ago, leaving him with five small children. Interment in McMillen, of Marmora, 19 years ago.

ASA BRICKMAN

As the result of an accident which befell him some time ago, Asa Brickman, a highly respected yeoman, passed away at his home in Ameliasburg, on Friday March 30th, 1917. The deceased was a son of the late James Brickman, one of the early pioneers of Prince Edward County. He was born in the Township where he had lived for upwards of four score years, on July 15th 1842. Over 50 years ago he was married to Miss Jane Gray of Rawdon Township and who survives him. The result of their marriage was three children, Mrs. Ray Belnap, Rossmore, William at home, and Asa, who deceased some years ago. In addition to the family two brothers, Raymond of Delcroft, and J. W. of Redmerville on the old homestead, and three sisters, Mrs. Geo. Gray, Redmerville, Mrs. S. Redden of Rossmore and Mrs. Thos. Istead of Bowman's Prince Edward County, are left to mourn the loss of a kind and thoughtful husband, father and brother. The late Mr. Brickman was a carpenter by trade, but of late years had devoted his time to farming and fruit growing. In politics he was a staunch Conservative and in religion a Methodist. He was a charter member of the Loyal Loyalists Lodge, C.O.F., being one of its most enthusiastic members filling the honorable and responsible position of treasurer for many years. He was particularly fond of horses and was a judge in handling them. Being one of the most genial and accommodating men his death will be deeply regretted by a large circle of friends and acquaintances, who will extend to the bereaved widow and family sincere sympathy in the sudden bereavement they have been called upon to suffer. The interment will take place in the family plot Albury cemetery on Sunday afternoon.

JOHN W. BARBER

After a brief illness from an attack of pneumonia, Mr. John W. Barber, a well known resident of Belleville, passed away at his residence, 18 Moira Street. Only a few days ago Mr. Barber was upon the street apparently in his usual health and his demise was a severe shock to his many friends. Deceased, who was 71 years of age was born in the Township of Hungerford in the year 1846. When a young man he went to reside in the Township of Ameliasburg, where for 29 years he was a successful yeoman. Some 17 years ago he came to this city where he has since resided. Mr. Barber was widely known in this section of the community and was highly respected. Since the outbreak of the war he was upon several occasions owing to his knowledge of horses selected as a buyer of these animals for war purposes. He also purchased many for shipment to the west and private individuals. In religion he was an Anglican and in politics a lifelong Conservative and always took a deep interest in political matters. A widow, one son and one daughter survive. The son W. J. of Hull's island, Ameliasburg Township and the daughter Mrs. W. T. Giles of Toronto. Two brothers T. E. of Rossmore and F. E. of Tyendinaga Township are living also two sisters, Mrs. S. A. Lockwood and Mrs. T. Blackburn both of this city. To the bereaved will be extended the heartfelt sympathy of a large circle of relatives and friends.

BELLEVILLE BRANCH, J. G. Moffat, Manager

HELPFUL MEETING AT HOLLOWAY ST. CHURCH

On Friday evening those attending the special services at Holloway St. Church heard a wonderful message of God's goodness and power to save from Sergt. Lovell.

Sergt. Lovell, who was associated for three years with Rev Billy Sunday in his evangelistic work, told some very interesting things about the personality of that great man and his work, which is winning and has won many souls for the Master.

He also related some parts of his own experiences, in such a convincing manner, that his listeners were assured that God still lives and is ever ready to receive those who put their faith in Him.

At the close of his address he sang in a pleasant, pleading voice the "Pilot Song."

The pastor, Rev. J. N. Clarry and Rev. Pimlott then took charge of the service and all who attended received a blessing from their words.

The services have been very helpful during the past week and are to be continued for another week at which all are cordially invited to attend.

The Markets

There was a good attendance upon the Belleville market this morning and considerable produce was offered for sale, all of which realized good prices. Maple syrup made its appearance for the first time, and sold readily at 80 cents per quart, and $1.80 and $1.90 per gallon. Garden produce, such as lettuce, radishes and onions were quickly disposed of at 5c. and 10c. per bunch. Potatoes are a rather scarce article and sold at 75c per bag. Our quotations are as follows:

Potatoes	$3.25
Eggs	32 to 35c
Celery	10c a bunch
Butter	43c
Wheat	$1.70
Clover, red	$10 to $12
Clover, alsike	$10 to $12
Oats	76c
Buckwheat	$1.10 to $1.15
Turnips	75c bush.
Onions	5c to 10c
Baled hay	$10 to $11
Straw	$4 to $5 a ton
Beets	15c lb.
Lamb pelts	$1.75 to $2.10
Onions	80c peck
Yeal Hides	20c to 22c per lb
Wool, washed	46c lb
Chickens	$1.50 to $2.25
Geese	$2 to $2.50
Ducks	$1.50 to 2.00
Carrots	40c peck
Dealings	$1.25 to $1.50

WHO GOT THE WHISKEY?

A liquor case came up before the police magistrate in Smith's Falls recently. Three cases of liquor had arrived there from Montreal, addressed to John Cahill. They were delivered by the Express Company to John Cahill, of that town. Next day John Cahill of South Elmsley called at the office for the shipment which he was expecting. The Express company endeavored to have the cases returned, without success, and the matter is in the hands of the police. In her evidence Mrs. Cahill said she didn't think the liquor was for them but she took it in and paid the charges. That same night two men called and asked for the liquor, refunded the express charges and took it away. Mr. Cahill was in the house at the time but couldn't say who the men were. The court was mystified about their refusal to give the liner to the express company or the real owner, when they had already given it to other parties. The case was adjourned until Friday.—Perth Expositor.

The Tyrant Man Kicks Back

By EDWARD T. STEWART

A crowd was surging from a bar where a row or scrimmage had been held. Suddenly a big, burly forward, pushing aside those in front of her, cut straight across to the door.

"Give me my pocketbook!" she cried.

"Your pocketbook! What's the matter?"

"You were sitting by me in the gallery. I have lost my pocketbook. What can be taken from me that you have taken it, it? See if you're not in my clothes or made by some sharp instrument."

"If I stole your pocketbook, where is it? I must have passed it to a pal, for I haven't got it."

"I say you have!"

The man, who was well dressed in a check suit, looked over the heads of the crowd and beckoned a policeman called to him.

"You hesitate, please, Madam, you have accused me of stealing your pocketbook, your accusation being based on your own deductions. If you prove me guilty you will have done a duty; if not, you will have to pay well for all the inconvenience and delay you may cause me."

The woman declared that she was ready to take the consequences of her act. The policeman led the man away, all the while the latter insisted on being searched. Nothing except his own belongings were found on him.

"Tom Nolan," said the man at the desk, "we've been looking for you ever since you made your escape from the penitentiary six months ago. Up in your old tricks, I see. You look more prosperous than when you were in stripes. What's become of that beautiful mustache you used to sport?"

"I'm not Tom Nolan."

"You'd better send to your pal for the lady's pocketbook, you'll get a fifteen sentence."

"You think I'm Tom Nolan or any one else than myself, prove it."

"Dead easy. Your photograph was taken and graces the rogues' gallery."

The photograph was produced, and if it was not a likeness of the prisoner it was the very image of him.

"All right," said the prisoner. "I was a counterfeit."

He sent for a lawyer and for bail. When he was suffered to go, being ordered to appear the next morning at court.

The lady was in court, supported by half a hundred of her sister suffragettes the cause of justice for women. She made her charge, told her story, showed the cut in her underclothes and stated the amount of the loss. The identity of the prisoner was established by the photograph of Nolan, who had robbed many women in much the same way that he had robbed the prisoner was pardoned in view his statement. It was this:

"Your honor and gentlemen of the jury, this affair occurred at a meeting of women with a sprinkling of men present. I attended last evening from curiosity. I listened to accusations of men for their barbaric treatment of women from the days of Eve down to the present day. I contend that men have reared as much unjust treatment from women as women have from men. I am now suffering from such treatment. My lawyer has made circumstantial evidence a basis for bringing out the whole story of my injury. I propose to punish her for doing so. She should have given me an opportunity to explain. I could have convinced her that I am above reproach in my dealings; that I am not in receipt of $200 a week salary. As to my being mistaken for the man Nolan, I am willing to confess that I am, and I plead in mitigation of my offense that the lady is not to blame. But I shall make her pay for what she is to blame."

The accused's lawyer then put the prisoner on the stand, who swore that the prisoner was Alonzo Devereux, a professional movie actor, and that he—the manager—was paying him $200 a week for his services as such actor. The great power of the defense was to hang a screen, and then the prisoner was shown a photograph of Nolan, greatly enlarged. The prisoner's picture was then shown on the screen and considerable difference appeared in the two pictures. Then the prisoner's picture was thrown on globule on the lower lid of the eye. The jury were called on to examine the photograph with a magnifying glass, and they found it to be in place as shown in his photograph.

The prisoner was discharged and at once brought suit for $50,000 against the lady who had accused him of theft. The jury done him in his profession by the accusation and its consequences against it. Since he had all the money he required to press the suit and the lady had none, even though it should lose his case in the end, he could appear and keep it till she was tired out and at a loss to pay lawyers' fees. Though advised to make the best terms she could with the lady, she refused to do so till she had been twice assessed. Then she left for other lawyers, and would not go in compromise. She was surprised to receive a written, sixline letter from her lawyer, saying he was sorry for not giving Mr. Devereux an opportunity to defend himself without publicity and acknowledging that the unjust acts of men to women were no greater than those of women to men. As to a money consideration, Mr. Devereux stated nothing, he agreeing to pay all costs.

The lady signed the document. She had been fighting the suit for five years and was on the eve of collapse.

How an Ex-Confederate Soldier Resented an Insult

By ALAN HINSDALE

In 1870 Albert Collins, an American, found himself in Switzerland seeing the country as a pedestrian tourist. Collins had had a varied experience. Five years before he had been mustered out of the Confederate army, where he had been a sharpshooter, and gone to the gold region on Clear creek, Colorado, where he had prospected and struck ore that had brought him a fortune. He had ventured into Texas and before undertaking any other work considered to see something of the world.

From Interlaken he went up the rug railway to Scheidegg, from which point he hired a couple of guides and made the ascent of the Jungfrau. Returning to Scheidegg, he was taking his supper in the restaurant of the railway station, when a party of Germans were eating and drinking. One of them was an army officer, but was not in uniform. An Englishman whose acquaintance Collins had made was with him, and he was making contemptuous to his experiences in the American war, in which Collins had taken part. The German officer, who understood English, overhearing what was said and, being in his cups, let fly a sneering remark about the war in Africa, impugning the Confederates for having yielded in the struggle.

Collins, who had seen and understood the causes that led to the surrender, could not have been insulted in a more tender spot. The hot blood mounted to his cheek, and, seizing a cup of coffee that stood on the table handy, threw its contents in the face of the German officer.

He did this on impulse, but so long as a duel was the result of the German's attack it was fortunate that he acted as he did, because it forced his antagonist, not to challenge him, and this gave Collins the choice of weapons, time, place of meeting, etc.

He offered to give Captain von Sonntag satisfaction on the following terms: In the morning at 6 o'clock the two should walk up a path used by tourists to get a near view of the glacier on that side of the Scheidegg and of half past 6 would start in return. the captain starting from the railway station at half past 6 to meet them. Each was to be armed with a repeating rifle, Winchester preferred. They were to begin firing at will and me all on any portion of the ammunition. Captain von Sonntag, as the last pleas champion short sword fighter while at his university, was given the option of his antagonist of method and protested against it, but Collins refused to fight in the Oberlanders he had seen that he was confident in all the dodges of long range rifle shooting. As the Rocky mountains he had learned to judge of distance at high altitudes. The challenge to the station to the glacier looked trifling; it was really considerable. He was sure he could judge when he came within range and not waste its shots before doing so.

In the morning the appointed armament having been obtained, Collins set out for the glacier, the station point from which he might view it satisfactorily, and when his watch indicated 6:30 went out on the road from Scheidegg starting at the same time from the station. As Collins expected, his opponent, deceived by the rare atmosphere, supposed him to be much nearer to him than he was, and fired a shot soon after leaving the station. Collins raised his rifle to his shoulder, but only to draw another shot. His ruse was successful.

Collins now took in the inequality of the ground before him with a view to dodging shots, he knowing that they within range. "Just before descending into a slight depression he fired a shot as if aiming at the sprawling man was at yet within range. This drew a shot, Collins leaving the depression three shots in his adversary's five. On emerging from the depression Collins held up his hat, which was pierced by the fifth shot. Quickly raising his head far enough to get a sight of his enemy and withdrawing it as quickly, he saw the captain exposed and advancing. Desiring to draw another shot before coming into effective range, he exposed his hat again and received the fifth ball in his shoulder that turned him partly around.

Von Sonntag was now left with but one shot, while his adversary had nearly as many as he had at first. Collins rapidly forward so as to bring himself within range, he sent a ball within a few inches of his adversary's right ear, then another about the same distance from his left ear, and then, levelled the captain, who fired his last shot, which went wild of the mark.

Collins, who had kept cool, as the shots fired, now threw his rifle over his shoulder, the muzzle pointing away from his enemy, and walked forward to meet him. On reaching him he offered his hand.

"I think, captain," he said, "that you must have been somewhat affected by wine last evening when you insulted the Confederate army."

"I certainly was," replied the captain shamefacedly. "And now that his affair is over I offer you my apology."

Serve Save Produce

EVERY ONE CAN do something for his country

Some can bear arms
Some can produce food
Some can make munitions
Some can give money

It is the privilege of all to help.

YOU CAN SERVE by Fighting—Working—Saving—Giving

This is NATIONAL SERVICE

Are YOU doing your part?

ALL EYES turn now to the Canadian Farmer, for he can render the Empire SPECIAL SERVICE in this sternest year of the war.

But—our farms are badly undermanned—25,000 men are needed on the land.

With insufficient help, the Man on the Land fights an uphill fight to meet the pressing need for Food.

CITY and TOWN can help.

Municipal Councils, Churches and Schools, and other organizations, both of men and women, can render National Service by directing all available labour to the Land.

Farmers themselves can exchange labour. School boys can assist.

Were you raised on a farm? Can you drive a team? Can you handle fork or hoe? If you can't fight, you can produce. Spend the Summer working on the Farm.

Let every man, woman and child in the Dominion who has access to Land, no matter how small the plot, make it produce Food in 1917.

CLASSIFYING NATIONAL SERVICE CARDS.

CLASSIFYING THE MAN POWER OF CANADA

A large establishment where everyone engaged has to do train-work is somewhat of a novelty in these days of automatic processes and mechanical devices. Yet the work of classifying National Service cards, which is now being carried on in Ottawa, is of such a nature that it requires constant mental effort by those engaged in it.

There seems to be in the minds of a large number of people considerable curiosity as to what national service is and what the National Service Board is doing, and many have wondered what happened to their National Service cards after being returned to Ottawa. A reporter recently called on Mr. N. B. Bennett, K.C., M.P., Director-General, at the headquarters of the organization, to obtain information and to see for himself what was being done with the cards.

Some idea of the magnitude of the work may be obtained from the fact that there were received at the offices in one day, 84 large bags of mail, aggregating 100,000 cards, each is in a sealed envelope. They are first sent to a room where an electric letter opener disposes of the envelopes at the rate of 800 per minute, and then the real work commences.

Nine rooms have been assigned to the different Provinces and after the cards have been sorted out as to Provinces, in the receiving room, they go to their respective Provincial room, where the preliminary sorting takes place of the completes and incompletes.

The complete cards are then taken to the classification room, where every card is closely gone over by a staff of about 100 young women, who have become experts at deciphering handwriting, and quickly classifying the cards according to a carefully arranged plan. While watching the girls at work one might imagine they were playing some intricate card game, as they place each man's card on one of many heaps, after deciding on the proper classification.

Naturally, among the cards there are some very patriotic, pathetic and interesting answers, of which the following are examples copied verbatim:

"I will sell my house or let it, and go anywhere to help. "Swim the war, and do anything that I am able. Sorry they would not "take me for the front."

Again: "Too many small children to support prevents me "enlisting, but will do anything."

"Was a carpenter when young, now a branch bank manager. "Will make shell cases if needed,' until we have won."

"Retired bookkeeper, but poor health would not prevent me holding open, for some fit man to go overseas. his position until this war is finished by us as winners."

A Belgian writes: "My three sons are gone forever. I am too old to do anything but to pray for your people and mine, and knit socks."

In the classification rooms the completed cards are divided into military, munitions and industrial prospects and then sub-divided into the proper sections and groups. Those engaged in farming and those belonging to a limited list of highly skilled trades, essential in the production of munitions and other war material, are provisionally eliminated from the military prospects class. The industrial class is again sub-divided into occupational groups, so as to admit of ready reference when calls come in for skilled labour of any sort. The requisitions for labour are referred to the Industrial Branch, where a small army of typewriters are kept busy in preparing special lists for concerns requiring labour.

These lists remain on file until a call is made for one industry or another, and a number of these calls have already been made.

During the recent coal shortage it became evident that transportation was one of the chief difficulties and that the railroads were handicapped by lack of men. Sir Henry Drayton, Chairman of the Railroad Commission, reported the facts to the National Service Board. Within twenty-four hours he was put in touch with over 500 railroad engineers, conductors, firemen, telegraph operators, brakemen, switchmen and signalmen, who at that time were working at other occupations; but had signified on the cards that they had sent in their willingness to take up such work in the interests of national service.

The Mechanical department of the Canadian Pacific Railway had need of skilled mechanics, and twenty-four hours after notifying the National Service Board, the C.P.R. were given the names of 670 likely men, located between the city of Quebec and Port Arthur.

The Royal Flying Corps asked for mechanics and motor trades, and 12,000 men were notified that the opportunity to secure employment was open to them in this interesting branch of the service.

The above gives an idea of the work of the National Service Organization at the present time, but no one, except those that took an active part in it, can have the least conception of the vast amount of detail that had to be gone through to attain the above ends. Hundreds of critics said the war would be over before an inventory of the man-power of Canada could be taken, basing their criticisms on the fact that in the past it has averaged about three years for each census. It is due to the great organizing ability and energy of Mr. Bennett and of Mr. Chas. W. Peterson, Secretary of the National Service Board, that although the campaign was only started last December, the distribution and collection of the cards is now practically complete, and considerable progress has been made with the classification and vicing. The late Hon. Chas. Casgrain, then Postmaster General, was called into consultation when the campaign was started and he offered the full facilities of that Department and promised the hearty co-operation of every Postmaster and Postmistress from one end of the Dominion to the other. Personal letters from Mr. Bennett and from Mr. Sawgrain were sent to all concerned, and the work entailed in the distributing and collecting of the National Service cards was cheerfully undertaken by the postmasters and efficiently performed.

The distribution of printed matter in a country like Canada is not so simple as would appear on the surface. The requirements of cards and envelopes for each city, town, village and hamlet had to be estimated and listed. Estimates also had to be made of how many cards in English and how many cards in French were to be supplied to each Post Office. Over 20,000 parcels were thus made up and forwarded from the head office.

It is interesting to note that some eight million pieces of printed matter were utilized in connection with the man-power inventory. 70 tons of paper went into the manufacturing of the cards and envelopes. Owing to the short notice at which the work had to be accomplished, every envelope machine in Canada, making the size required, was requisitioned for night and day service for a considerable period. The mere physical effort in handling these masses of material covering what was a factor that had to be reckoned within outlining the organization.

Other facts showing the magnitude of the work could be given, but from what has been stated above it will be realized that the National Service card records will constitute a means of solving many of the problems that will confront Canada during the remaining period of the war and after its conclusion.

It is apparent that the National Service Board is doing valuable work for the nation by arranging for the efficient maintenance of essential industries and public services, through the man-power inventory.

TY. COBB ON THE JOB

Great Fly-catcher Has Reported to Tigers

WAXAHACHIE, Texas, March 29—Tyrus Raymand Cobb has reported. The outfielding star, who blew in yesterday, says that he is ready for action, though he denies that he has done any work. There had been a report that he was practicing with Washington, which team is doing its training in Augusta, Cobb's home town, but Ty says that this is not so.

Cobb is a few pounds over weight, but will be rid of the superfluous flesh in a short time. The Georgia lad appears to be confident that he will repeat in 1917 his batting and base-running successes of previous seasons. If he does as well as last season he will probably win out.

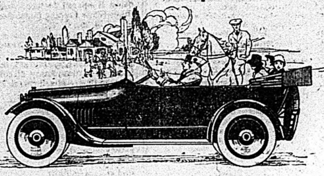
EASE OF CONTROL



THE increasing number of lady drivers brings added popularity to the McLaughlin. Ladies, as well as discriminating men, like the beauty, style and comfort of the McLaughlin. But they like especially the ease of control —the quick response—the smooth flexible power, the safety and simplicity of operation of the McLaughlin.

The valve-in-head motor with sound engineering principles and advanced styles of coach building has established McLaughlin supremacy and won for it the appropriate slogan "Canada's Standard Car."

Our new catalogue gives descriptions and specifications of the 1917 McLaughlin series in Roadster and Five and Seven Passenger Touring and Sedan bodies at prices ranging from $895 upward.

Seeking a Theme

It Was Found, But Never Used

By ETHEL HOLMES

Miss Julia Henderson was very much courted. She was generally attractive, comely and prominent socially. But that which raised her above her fellow spinsters was that she was a novelist who had won her way to literary recognition.

Miss Henderson had recently finished a story. It had been published and had made its mark. Already the public had begun to clamor for more from her typewriter. She was casting about for a theme. She had thus far relied rather upon the naturalness, the humanity of her scenes than upon plot. Now she had come to realize that to the bulk of the reading public plot was very acceptable. But for this she had little talent. She wished she might come upon some real happening out of the ordinary that she could develop into a novel.

Miss Henderson asked friends of hers to suggest some real happening in life that had come to their notice. Some of them tried to think up a combination of circumstances that might serve her purpose. But they were all too tame. She proposed if she should attempt to please the public by this kind of fiction to go into it for all it was worth and develop only what was startling and original.

One day she was out for a walk. When she wished for originals for her characters she would stroll about, noticing every person she passed. Wherever she came upon one who struck her as being unique she would make a mental note of the person and when she got home would jot down a few salient points by way of description. On this walk she received a surprise.

A man, evidently a gentleman, who was passing her paused, looking at her with wide open eyes.

"Belle!" he exclaimed.

There were in the man's face pain, reproach, a burning love. Evidently he fancied that she was some one other than herself. She returned his gaze, but said nothing.

"Oh, Belle," he continued, "where have you been all this while? Why did you conceal yourself from me? It was all a mistake. When we were separated coming out of the opera, having lost you, I went to the carriage. The door stood open, and I saw a woman inside. Supposing she was you, I got in, closed the door, and we were driven away. She supposed I was her husband. He was coming for the carriage when he saw me get into it and drive away. He called another conveyance and followed, overtook us, and then came the tragedy, an account of which you probably saw in the morning papers. This is the truth, and all the truth, I swear to you."

Miss Henderson restrained speech, but not thought. She thought very hard and very rapidly, and this was the substance of her thinking:

"Here is not only a theme, but I one of the characters, the heroine. The woman in the carriage must be the wicked foil. The man who made the mistake in thinking his wife was running away with another should be the hero, but I haven't got so far as that yet. One thing is certain—I'll get points by permitting this man to remain in error so long as possible."

Drawing away, she said, "Sir, I don't know you."

"Listen to me. It was not my fault that this woman had been an old flame of mine. Fate plays strange pranks, but you should not, you shall not hold me accountable for this one."

Miss Henderson was delighted. "The plot thickens," she thought.

"If you wish my forgiveness for"—

She paused. She preferred not to make the only finish she considered safe—viz, pretending that she was some one else than herself. But she was dishonest enough to put a slight tremolo into her voice. He continued:

"I not only wish your forgiveness; I will tell you a story that will convince you of my innocence of wrong. This man who had married the woman I once thought I loved was burning with jealous rage. He knew of his wife's former predisposition for me, and, now thinking that she was untrue to him, that I had taken my former place with her, as soon as he had caught us, drew a knife and plunged it into"—

The man, overcome by the memory of a horrid sight, stopped short and covered his eyes with his hands. Miss Henderson, who was wrapped in the dramatic situation, forgot herself and asked:

"You or the woman?"

Removing his hands, he looked at her wonderingly.

"Do you not know he killed her?"

"Her? Certainly. What was I thinking of?"

"That settles the matter of the female villain," said Miss Henderson to herself. "She dies too early in the story I must find another. But I fear there's more in this plot than I bargained for. I wonder who I am—I mean the woman he has mistaken for me?" Then to the man she said aloud:

"From your knowledge of me, do you consider me a woman to forgive an outrage upon my dignity like this upon such a thin explanation?"

"You have always had an atom of distrust of me. You should see the position in which I am placed. Circumstantial evidence is against me. It is the part of a noble woman to have faith in me, to stand by me in adversity."

That seemed a good point to the authoress for her story. She would show in her heroine that beautiful faith of a woman in the man she loves.

"I will think it over," she said. "Now leave me. If I decide that it is best to permit you to plead your cause, at the same time furnishing evidence of what you claim, I will receive you at my home."

The man clasped his hands and looked up to the heavens, and his lips moved in mute thanks. Then, taking a card from his pocketbook, he scribbled his address on it.

"You see that I have changed my quarters. I shall expect to hear from you—when?"

"If at all within a few days."

She moved on without further reply to the wistful look he gave her. As soon as she conceived herself to be out of sight she looked at the name and address on the card he had given her. It was "Edwin V. Atterbury, University Club."

She was somewhat appalled now that the interview was over at having entered upon a complication with a clubman that might place her in a very embarrassing situation. Fortunately she had not given her name and need not communicate with him further unless so disposed. She resolved that she would let him alone. But this prudent resolution was combated by a sympathy for a poor fellow who was the victim of circumstances. Would it not be better to send for him, convince him of his error and offer sympathy? Possibly she might assist him in reconciliation with the woman she herself was supposed to be.

There was one objection to going further with the matter in any way—that was the murder that had been committed. She had been so interested in getting material for her novel, or, rather, forming the plot, that she had not thought to ask whether the woman had succumbed under the blows she had received or whether her husband had suffered for his crime. Indeed, she had not been in a sufficiently calm mental condition to get a very clear view of the tragedy.

After much debate with herself and having considered the case pro and con she reluctantly decided that it would not be wise to follow the matter any further.

A short time after her meeting with Mr. Atterbury she was invited to dine with her friend, Mrs. Winston. The note of invitation contained the following: "I wish you to meet a friend of mine who has for some time been admiring you from a distance. I confess that I don't like the idea of introducing him to you, for he is a scapegrace. I don't mean that there is anything bad about him, but he has the assurance of a confidence man and would not hesitate at any means to secure the favor of a woman he loves."

There was nothing repellent about this to Miss Henderson. Indeed, she was quite pleased at the prospect of meeting this bold unknown man who had been admiring her without making himself known. She went to the dinner in a tremor of expectation.

When she arrived the hostess was chatting with a gentleman in the conventional evening dress. Both arose, and Miss Henderson stood stock still in astonishment. Surely the gentleman was the man who was waiting for her forgiveness.

"Julia," said Mrs. Winston, "I wish you to know my friend, Mr. Atterbury."

Mr. Atterbury bowed low, but gave no sign that he had ever met Miss Henderson before. Miss Henderson was too confused to say anything. Indeed, since the man did not recognize her as the sweetheart from whom a cruel fate had separated him, what was there to say? A number of suppositions chased themselves through her brain. Possibly, dressed differently and being in a different light, she did not so nearly resemble his lost love as before. Then, too, he might not care to mention what was uppermost in his mind before a third person. But how was it that this man, so madly in love with her double, could have been admiring her at the same time? Miss Henderson was mystified.

The dinner passed off more pleasantly than might have been expected. Mr. Atterbury must certainly have recovered from his misfortune, for he was in excellent spirits and delightfully entertaining. At parting he asked permission to call upon Miss Henderson and it was granted.

A couple of months passed, during which Mr. Atterbury devoted himself exclusively to Miss Henderson. She had not mentioned his having mistaken her for some one else. A proposal came in time.

"How about Belle?" she asked. "Has your love for her cooled so soon?"

"Belle?" he said, as if trying to remember. "Who is Belle?"

"And how about your getting into the wrong carriage, the irate husband, and all that?"

"Wasn't there a murder, too?" he asked, with a twinkle in his eye.

"Yes, there was. Come, explain."

"Well, here it is. I had seen you and admired you. Mrs. Winston told me that you were hunting for a plot for a novel, and I thought I would help you to one. I did very wrong. I must throw myself on your mercy."

Miss Henderson's mercy was not extended to him for a year. Then she gave it in full measure. She married him.

Ontario's Generosity.

Sir John Hendrie has received a letter from Sir Robert Hudson, chairman of the Finance Committee of the British Red Cross Society, acknowledging a cheque for £47,225 12s 6d, a further contribution from "Our Day," 1916. This brings the amount from Ontario up to the present, to the immense sum of £347,225 12s 6d, thus outdistancing every other part of the British Empire, he states. His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught, as Prior to the Order of St. John, and Lord Lansdowne, as chairman of the council of the British Red Cross, asked that in every way possible their thanks be made known to all who so generously contributed to bring about this magnificent result.

Doctors Stand Amazed at Power of Bon-Opto to Make Weak Eyes Strong---According to Dr. Lewis

Guaranteed to Strengthen Eyesight 50% In One Week's Time in Many Instances

A Free Prescription You Can Have Filled and Use at Home

Philadelphia, Pa. Victims of eye strain and other eye weaknesses, and those who wear glasses, will be glad to know that according to Dr. Lewis there is real hope and help for them. Many whose eyes were failing say they have had their eyes restored by this remarkable prescription and many who once wore glasses say they have thrown them away. One man says, after using it: "I was almost blind. Could not see to read at all. Now I can read everything without my glasses and my eyes do not hurt any more. At night they would pain dreadfully. Now they feel fine all the time. It was like a miracle to me." A lady who used it says: "The atmosphere seemed hazy with or without glasses, but after using this prescription for 15 days everything seems clear. I can read even fine print without glasses." Another who used it says: "I was bothered with eye strain caused by overworked, tired eyes which induced fierce headaches. I have worn glasses for several years both for distance and work, and without them I could not read my own name on an envelope or the typewriting on the machine before me. I can do both now and have discarded my long distance glasses altogether. I can count the fluttering leaves on the trees across the street now, which for several years have looked like a dim green blur to me. I cannot express my joy at what it has done for me."

It is believed that thousands who wear glasses can now discard them in a reasonable time and multitudes more will be able to strengthen their eyes so as to be spared the trouble and expense of ever getting glasses. Eye troubles of many descriptions may be wonderfully benefited by the use of this prescription. Go to any active drug store and get a bottle of Bon-Opto tablets. Drop one Bon-Opto tablet in a fourth of a glass of water and let it dissolve. With this liquid bathe the eyes two to four times daily. You should notice your eyes clear up perceptibly right from the start and inflammation and redness will quickly disappear. If your eyes bother you even a little it is your duty to take steps to save them now before it is too late. Many hopelessly blind might have saved their sight if they had cared for their eyes in time.

Note: Another prominent Physician to whom the above article was submitted, said: "Yes, the Bon-Opto prescription is truly a wonderful eye remedy. Its constituent ingredients are well known to eminent eye specialists and widely prescribed by them. I have used it very successfully in my own practice on patients whose eyes were strained through overwork or misfit glasses. I can highly recommend it in case of weak, watery, aching, smarting, itching, burning eyes, red lids, blurred vision or for eyes inflamed from exposure to smoke, sun, dust or wind. It is one of the very few preparations I feel should be kept on hand for regular use in almost every family." Bon-Opto, referred to above, is not a patent medicine or a secret remedy. It is an ethical preparation, the formula being printed on the package. The manufacturers guarantee it to strengthen eyesight 50 per cent in one week's time in many instances or refund the money. It can be obtained from any good druggist and is sold in this city by J. S. McKeown, W. H. Lattimer,

The Recovery of Our Lost Fraternity

(By Rev. GEORGE HANSON, M.A., D.D.)

Rev. George Hanson, M.A., D.D.

"THE things which divide us are temporal; the things which unite us are eternal."

These great words of Professor Rendel Harris, of England, put the question of Church Union on its proper basis, forbid all rigid theories of ecclesiastical authority or privilege, and justify every attempt at closer fellowship between churches holding the essential truths of the everlasting Gospel. What shall our attitude be? Shall we magnify our differences and minimise our agreements? Or shall we magnify our agreements and minimise our differences? The root of all sectarianism, and the foe of Christian brotherhood, is the exaltation of non-essentials to the rank of essentials. Every man should ask himself solemnly the question "Why am I opposing organic union, why do I favor ecclesiastical divisions? Is it in the interests of the fundamental verities of the Gospel or is it chiefly denominational pride that animates me?" It seems to me that, in the controversy, all that is best and most progressive in evangelical Christendom is on the side of those who are desirous of seeing the Churches renouncing their exclusiveness and uniting with one another in the closest practicable relationship. The best scholarship of the day in the Protestant Churches favors their desire, for it denies any church any unassailable right or even any superior title to authority over every other church. Of course there are certain special pleaders in some churches who hold out against this conclusion, but their opinions do not weigh with educated men, and are bound, soon or syne, to be discarded. It was the evidence of historical research that compelled Dean Hensley Henson, as he tells us in his volume of cathedral sermons, entitled "Godly Union and Concord," to renounce his once cherished High Church notions and admit the validity of the titles of non-episcopal ministries. He frankly asserts that prelacy has no right to be regarded as the only, or even as the chief, channel of God's grace to mankind. What is true of diocesan Episcopacy is equally true of Presbyterianism and of Congregationalism, or of any modification of these three distinctive types of polity. None of them is of "divine rights." Further, no reasonable man will claim for his church, as it exists, all the excellences of scholarship or of organization, or would like to see perpetuated, in its present form, to the end of time. I certainly hope and expect to see a vast change in all the churches. Only a singularly fanatical prelatist can believe that all Christendom will acknowledge one day the authority of the See of Canterbury; none but a hopelessly prejudiced Presbyterian would think that the Westminster Confession of Faith will be installed some time permanently as the final and unalterable expression of the faith of the universal church; no Congregationalist would, in his wildest imaginings, dream that all the Christian world will adopt at last his separatist views of church organization; no Baptist, however fervent, can really suppose that the day will come when all believers shall be devotedly and uncompromisingly immersionist. Every church under heaven must be changed, and greatly changed, if it is to live. The only question is, what shall the change be, and when is it to take place. The church that sits down under fixed and rigid conditions is doomed. The facts of experience, too, rebuke our sectarian prejudices.

The loudest call to us to consider organic union as an urgent duty comes to us from the intervening prayer of our Lord, recorded in St. John xvii. Twice over in almost identical language he prays on behalf of "all who should believe in Him" thus: "That they all may be one, even as Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee, that they may be in Us; that the world may believe that Thou didst send Me." Plainly the union of believers was a condition of His Church's successful appeal to mankind on His behalf; and equally plainly all avoidable divisions are a hindrance to the progress of the Gospel. A divided church cannot rule the world. Those who oppose organic union assure us that our Lord's words do not require more than unity of spirit, oneness of faith and hope and love, and that this inner unity of heart is quite compatible with the greatest variety of organization. But surely our Saviour's language demands the closest possible union, a union as intimate and organic as that which bound the Persons of the Trinity together as one. At any rate, if it does not demand it, it certainly does not forbid it. Those who oppose organic union ought to be very sure that, in advocating spiritual unity as against visible co-operate union, co-operation as against the unification of now separated bodies, they are doing justice to the desire of our Lord's heart and are not guilty of toning down His strong words to suit their own prepossessions. If it is through the exigencies of controversy that they are whittling down the Lord's prayer, they are incurring a responsibility that I should not care to share.

The opponents of organic union are not consistent with themselves. They pronounce themselves in favor of federation and co-operation with other evangelical bodies. But if these bodies, with whom they would allow such federation and co-operation, are worthy of so much confidence and regard, why should they not be counted deserving of still greater trust and affection? Why do the advocates of unity and co-operation balk at organic union? Whatever justifies unity and co-operation justifies organic union. If co-operation is desirable, it can only be because those with whom we are willing to co-operate hold the essential truths that we hold. If they were radically unsound or even seriously defective in their faith, co-operation with them would be wrong. Co-operation with them is right only if we regard them as fundamentally right, essentially one with ourselves. Willingness to co-operate with them is a proof of our confidence in their evangelical soundness.

Can we trust and esteem them enough to walk, talk, work, and fraternize with them, and not be ready and glad to go further? Whatever justifies the fellowship of co-operation justifies the closer relationship of organic union.

Mad Devils

What Became of a Cargo of Cocoanuts

By CHARLES EDWARD BANGS

As the Ylang rounded the headland I noticed off to the starboard two hulks, red with rust, awash under the branches of the big trees that grew in a dense forest far out into the shallow water of the lagoon. One steamer was wedged in between great boles, the tops of its masts showing oddly above the overhanging greenery. The other lay well over upon its side, like some portly marine monster that had taken shelter there from the tropic sun. How any person not a positive idiot could have blundered into such a place passed my comprehension.

The repeated blasts from our whistle had roused the owner of the cocoanut grove that was to furnish us our cargo, and presently the white drill suit and pith helmet which we always associate with the white man in the tropics appeared in the stern of a boat which glided out from under the trees. Before our gangplank was fairly lowered a tall, rawboned young Englishman, distinctly of the "gentleman" type, came over the ship's side and introduced himself as Shackleford, the man with whom I had contracted to carry a load of nuts to Liverpool.

"No, I haven't a black on the place," he explained in response to an inquiry of mine as we took our places in his flat bottomed boat, manned wholly by Chinamen, and started for his bungalow, whose corrugated roof blazed in the intense sunlight through a rift in the cocoanut grove. "It costs three times as much for Chinese labor, but for some reason I can't get a nigger to come near the plantation."

"That's strange."

"Wait till tonight and you'll hear as horrible a row as you ever heard. Then you'll know. The mountains back there are alive with apes. That is why I put up a twenty-five foot high barbed wire fence."

That evening we were sitting in the bungalow, sipping whisky and soda and swapping yarns about Penang, when a volley of barks, sharp as the rattle of musketry, made me spring up in alarm.

Shackleford put down his glass and haw-hawed. "It's only those blasted apes," he explained when he had managed to control his mirth. "Take down that rifle and come along."

Armed with the rifles, we made our way to the edge of the grove nearest the spur of the mountain. As we approached a chorus of snarls greeted us, and in the clear starlight I saw a host of infuriated apes hurling themselves against the barbed wire fence.

For a time the brutes paid little heed to our fusillade. Then, under the leadership of a huge gray ape, they broke and made for cover.

The great grizzled brute was the last to retire, and at the edge of the jungle it turned and gibbered at us in a way that made my flesh creep. It seemed to voice the fathomless hatred of the whole jungle world for the usurper man.

The next morning on our way back to the steamer I asked Shackleford about the two wrecks.

"Oh, I fancy the fool captains could not steer straight," he replied lightly. "Longstreth—that's the chap I bought the grove from—said that both ships were loaded with cocoanuts. He would not talk much about it, though—too sour to talk about anything."

Later, to satisfy my curiosity, I rowed over and had a look at the hulks, and as I examined them I noted two facts that kept me speculating for days. Before either steamer went into its present position the boats had been hastily slashed away, and there wasn't a single cocoanut to be seen in either hold.

That night I spent ashore again with Shackleford, and when I returned to my ship the following morning I found it in an ominous state of excitement. Usually the Chinese portion of it occupied the forward part of the main deck, eating and sleeping in the corners among the steam winches. The lascars had always claimed the forecastle head, where their tall, gaunt bodies and swathed heads seemed an inseparable part of the ship. Now, however, race and caste were forgotten, and turbans and pigtails mingled promiscuously in groups that whispered eagerly in a dozen corners.

At sight of me they quickly dispersed, but with those two rusty hulks looming up yonder as object lessons I took prompt measures to forestall a possible mutiny. Summoning the first mate, a half caste from Calcutta that I had picked up in Penang when MacPherson died of cholera, I locked the door behind him, left my revolver on the table, where he could meditate upon its use as we talked, and then asked him a few pointed questions. He turned white under his inky skin, but soon pulled himself together and began to lie to me. I knew it by the way his eyelids flickered. The bay was too hot for even a Chinaman to live on; the lagoon was full of sharks; the typhoon season was coming on—these and a dozen other reasons for leaving at once slipped from his oily tongue and left me more puzzled than ever.

After that experience I spent no more nights ashore, but watched continually for the slightest hint of rebellion. Early the next morning when the cocoanuts began to arrive on the big bamboo rafts I noted with a grin of satisfaction that all hands set to work packing them into the hold with an alacrity which they had never before manifested in my service.

Taking on cargo occupied a week, and during that time I never left the ship's deck-farther than the cabin.

The following evening we put out to sea, the men working like demons to get away before night shut down, Shackleford laughing all the while at their eagerness to be rid of what he declared to be "the finest spot east of Suez." His Chinamen—I shall never forget that last glimpse of them—squatted upon the empty bamboo rafts, their cues wound about their unshaved heads, the sweat still streaming down their naked bodies to the flimsy cotton pantaloons corded about their waists, and viewed our departure out of their narrow eyes with features as impassive as those of a stone Buddha. What did they know about the two rusty hulks, the gray "thing" that haunted them, and what had they told my crew? I wondered. Worn out with a trying week, I turned in.

A shock hurled me from my berth, and as I groped about in the darkness for the key of the door the sound of crashing timber and of branches trailing across the cabin window made me guess my surroundings. Springing on deck, I turned instinctively to the wheel, and there, bowed over it like an old man and clutching the spokes with hairy hands, was a huge gray ape—the very monster Shackleford and I had failed to bring down the night of the raid upon the cocoanut grove!

At sight of me it relinquished its hold upon the wheel and sprang at me, baring its teeth in sudden rage. Whipping out my pistol, I began to fire and back away and brought it down with a shot in its gaping mouth just as it was reaching out its horrible corded arms to seize me. As it collapsed with a gasping shudder at my very feet I sprang backward from sheer repulsion and in doing so fell into the lagoon through a hole in the railing that the thick branch of a tree had carried away.

Not till then did the full significance of what had transpired dawn upon me. Crew there was none, but apes from the surrounding trees and the two rusty hulks that had so puzzled me and that now lay on either side came swarming upon the steamer till they covered everything—winches, forecastle head, the empty davits, the spare anchors, the very rigging—with a gray, writhing mass that struggled and fought and screamed in a wild rush for the cocoanuts, which could easily be reached through the main hatch, left open to prevent overheating. Swimming round to the rudder, now completely out of water above the madly racing screw, I climbed up beyond the reach of sharks and listened to the appalling pandemonium till the last cocoanut must have been removed from the hold, when the brutes gradually dispersed through the forest.

Afraid to venture back on deck, at daylight I mounted a piece of the round house that had been swept overboard and made my way on the incoming tide up the channel which led to the plantation. On the edge of the grove I paused in incredulous wonder, and then the truth came home to me. Under a fierce attack of the apes the wire fence had at last given way, and the cocoanut grove was in ruins. Shackleford's bungalow I found in a state of pillage so complete that only the four upright posts remained, and the flimsy huts occupied by the Chinese laborers were scattered about as if struck by a typhoon.

Not far from the ruins I found Shackleford's beautifully stained meerschaum pipe trampled into the earth by a host of passing feet, and protruding from under a tattered cocoanut leaf was a Chinaman's cue, streaked with gray, but no Celestial at the severed end. Prepared for the worst, I was hastening down the newly beaten path toward the jungle when a groan to my left attracted my attention, and, rushing over, I found Shackleford and his Chinamen neatly trapped under the barbed wire fence.

"You see," Shackleford explained when I had pried up the edge of the deadly netting, which they were unable to raise with their bare hands because of the inch long barbs, "we were poking the belly brutes off the fence with sharpened bamboos and having no end of fun when their weight doubled the whole thing over and shut us into as fine a little fort as a fellow could wish for. Ha, ha!"

Shackleford, followed by a score of bedraggled Chinamen, crawled out stiffly from his involuntary but lucky imprisonment and looked ruefully at his blood spattered clothes. "They ripped and tore at the netting like a lot of mad devils," he continued, "and the blood from their lacerated feet came through on us like a shower of warm rain, but none of us was hurt except Ah Cong over there. He was a bit careless and let his pigtail stick out through the netting. Lucky thing I had a knife, you sour old heathen!" turning to a grizzled Chinaman whose cue had been severed close to his head, "or that big ape that got hold of the end of it would have pulled it out by the roots." And Shackleford laughed uproariously as he reached for his pipe, examined the coloring with the eye of a connoisseur and then began to dig the dirt out of the bowl. "But I don't understand what made the brutes all quit and go tearing away toward the bay," he added thoughtfully as he opened his tobacco pouch.

For answer I led him down to the third derelict and showed him the empty hold.

The Furtive Look.

Here is something worth while for bachelors to consider.

A Boston woman says she can detect a bachelor as far as she can see him. She always knows a bachelor by his furtive look. The furtive look, she explains, is something akin to that of a hunted animal, always on the watch for snares and pitfalls. Of course this may apply only to Boston bachelors, but it would be well for all other single unfortunates to take a good look at themselves in the mirror and find that telltale look. If they do there is an easy way to efface it.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Why a Horse Rolls.

Horses are fond of rolling on the ground, and no animal more thoroughly shakes itself than they do. After a roll they give themselves a shake or two to remove anything adhering to the coat. The habit is of much service to horses living in open plains. On being turned loose at the end of a journey an Arab horse rolls in the sand, which acts as blotting paper, absorbing exudations from the body. A shake removes the sand, and the coat soon dries. Cavalrymen in hot climates sometimes put sand on their horses as the simplest and quickest way of drying them.

No Longer a Child.

"Is mamma's sweet little boy ready to have his bath now?"

"Oh, maw, put the soft pedal on that stuff, will you? When a fellow's six years old it's time to take him out of the kindergarten class. I'll take my splash when I've had my smoke."—Pittsburgh Times.

Necessary Things.

One of our rear admirals is quoted as saying, "The battleship can go to any part of the world if coal is provided."

"This does away with the old supposition that water was also necessary," interposed a bystander.

Silence Is Safety.

After forty years o' married life I've made up me mind it don't matter how often a man an' his wife disagrees as long as he don't let her know it.—Harper's Bazar.

HOW TO KEEP WELL

BY JOHN W. S. McCULLOUGH, M.D., D.P.H., CHIEF OFFICER OF THE PROVINCIAL BOARD OF HEALTH.

INFANT WELFARE.

Convulsions.

THESE ARE COMMONLY CAUSED by indigestion or indeed any acute illness. Rarely are they due to brain disease. An injection of soapsuds and a warm mustard bath made by adding one-half a cupful of mustard in a half-full bathtub with water not above 105 Deg. F. Test the water with your arm before you place the baby below. It is easy to burn a baby by having the water too warm. While this is being done get a doctor.

Colds and Contagious Diseases.

Acute colds are very contagious. Children with colds or sore throat should be kept away from other children. The disease may be diphtheria, scarlet fever, or measles. They are all dangerous.

Skin Eruptions, Rashes.

If the baby has any skin rash, get a doctor; and if the disease is pronounced to be contagious notify the health officer and submit to the health regulations. Don't be careless about letting your neighbor's children catch the disease from yours. Recollect that your child has probably contracted his illness from someone's carelessness.

Whooping Cough.

Whooping cough doesn't begin with the "whoop." It begins like any other cough, and after several days the characteristic whoop sound sticks like "rose" of a "glue" to the true condition. The contagion lasts about four weeks, or as long as the whoop. It is a dangerous disease in young children, and adds to the mortality when measles and it are put together. Besides it is a condition upon which tuberculosis is often grafted. Children with a cough should be kept away from other children. They should not go to school, or be taken on trains or into public places.

Diarrhoea.

If the baby has too frequent movements it is always safe to give a teaspoonful of castor oil and cut down the food supply. If the baby is taking the bottle cut off milk or dilute the mixture or give boiled water till the doctor comes. Diarrhoea is severe cut off all food. In older children give only water and fruit or dry toast. But delays are dangerous. Have the doctor's advice.

Constipation.

If the baby has not had a movement for 48 hours, give him a small enema of two or three ounces of warm soapsuds or a suppository of soap or glycerine. Milk of magnesia—one dessert spoonful at six months, should be given to assure a movement next day. Enemas and suppositories cannot be continued as a routine measure as they may irritate the rectum.

(1) Have a regular time for the movements. Stick to this rigidly.

(2) Give plenty of fluids. Boil the water to be certain of its purity, and give it to the baby freely. An infant after a few months should take one and one-half to two ounces of boiled water in the twenty-four hours, increasing to six to eight ounces by one year.

(3) Diet, orange juice and prune juice are useful in preventing constipation and good for the baby.

(4) Too little fat in the food (cream) tends to cause constipation.

(5) As the child gets older, coarser cereals and brown bread are useful.

(6) Encourage the use of vegetables, especially ones of coarse fibre.

(7) Massage the baby, up on the right, across the top, and down on the left.

Earache.

Children often have earache as the result of large tonsils and adenoids or after the chronic or acute cold. Earache is dangerous as it may develop into a running ear, deafness, or mastoid disease. Heat applied may give temporary relief, but it is a case for the doctor. The competent physician will, if necessary, puncture the ear-drum and relieve the trouble.

Eczema.

Eczema rashes are often due to bad digestion or improper food. No mother should try the cure of such a trouble. Have the doctor ferret out the cause and apply proper treatment.

The British deny that they took the rubber heels away from Bernstorff's party. That rubber yarn, it seems, was stretched.

Where the Pluck Lay

A Story of Old Virginia

By F. A. MITCHEL.

The romantic period in America is centered in old Virginia. Among the various elements of that colony were certain persons of rank who had been granted privileges by the British sovereign. There were younger sons of English families of ancient lineage who, having no fortune to start in the old world, had come to the new to find one. In those days every man wore a sword at his side, and when a father sent his son out into the world his principal instruction was that he should protect his honor with it to the last drop of his blood.

During the first half of the nineteenth century the aristocratic classes of Virginia were in their prime, though the war between the states which was to impoverish them was impending. Men had ceased to wear swords, the impulse to use them having somewhat abated. But the code duello was still considered the proper tribunal for gentlemen to settle their disputes.

One of the principal tobacco planters in Virginia at the opening of the nineteenth century was Major Rufus Hardesty, whose military title—a brevet—had been conferred upon him at the siege of Yorktown, where as a young subaltern he had distinguished himself. In those days the state was considered superior to the nation, and when Major Hardesty went abroad he registered his name at a London hotel as from Virginia.

The major's only child was a daughter, whom his loyalty to his state induced him to name Virginia. Miss Hardesty was a typical girl of her period. There was a disposition among southern girls to be more than ordinarily attentive as objects to be sought and contended for by their suitors, and Virginia especially objected to giving herself to any man who had not proved his prowess in his efforts to obtain her hand.

One reason for the pride in state sentiment in those days was that there was little passing from one state to another. Especially was this true of families between the north and the south. In that region in which Major Hardesty's plantation was situated there was not one resident from the north. Henry Brainard, who, having served seven years in the United States army at a Virginia post, had resigned to follow the occupation of most Virginia gentlemen—the raising of tobacco.

Brainard was thirty-five years of age when Virginia Hardesty was nineteen. He was a reserved man among men and somewhat an eccentric. He was also fashioned as a fine lock musket would be at the present day of rapid fire arms. What, indeed such a man to fall in love with a girl like Virginia Hardesty can only be accounted for on the theory that like loves unlike.

Virginia had known Brainard some time before she was able to interpret his treatment of her as being a special love. Brainard considered himself already too old for such a child, and this greatly interested his embarrassment toward her. When she made up her mind that his strange treatment of her meant love she was much amused and foreare much pleasure in torturing him. But Brainard was no fool and, seeing that the coquettis was playing with him as a cat would play with a mouse, ceased his visits to her father's plantation.

Virginia would have attempted to bring him back to tantalize him further had she not, at the time been absorbed in a new flame. Arthur Ringold, the son of a neighboring planter, returned from a sojourn in England, where he had been enrolled as a student at Oxford. He had acquired the tastes and manners of an English swell and by no means relished life on the primitive state of Virginia. He was somewhat consoled by returning to the police from Miss Hardesty's presence.

It was not long before she had so far blinded him to her faults as to secure a proposal from him. That is one for whom there was nothing in Virginia good enough should have made himself to her flattered her, and she was inclined to accept him; but, as has been said, she would accept no man who was not willing to take great risks for her.

Just how Virginia made it apparent to Ringold that he would have to fight for her does not appear. It is probable that she talked a great deal about fighting, and her admiration for brave men. At any rate, it was not long after his proposal to her that he was involved in a matter of a difficulty under the code. At the coffee house in Williamsburg where gentlemen were wont to meet for drink and smoke, but by no intention gambling, his disparagement of America in favor of England led to the resentment of one Thibedeaux, a man of French extraction. An altercation ensued, and Ringold challenged Thibedeaux. It may be that the latter drew the former into the affair professedly, for Thibedeaux was over half a dozen men who were ambitious for Miss Hardesty's favor. He had often met Ringold at the Hardesty manor house and had been made captain by Virginia of the fact that she preferred Ringold to himself.

Thibedeaux was a newcomer to Virginia and little was known of him, but in the challenge he had proved himself on than one who was present expected that he was a skilled shot and a practiced hand at the manner of duels and had casually hinted his opponent. This threw a chill of apprehension over the friends and was especially unpalatable to Ringold himself.

The reason was not long in reaching Virginia. She had heard of the altercation and was quite taken aback at what she considered solely the consequence of her own action. When she heard that Thibedeaux was an expert at arms she was terror stricken. The prospect of losing the desire of the affections of the man she was thinking of accepting for a husband was appalling. She sent for Ringold, but he was still abed and about admiring bravery and asked him to withdraw from the challenge.

Ringold told her that she had nothing to do with it and he could not withdraw honorably, being considered a poltroon and a coward. Nevertheless he showed by his manner that he would gladly withdraw, having no stomach for being sacrificed by an expert. Virginia offered to send Thibedeaux to accept an apology, but Ringold declined to receive it, feeling so would put him in a worse position than before.

Ringold endeavored to gain time, hoping that some arrangement might be made to let him out of the affair. He succeeded in having the meeting put off for twenty-four hours after the time originally appointed. Just after the fracas occurred Major Brainard strolled into the tavern, sat down at a table and called for a julep. Ringoldeaux and a couple of friends were at another table.

"Pardon me, monsieur," said Brainard to Thibedeaux. "You do not seem to remember me."

"I confess I do not," replied Thibedeaux.

"Let me refresh your memory. Twelve years ago I was on duty with the army at New Orleans. At that time you purposely insulted me. I challenged you. We met in a wood near the city where each effaire was fought. You fired before the signal and left me bleeding on the ground, hastening away, excusing yourself by saying that you were anxious to avoid the police."

"And you say I fired before the signal you lie!"

"To give a gentleman the lie calls for satisfaction, but as I shall have a better prepared."

"Tomorrow morning I have another affair on hand, after which I will accommodate you."

"In that case you are the challenger. I dare say your adversary can be induced to give me first place."

Thibedeaux was not very well object to this, and a messenger was dispatched to Ringold to tell him that he would step aside for another. Ringold, thinking that he might appear brave without risking his life, declined, whereupon Brainard called upon him and represented to him that, having been challenged by Thibedeaux, Thibedeaux had a right to withdraw the challenge after another gentleman's letter. Ringold, who was really much relieved at the prospect of not having to fight, agreed to this. Thibedeaux would be prevented from fighting him by being killed himself, and Virginia be relieved to make appear a reluctant consent.

Brainard having thus paved the way for himself, a meeting was arranged between him and Thibedeaux. The latter had not either acquiesced in the new arrangement, for he had hoped to put Ringold in his power position without running any great risk. He knew a coward, or thought he knew, and fancied that he could show the white feather at the last moment. If not, Thibedeaux counted on meeting a gentleman without fear, expecting from his own reputation.

Ringold could not conceal that Brainard had some reason for his action, and that reason was to step in between and die. He therefore wrote a note to Virginia Hardesty informing her that his life was in imminent danger, he had given place to another. If Thibedeaux was not too badly hit in his first encounter Ringold would have an affair it was finished.

The duel took place the appointed hour the next morning Brainard was on the ground. Ringold was there, but Thibedeaux did not appear. After waiting some time for him the others withdrew.

That was the last that was seen of Thibedeaux in Virginia. Nor was he ever heard of by the Virginia Hardesty circle of his I. O. U.'s tried hard on his back.

No engagement between Virginia Hardesty and Arthur Ringold took place. Soon after the latter's departure Prince Major Brainard received an anonymous bouquet of flowers. They could not be sent directly to Virginia at a hunt. This was the beginning of a different treatment of her of her conduct suiter. At the hunt ball at the end of the season their engagement was announced.

When the whole story came out it created quite a sensation. Ringold acquired his former enemy as soon as he appeared in Williamsburg. Then Major Brainard, who had fired his shots fired in the garret of his house in the country, was looked upon as a hero. No one knew that the ex-soldier was making an aspect of himself with the pistol in order to secure the former antagonist. The matter was precipitated by his learning that Thibedeaux was about to make a victim of the man he had reason to believe was to win Virginia Hardesty.

Brainard became a prominent citizen of Williamsburg, though when the war with Mexico came on he was somewhat advanced in age to be commander of a regiment.

WINCARNIS gives New Health to all who are

Weak, Anaemic, Nervous, Run-down

THE wonderful results of Wincarnis in cases of Weakness, Anaemia, Nerve Troubles and that Run-down condition, are due to the four-fold power that Wincarnis possesses. Wincarnis is not merely a tonic—it is a Tonic, a Restorative, a Blood-maker, and Nerve Food—all in one. Therefore, when you take Wincarnis you derive your strength—and at the same time new rich blood—and at the same time new nerve force—and at the same time new vitality. Thus the whole system is invigorated, and re-vitalised, and becomes surcharged with a feeling of new life. That is why over 10,000 Doctors recommend Wincarnis.

A very important feature about Wincarnis is that you derive a definite amount of good from even the first dose. And every additional dose gives you more strength than you had before—more rich red blood than you had before—stronger nerves than you had before—more vitality than you had before. Thus Wincarnis is not a tonic but a positive necessity to all who are WEAK, ANAEMIC, NERVOUS, RUN-DOWN, or suffering in any way as all enfeebled by Old Age—and to Invalids striving to regain strength after an exhausting illness. Remember that the harsh Wincarnis cruises is lasting health—not a mere "rush-in-the-veins"—just a temporary Feli-city—as in the vitality—but real "internal health" that makes you feel it is good to be alive. Take advantage of the new and special health Wincarnis offers you. Don't suffer needlessly. Remember that Wincarnis has an unrivalled reputation of 30 years' standing. Don't accept substitutes.

Lavergne is Ravening Against Militia Act

Violent and Revolutionary Outburst in the City of Quebec—Speaker Fascinated Audience

Exceedingly violent and revolutionary was the speech made this week at Quebec, by Armand Lavergne, at the anti-conscription meeting held in the St. Pierre Hall, St. Sauveur, which was attended by three thousand people.

Lavergne laughed at the so-called legend of England fighting for liberty and civilization, and of the cruelty and barbarism of the Boches, and he quoted a certain Mr. Wallace, who, he said, was a correspondent of the London Times, as saying that England was not at all fighting for the protection of Belgium.

"Rubbish," he said. "England is fighting for the interest of its commerce. Canada has nothing to do with this war. And if you call that treason, I shall betray all the Englands of the world before betraying Canada. Let the Englishmen hang me after this; it will not be their first crime.

"The danger of conscription that is now appearing, is the natural consequence of our conduct when we contributed to kill the liberty of a nation which had done nothing to us."

Denounces Everybody

Lavergne denounced England for its conduct towards Irishmen. He denounced Russia for having tortured Poland. He denounced Italy for having spoliated the Holy See. He denounced the Allies for violating the neutrality of Greece, while they are supposed to protect against the neutrality of Belgium.

He particularly denounced what he called the "Ontario Boches" for banishing the French language in the schools while they allow German to be taught there. He denounced the Liberal party for having allowed the Borden Government to remain in office after its regular term of office, and he denounced the Conservatives for trying to enforce recruiting by closing factories such as the Ross Rifle. He denounced practically everybody and everything.

He maintained that French-Canadians had no obligation whatever towards France, but he would be ready to go ahead if Canada was to go back to France, to a people that understood liberty.

Lavergne was followed by Lucien Cannon, who preceded himself against conscription and against the prolongation of term for the Borden Government. It was time to say that Canada had done enough.

Alderman Eugene Dussault and Arthur Pasel also spoke against conscription. A resolution condemning conscription was unanimously carried.

If this young gentleman were in Germany he would have been shot long ago. He is seeking notoriety, and sadly disappointed at not being arrested. Let him rave.

In Melting Scenes

(Toronto Globe)

A chapter in the lives of some coming Canadians closed last night. It was unessential enough as things go, the closing of the night classes for foreigners at the Hester Hall, Elizabeth Street. Yet for about a hundred people, ranging in age from fourteen to fifty-three, ranging in map measurement from Canada in Spain to near the Ural Mountains in Russia, in climate from the icy Northern Ontario winter of Finland to the balmy fruit belt airs of southern Italy, and in intelligence nearly as widely, a step toward the acquisition of fuller citizenship is not a thing to be despised. For the school does more than teach these boys and girls and men and women the English language. It inculcates a knowledge of Canada and the vaster Empire to which they learn the allegiance of love and reverence for its institutions. In one class last evening The Globe reporter heard "God Save the King" sung by a gathering of eleven, which numbered nine nationalities. The Chinese laundryman rubbed educational shoulders with a Russian in the khaki of the Queen's Own Regiment, a man who had enlisted in the 34th Battalion, but had failed to go overseas because he could not understand the military orders. Now he is making that up rapidly, in a double sense learning to serve.

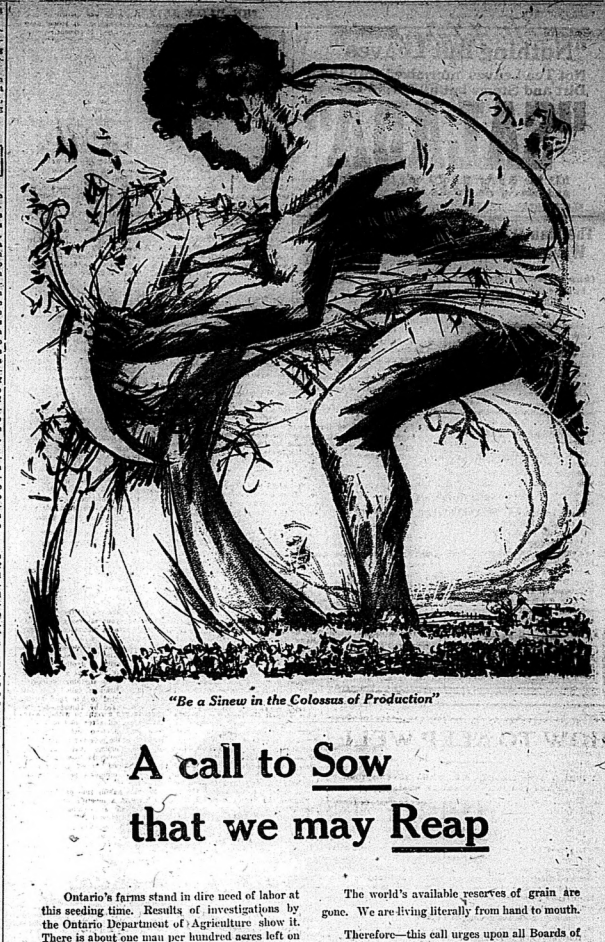
Girl From Warsaw's War Scenes

But more interesting than all was a young and engaging Polish girl of Jewish faith, who had only reached Toronto last Christmas from War saw. Their home had been pierced by shrapnel as the Germans bombarded the place for two days before their rather empty triumphal entry. She already speaks good English for the time, and could say that she was glad to be in safety.

A map of Canada in outline on a wall showed the ports and main railways. Pupils are encouraged to ask about the route by which they came in. On the of the blackboards last evening, the class we informed, down to the last minute, so to speak, that "this is the season called spring."

Greeting New Springtide

The instruction would have delighted Mr. Squeers. His classic case of teaching the spelling of "W-i-n-d-e-r, window, now to an class "en," was improved upon, for at this point came the interruption to "spell "spring." "It's the time when every body (two words) is happy and people make maple syrup, from the maple tree," which, save the mark, was called "the emblem of Ontario."



Another class was busy finding out the intricacies of the "tongue that Shakespeare spake," if not the morals Milton held with such little peaky pesterings as "all" and "awl," and the psychology which underlies the differentiation between "bail" and "bawl." Then, too, there was the verb "to bear," and the adjective "bare" and one thought of poor Dan Leno with his horse doctor cure at the North Pole for the "little Polar bear who had caught cold while running after it with bare feet" Thanks to Regulation 17, even these things can be mastered in a few weeks.

Sons of the Pupils

The year before tne war there had been 750 pupils in these classes. This year the number is scarcely one hundred, owing to the drop in immigration. Attendance is fair. The amount of overtime worked in the garment factories, good times for trade was bad for school, and made it irregular. Many of the pupils go straight from work without supper. In one class there are two girls whose mother sleeps along with our noble Anglo-Saxon two grades lower down.

The best "kid" in one class was a patriarch with a venerable length of Abrahamic whiskers. Tonight those who have made eighty per cent. of the attendance, about one-half the number this year, will go to the school for their money back. They deposit a dollar at the beginning of the session. Mr. W. H. Harwood is in charge of the school and he makes a great feature of interesting the new-comers in Canadian story from every angle. Trustee C. A. B. Brown also paid a visit of interested inspection. For the next six months these foreigners have to depend on their own effort for learning, and it is possibly the only weak spot in an excellent thing.

No less than forty thousand applied for bond in the War Loan for $150,000,000, and over $320,000,000 was tendered for. This is the best possible evidence of the wealth in Canada, and the confidence the people have in the future of the country.

"Be a Sinew in the Colossus of Production"

A call to Sow that we may Reap

Ontario's farms stand in dire need of labor at this seeding time. Results of investigations by the Ontario Department of Agriculture show it. There is about one man per hundred acres left on the farms—not enough! Unless labor is forthcoming in thousands—men and boys—the farmer cannot now sow even a normal harvest, much less the increase the Motherland expects Ontario to produce.

This labor must come from the cities, towns and villages.

The world's available reserves of grain are gone. We are living literally from hand to mouth.

Therefore—this call urges upon all Boards of Trade, Chambers of Commerce, Patriotic Societies, urban and rural Mayors, Aldermen, Councillors, Reeves, retired farmers and others to hold local meetings at the earliest possible moment and determine upon the best ways and means of meeting this great emergency in their locality.

The Central Committee is at your service and will co-operate with suggestions, etc.

England To Take Liquor Traffic

LONDON, March 29—It is reported on reliable authority that a committee appointed a few weeks ago to investigate the question of the State purchase of the liquor traffic has decided in favor of the project and the Government will soon take over the entire trade.

There is no indication that the Government intends to enforce unfair terms or take any mandatory action. It will simply put the matter on a basis of war necessity for the greatest good of the brewing and distilling interests as well as the Government.

Owing to the grain shortage the brewing output has been cut down already from 35,000,000 barrels to 10,000,000. The brewers admit the trade could be carried on under State control more efficiently and economically than under the present system of diversified competing interests. With State control the burden on the railroads would be relieved, each company sharing the expenses of the others and each district being supplied from the nearest brewery.

Tremendous pressure is being brought to bear on the Government to abolish the old system of public houses which are used only for drinking, and remodel them into ideal social centres after the French plan where sociability and refreshments would have greater importance than satisfying the craving for stimulants.

Von Bethmann-Hollweg is to deliver two speeches tomorrow. He will use notes to set down upon a scrap of paper,

FAMILY SERVANT SIXTY-FIVE YEARS

Late Mary Noonan Carried Hon. C. J. Doherty to Font

MONTREAL, March 29—The funeral service was held yesterday morning in St. Patrick's Church of Miss Mary Noonan, who had been for sixty-five years a confidential servant, first in the family of the late Mr. Justice Marcus Doherty, and latterly with his daughter, Miss Noonan, who was a native of Montreal, died at the advanced age of 80 years. Miss Noonan was living with the Doherty family when the present Minister of Justice was born, and she not only carried the future statesman to the baptismal font, but also most of his children. Miss Noonan had the confidence of the family, which she had so faithfully served from the age of fifteen years, and upon learning of her death when in New York, Hon. C. J. Doherty returned at once to the city in order to attend the funeral.

HUNS ASK RUSSIA FOR SEPARATE PEACE

LONDON, March 30—Special—A cable to The Morning Post from Copenhagen says:—

Representatives of German and Russian Socialist organizations are holding a conference here. It is said that the German members have intimated the Russians are terms for a separate peace. The proposal will be made fully known by Socialist headquarters in Petrograd.

The Man Who Wheedled Bankers

Character Sketch of Man Chosen by Lloyd George to Raise Five Billions in England

(London Correspondent in New York Sun.)

If you wanted to borrow a dollar you wouldn't pick out the bashfullest friend to do the job for you would you? That's just the difference between you and the British Prime Minister.

Lloyd George wanted to borrow all he could get, so he picked out the most diffident, most unassuming man in England's public life to turn the trick. Next time you try to borrow a dollar—

Well, anyhow; America, meet Mr. Andrew Bonar Law, Chancellor of the Exchequer of Great Britain. (You'll have to do most of the talking at first, for he's a bit shy. But you'll like him.)

There's a Scotch grin tucked behind that ragged and dropping moustache, and a Scotch chuckle somewhere in that long, lean waist. He's really glad he's alive—in a reserved sort of way, to be sure—and he'll be interested in anything you have to say, provided your facts are on straight. Don't waste them up when you're talking to Mr. Law. He is too courteous to give you away, but he'll put down a mark against you for future reference.

Strong on Figures

Supposing you were a member of Parliament, he'd even waive courtesy if you should twist your facts. He'd reach into one of his pistol pockets and shoot you full of figures.

The thrillingest moments of the present Parliament have been occasioned by these deadly executions of Mr. Law's. Candid about most things, he's just a trifle tricky at times. In the midst of an argument designed to decimate the opposition, he will casually remark:

"In this respect I agree with the honorable and learned gentleman from Blankshire."

Whereupon up jumps the honorable and learned gentleman from Blankshire and hotly denies that he was ever in accord with the sentiments of the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Into one of his nine pockets reached Mr. Law. Out comes a clipping, dated some months or years ago, quoting the angry gentleman just as represented. Then quietly passing along, presently he concludes a statement with:

"...As the honorable and learned gentleman from Somoothershire has so well said."

"When did I ever say anything like that?" demanded the indignant member.

Mr. Law dives into another pocket and comes up with the proof.

It's a fascinating game—for the innocent bystanders. Fast as they protest Mr. Law forks out the evidence, and while he seems always to dig into a different pocket it's never the wrong one.

Long Distance Memory

That's part of his long distance memory. Bonar Law never forgets.

The effect of this attribute has been to scare the Opposition and give Bonar Law a confidence that makes his diffidence merely a mask. Nobody is really more sure of himself than Bonar Law. Take that little matter of raising $5,000,000,000.

Humbly, as befitting a mere Cabinet member, he went to the inner circle of British finance. He asks the great money experts how it should be done. Together they worked out a scheme whereby the proposed victory war loan could be floated at 6 per cent. He took the scheme back to the Treasury and studied it. Then he decided there was only one change of importance and he could suggest.

He made the interest 5 per cent instead of 6.

"Can't be done," protested the inner circle of finance, rather fancying that would be the end of it.

"Well, we'll try it," modestly observed the Chancellor.

All the world, including Germany, now knows how well it was done. The change of 1 per cent. saved Britain $50,000,000 a year interest.

Bonar Law told your correspondent why he was confident he could raise a great loan at 5 per cent.

May Be New Premier

But first America ought to know more about the man, for two reasons. One is that he may be next to Lloyd George in English politics should give the old Conservative party control Bonar Law would be the logical choice for Prime Minister. The other is that there is a big protective tariff fight coming in Great Britain, one that will necessarily affect America. And Mr. Law is the unquestioned leader of the tariff reform forces. Tariff reform, by the way, means over here exactly the opposite it does in the United States. Bonar Law is a protectionist.

Born in New Brunswick, Canada, in 1858, son of a minister, he removed to Glasgow when 12 years old, entered the commercial section of the Glasgow High School, and has since devoted himself largely to the commercial side of life. By the time he was 42 he had made enough money to quit the iron business and give his time to politics. Until then the only office he had held was the presidency of the Glasgow Chess Club.

Surprised Parliament

On a platform of Bonar Law and order he was elected to Parliament. Nobody paid any attention to him until one day the debate involved some tariff question. Up he rose and began to offer facts, figures and deductions. The effect was tremendous. Parliamentary correspondents tried to describe it, but Oliver Goldsmith had beaten them to it many years before, thus:

"......and still the wonder grew
That one small head could carry all he knew."

His career was mapped out from that time on. Inevitably he later became leader of the Conservatives, and as such, he had many a lively clash with Lloyd George.

But when Lloyd George wanted a man in his Cabinet who could borrow money in $5,000,000,000 lots and at bargain rates he made the Leader of the Opposition Chancellor of the Exchequer.

More Potatoes Less Roses Is Cry Of Paris

"City Farms" With Intensive Culture of Soil, is the Popular Conservation Movement

(By Leonora Raines.)

The "city farm" movement is very popular in Paris. There are numerous committees agitating that vegetable patches take the place of all flower gardens. Potato is king, and carrot is prince, and the rose and lily will have to make a strategic retirement from view until the end of the war.

Crowds turn out for lessons in practical gardening. The children are as interested as their elders. The determination is that not one scrap of available ground in the vicinity of Paris shall go uncultivated. Conservation is the order of the day.

In Eure, Belgian refugees have been working wonders with hitherto uncultivated land. They have given French farmers valuable lessons. An American, who, for a long time, has raised ducks for the market at Giverney, has also been giving the benefit of his experience to the people in that part of France, with the result that poultry raising there has increased considerably. Vegetables grown by the Belgian colony command good prices in the market.

Exit The Washerwoman

Where have all the washerwomen of Paris gone? One seeks for them in vain. Occasionally the energetic seeker hears of one in the country, but when approached the washerwoman may hold the clothes week after week while waiting to get cost that has been promised her. This naturally makes it practically impossible for her to remain at this line of work. Most of the big power laundries have been obliged to close since the coal shortage became felt.

Newspapers are advertising pelloid collars, cuffs, unwashable laundry, &c. The paper napkin has replaced the linen one in many households. The most fashionable circles now use nothing else. Not only is it a case of necessity, but the linen article is saved from the washboard and things washerwomen anoint clothes with. Linen and cotton materials have been so high the past year that no one thinks of buying who can delay doing so. As usual in February the big department stores had their white goods sale, but there was only a small stock, and goods were only 5 per cent. lower than at any other time. Perhaps the stores were not really anxious to get rid of white goods, knowing that during the war it would be difficult to replace everything sold.

Old Bread Campaign Unsuccessful

The law enforcing bakers to deliver only twenty-four hour old bread to customers has proved that what was intended as a flour saving means may be a failure. The Government probably believed that stale bread, not being so tasty as fresh, would cause loaf to be consumed on a whole. The contrary was the result, for people ate more of the crust and scorned the interior of the loaf. Had the stale bread campaign proved a success the bread ticket might have been avoided; but as the scheme did not map out, the card is inevitable. It will arrive with April days. Herriot, the Minister of Ravitaillement, does not expect to increase the price of bread. On the contrary he hopes to sell flour cheaper to the baker, and in that case the price of bread to the public will remain practically the same.

The two pounds of sugar a month allowed each person is generous, and there will be no want in that line. People who had money and could afford to store up have for months been buying sugar, first from this grocer, then from that, and now the public will be assured that there will be no monopoly. As soon as it was hinted certain edibles were about to run short, there persons would begin to lay in a supply from there would be a panic among store keepers, and regular customers could not be served. The Government keeps a weigh on all store keepers None of them dares sell at an advanced rate without order from the wholesale house.

ROUSED HIS IRE ..

The failure of the Detroit Club to turn over Catcher McKee to the Leafs, has aroused the ire of President McCaffery. He has confidently counted upon getting the good backstop from the Tigers and the news that the scrap had been sent to the San Francisco Club came as a great surprise. All negotiations for the release of McKee had practically been made with President Navin, but evidently Manager Jennings had not been taken into the confidence of the club owner. McKee was a great favorite with Toronto fans, not only on account of his ability as a player, but because of his genial personality, and when he was recalled last season along with Shocker, there was much grumbling in local circles. The report of a few days ago that he was likely to return, consequently was received with much joy and President McCaffery was congratulated on all sides. But the announcement apparently was somewhat premature. The Leafs are badly off for catchers. Williams, a veteran who has seen his best days, while Keilly has been more or less a disappointment. Hayden, on his showing last year, will hardly do in this company. There is a possibility that Kocher will be secured from the Giants. He always performed well and no mistake would be made if he was brought back.

WANTED A TASTEE

A small boy, after examining the contents of the window of a Glasgow sweet-shop went inside and inquired:

"How many o' these big sugar-balls dae ye gie for a ha'penny?"

On being told that they were a penny each, he appeared very disconsolate, and was turning to the door, when suddenly an idea struck him, and, returning to the counter, he asked this dim:

"Hoo lang will ye let me keep ane in my mouth for a ha'penny?"

Just to keep their hand in, the Allies seized six more villages on the west front yesterday. There is no stopping that Nivelle-Haig combination.

Lord Robert Cecil says the war will be decided in actual fighting rather than by food blockades. Then all is lost for Germany whose submarines were looked upon—by her —as the only salvation.
